"The maid you saw in the door. I feel rather sorry for her—she'd have enjoyed this so immensely. She's a hero-worshipper, and steeped in the traditions of Sherlock Holmes. Perhaps it's just as well she didn't stay to be disappointed. She rather fancies me as a sleuth.

"No power on earth could persuade her that I'm not, of course. Besides, she has a moth-and-star sort of devotion to Ellsworth. It is quite true that I thought my visit here might be of benefit to him. She relished the notion of the great investigator saving her master from unjust suspicion. In fact, she fairly gloated over the whole performance, and her own connection with it. Well, it looks as if everybody's hopes—yours and mine and Ethel's—are pretty well blighted. The net result of all this is nothing at all."

As he spoke, Dr. Cavanaugh stopped, gathered the heap of papers into an armload and thrust them back into the desk.

From the chair where Peter straddled came the sound of a low whistled tune, a lugubrious, wailing minor.

"By jove!" he murmured; and again "By jove—I wonder now!"

He had been staring straight before him with his chin on his folded arms, his eyes fixed in vacancy. But suddenly he realized what he had been looking at, all along.

With a bound that tipped the chair over behind him, he sprang to the telephone table and seized the directory. For fifteen minutes he had been gazing absently at a narrow projection which marred the smooth line at the edge of the pages along the top; and then, in a flash, that little projection had taken on meaning. He fluttered the pages in fingers that trembled, and drew out a letter. Then, with the single sheet half removed from the jagged tear by which the envelope had been opened, he paused.

It might be anything—it might be nothing. But the doctor had opened the window to him. Whatever it was, it belonged to the doctor.

"Here," he said in a rather faint voice, holding out the fluttering slip of paper to Dr. Cavanaugh, who had calmly righted the chair behind him. "What do you make of this?"

High Tension

Grandpa was having his after-lunch sleep in the armchair, and emitting sounds that might easily have come from a cross-cut saw. As father entered the room, he saw little Billy twisting one of grandpa's waistcoat buttons.

"What are you doing?" he whispered. "You mustn't disturb grandpa, Billy."

"I'm not disturbing him, daddy," explained the child. "I was just trying to tune him in on another station."

Uncle—"Jack, I would like to give you a book that you will really like. What can I give you?"

Modern Nephew—"A cheque book."

Warning

Never hunt for beauty,
Though you rise at dawn,
'Ere you lace your walking boots,
Beauty will be gone.

Sit at home and sew
And sing and scrub the floor;
You will hear shy beauty
Fumbling at your door.

Pay her no attention:
Set the table neat.
Pretend you never see her
Kneeling at your feet

Should you stop to watch her—
Let your baking go—
You will find her vanished,
Noiselessly as snow.

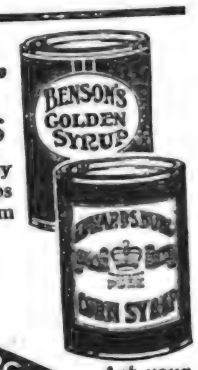
Brimstone was about to leave the hotel after having stayed there a week.

"By the way, sir," said the manager, displaying a pack of photographs, "would you like some views of the hotel to take away with?"



Brimstone sniffed haughtily.

"No, thank you," he replied. "I've got views of my own about this place which I'm taking away with me."

"SICK HEADACHE?"

IT is not necessary to give-in to headaches. It is just a bit old-fashioned! The modern woman who feels a headache coming on at any time, takes some tablets of Aspirin and heads it off.

Keep Aspirin handy, and keep your engagements. Headaches, systemic pains, come at inconvenient times. So do colds. You can end them before they're fairly started if you'll only remember this handy, harmless form of relief. Carry it in your purse and insure your comfort while shopping; your evening's pleasure at the theatre. Those little nagging aches that bring a case of "nerves" by day are ended in a jiffy. Pains that once kept people home are forgotten half an hour after taking Aspirin! You'll find these tablets always help. In every package of Aspirin tablets are proven directions which cover colds, headaches, sore throat, toothache, neuralgia, neuritis, sciatica, and even rheumatism.

The tablets stamped Bayer won't fail you, and can't harm you. They don't depress the heart. They don't upset the stomach. So take them whenever you need them, and take enough to end the pain. Aspirin is made in Canada.

October 18. Lesson III—Paul in Thessalonica and Berea—Acts 17: 1, 5-11; 1 Thessalonians 2: 7-12. Golden Text—Oper. thou mine eyes, that I may behold wondrous things out of thy law.—Psalm 119: 18.

ANALYSIS

I. A GOOD START, Acts 17: 1-4.
II. "BOLSHEVISTS!" Acts 17: 5-9.
III. THE OPEN MIND, Acts 17: 10-15.

INTRODUCTION — Leaving Philippi, the missionaries passed through Amphipolis and Apollonia (v. 1) and came to Thessalonica, the Salonika of today. It was the capital of the province and an important seaport. Today it is fast becoming a great modern city—being laid out according to plan—with a nee facade to the sea—and having a population climbing toward the 200,000 mark. Paul preferred the centres of population and commerce. The work, once established there, would spread rapidly to smaller places. That policy carried Christianity through the empire like a prairie fire. Paul found in Thessalonica and in Berea two very different types of people.

I. A GOOD START, Acts 17: 1-4.

Arriving in Thessalonica the travelers found lodgings with Jason, possibly a fellow Jew. For three weeks they 'reasoned"—carried on argument and discussion—in the synagogue. They "opened" and "alleged," that is, quoted Scripture passages to prove their statements regarding Messiah and Jesus of Nazareth, v. 3. Unwelcome assertions such as these provoked hot discussion and denial, 1 Thess. 1:2. Some of the Jews believed, and a great many of the God-fearing Greeks, including a number of women from the upper social classes. They would be freer from superstition and narrow-mindedness. Paul's faithful preaching did what such preaching always does—it divided his hearers. Some became enthusiastic believers, others bitter enemies. A storm was gathering.

II. "BOLSHEVISTS!" Acts 17: 5-9.

The Jews, as usual, caused trouble. It is always easy to raise a mob in an eastern city. In Thessalonica the material was close at hand—"Lewd fellows of the baser sort (v. 5), the market loafers, with nothing to do and ready for any adventure. They mobbed Jason's house, but Paul and Silas, probably warned, were not there. The mob nevertheless must have its victim. Jason himself was dragged out and brought to the authorities. He had harbored those who had turned the world upside down. It was the first mob crying 'Down with these Bolshevists'" (Richard Roberts), that is, people who upset the existing order. The mob named them better than they realized for "the followers of Jesus are in every generation a company of revolutionists who turn their world upside down wherever they do not find it love-side-up." Any effort to change an existing order is dangerous. But Christians must face the risks involved when they recognize that any condition is not in accord with the Spirit of Jesus. The Christianity that can be comfortable in the world as at present constituted has reason to doubt its own loyalty to its Master.

Jason was bound over to keep the peace, v. 9. The only way to do that was to stop the preaching. It was a clever way of attacking Paul through his friends. The missionaries were sent away that night. Loath to leave his friends at the mercy of enemies, Paul often longed to return to them, but "Satan" (1 Thess. 2: 17, 18), probably the "security" remanded of Jason (v. 9) prevented him.

Forty miles west of Thessalonica lay Berea. Livy considered it a "noble" town. Paul found in it a noble people, v. 11. They were gentlemen. They listened to Paul's message with an open mind. Then they examined the Scriptures, to which he referred for verification, to see if what he said was true, v. 11. They did not say "That is not what we were taught," and therewith listen to it only to denounce it. They evidently believed, as John Robinson, the "father of the Independents," said to the Pilgrim Fathers as they were about to sail for America, ". . . . the Lord hath more truth yet to break forth out of his holy word." The Bereans were concerned, not so much to have their own opinions confirmed as to discover more truth. As a result of their open-mindedness, great numbers believed.

III. THE OPEN MIND, Acts 17: 10-15.

To reach Thessaly Paul had to travel to the sea. Paul, apparently through depression or illness, was unable to travel alone. Some of the brethren stayed by him until he reached Athens. There, he could not bear to be alone—Timothy and Silas must come also, v. 15. 2 Cor. 1: 8, 9, throws light upon this mysterious depression and trouble. For Paul, following Christ was an experience like that of the men of Paris who, in 1830, were overthrowing the Bourbons. They sent word to the French philosopher, Benjamin Constant, "A terrible game is being played here; our heads are in danger. Come and add yours." Paul was always ready to add his. Therefore his influence is living still.

Extreme simplicity of style makes this a charming model for all-day individuality.

It simulates a hip yoke and achieves an unusually slenderizing effect through its moulded long-waisted bodice belted at point most becoming to its wearer.

When it is so easily made—why not have it? It combines plain dark green silk with dark green crepe silk printed in tweed pattern.

Style No. 3372 is designed for sizes 36, 38, 40, 42, 44 and 46 inches bust. Size 36 requires 3⅝ yards of 39-inch material with ⅝ yard of 35-inch contrasting.

Black crepe satin with pinkish-beige crepe satin is very fashionable.

HOW TO ORDER PATTERNS.

Write your name and address plainly, giving number and size of such patterns as you want. Enclose 20c in stamps or coin (coin preferred; wrap it carefully) for each number, and address your order to Wilson Pattern Service, 73 West Adelaide St., Toronto.

Quiet Sleep?

Sleep is far from motionless. The average healthy adult during deep sleep makes some noticeable change in position on an average of once every seven or eight minutes, it is shown by experiments made at the Mellon Institute for Industrial Research.

The observations carried on by Dr. H. M. Johnson show that every sleeper has a repertoire of approximately a dozen different sleeping positions. On a typical night he will use nearly all of them, changing from one to another from twenty to sixty times according to various sensations and body irritations. The brain is sufficiently alert to guard the sleeper's comfort but at the same time the momentary discomforts are kept out of consciousness.

Treats

If we were able to ask each other, point blank: "What would be the greatest treat you could have at this moment?" the replies would be astounding. They would also illumine human nature. I believe that no single reply would demand a fortune, diamonds, a yacht, or a throne. All would be for some small, easily attainable thing. And not only is it the essence of a treat that it should be something small; but lavish gifts are not even desired by those of us whose chief interest lies in gratitude for loving thought. We should hear, in reply to our question, even if we have doubted the silences of our friends, some very reassuring confessions as to their most immediate desires.

So much for the general theory of treats and for our own requirements of a treat. How strange it is that in seeking to give treats, on the other hand, we should so often make the mistake of painting the lily.

For myself, although I find that many things, from rides in automobiles to visits to the theatre, are no longer treats, the receipt of an old book is still an inexpressible treat. Not a new book, but an old one—almost any old one, providing it is small and classic. I am given handsome new books, which I do not care for. In olden days my greatest treat was to be taken for a ride, either in Paris or in London, upon the front seat of a horse-omnibus or tramcar. Such rides are my earliest recollection. They remain in a memory as the epitome of happiness. Nor is this kind of treat altogether removed nowadays. The horses are gone, it is true, with their rhythmical hoof-beats, and the gentle swaying which they imparted to the vehicle, but even an electric tramcar or a motor omnibus can raise me at this time to a state of absorbed contemplation such as no smaller and more plastic automobile can achieve.

An almost completely windless summer day, with white flannel-clad cricketers at play upon the common, is a perfect treat to me. So is a day spent upon a sailing yacht. Aboard a yacht one can experience some of the great glories of sensation of which human beings are capable. The sight of blue sky and running water, sun glittering upon brasswork and the exquisite lines of the deck; the sense of easy and unfettered motion, of remoteness, buoyancy and adventure; the complete shedding of all feeling of responsibility for one's course, one's own safety and the safety of others—these are only a few of the splendours of yachting. And as, for me, yachting is an experience enjoyed only once in two or three years, it is a treat still, and will always be a treat.

It is a treat to me to hear the skylark. It is a treat to be demonstratively recognized by a little dog that I have not seen for some time. It is a treat to walk upon the Sussex or the Wiltshire downs, or to stand overlooking the Sussex Weald. It is a treat to read a witty book.—Frank Swinnerton, in "Tokefield Papers."

Britain Steadfast

Vancouver Province (Ind. Cons.): Above all other considerations, as it seems to us, is that of demonstrating to the world that the people of Great Britain are still sufficient to their responsibility and their emergency in the capacity of self-government. We believe they are. We believe they will affirm once more their old reputation as honest traders and self-reliant citizens. Great Britain, under duress, has temporarily suspended the gold standard. Great Britain, first of self-governing nations, has not suspended self-government at all.

She—"Yes, of course I changed my mind. Any woman has a right to change her mind."

He—"If women used as much time in making up their minds as they do in making up their faces they would not change them so often."

The Burrowing Owl

Walter Young

West of the Mississippi there is a small owl known to the cowboys as the "How-de-do" owl. When one of these birds is disturbed it bobs up and down several times, as though greeting the intruder according to the rules of approved feather-world etiquette. Although known as a burrowing owl, this bird is in reality unable to dig. Instead of excavating their own homes they usurp the dens of other desert animals—such as prairie dogs and rabbits—and are therefore often to be seen sitting in the mids. of a prairie dog colony. This is the source of the general belief regarding the congenial relations of prairie dogs, rattlesnakes and burrowing owls—a belief, however, that is purely mythical. A rattlesnake will eat the young of a prairie dog and owl. An owl will also eat the young of a prairie dog, hence it would be almost an impossibility to have all three animals get along in the same burrow on even the poorest of social terms.

Another element which has given this absurd belief strength is the call of the young owls when angry. In studying and excavating several nests in eastern Colorado, I was always surprised at the rattling hiss which would issue forth from the nesting chamber when I neared the young. One unfamiliar with burrowing owls would most assuredly believe that a rattler lurked below. The nest would then, in all probability, be left strictly alone, and the investigator depart—his erroneous theory proved to his entire satisfaction. The food of burrowing owls shows them to be extremely beneficial. A pair of birds which I was observing brought to the young in an hour and twenty minutes, 17 large beetles, 22 grasshoppers, 2 lizards, 1 frog and 1 prairie jumping mouse.—"Animal Life."

Buzzards Protected

Buzzards are protected almost everywhere they are found, as they are the best of scavengers. When an animal dies on the western prairies these big birds slowly congregate to feast. They seem to have someway of signalling the location of food to their companions miles away. Near Tuscon, Arizona, I saw a dead horse dumped on the desert. When he was left by the truck there was, so far as I could see, only one buzzard in the sky. He circled about and I hid myself amid some greasewood bushes before he dropped down to feed. Five minutes later a buzzard was seen on the horizon to the east, and one on the south. Twenty minutes later there were six of them fighting over the carcass, and more were steadily arriving. Some people claim that buzzards always keep in sight of one another, even at high altitudes and when several miles apart. In this way, when one drops down, he is missed by his nearby comrades and they fly in his direction. These, in turn, are missed by others that are still farther away—and so forth. Others claim that they locate their food through an acute sense of smell, but I have seen them approach food "down wind", hence this latter theory cannot always explain their sudden gatherings.—Walker Young in "Animal Life."

Work

"Men ought to work." True and timely the saying is, but we may sadly abuse the undoubted fact. We may overdo work. That is an imminent danger with industrious people. We may make it the be-all and end-all of life. This is a disastrous blunder. Dean Vaughan has a striking sermon on "the idolatry of work." All too readily do some men turn work into an idolatry. "Men ought to work." Yes, but there are other duties they must not neglect. We must not lose our real self in work. We must build up our character. — Dr. Dinsdale Young.

CHANCE

A man may be great by chance, but never wise and good without taking pains for it.

Safe driving at a moderate speed requires nothing but self-control and a strong rear bumper.

To England

O mighty soul of England, rise in splendour
Out of the wrack and turmoil of the night,
And as of old, compassionate and tender,
Uphold the cause of justice and of right.

Thine was the consecration and devotion,
The world-wide vision and the world-wide trust,
Which made a pathway of the tides of ocean
And fruitful gardens of the desert dust.

Thine was the call to face with dauntless bearing
All high adventure, all adversity,
Until thy sons by their resistless daring
Had girdled earth with realms from sea to sea.

Now in this age when out of cruel oppression
The hearts of men are yearning for release,
O Soul of England — England's great possession—
Lead thou mankind into the way of peace.

Plenty of Prospects

The young man had asked the big business man for his daughter's hand. 'You work, I believe, for Blank & Co.," said the parent. "What are your prospects of promotion?"

The young man smiled.

"The very best in the whole office, sir," he replied. "My job is the lowest one we've got."

Lady Bug—"Isn't this thrilling, two admirers fighting a duel over little me?"

Burglary as a profession is likely to prove rather confining.

Whistling Low Form of Mentality

"For long centuries the world has been whistling wherever and whenever it felt like doing so," declares the Christian Science Monitor in this editorial. "Man has puckered up his lips and emitted more or less tuneful sounds to express various emotions. The youth whistles for sheer joie de vivre. The farmer's boy whistles, supposedly, to prevent himself from getting too lonely. The business man whistles when the price of goods goes up, and his customers whistle when they feel the result of the increase. Man whistles to bring his dog back; whistles for a taxi; whistles—in some countries—to attract the attention of some dreaming waiter; and occasionally employs whistling as a method of expressing either approval or disapproval, according to the nature of the whistle.

"But all this has been quite wrong—according to Professor Charles Gray Shaw, of New York. In future, if you care what people—and Prof. Shaw—think about you, you will do anything except whistle. Because the Professor asseverates that to whistle is to reveal a low mentality. If you whistle—so he declares—you are a moron, devoid of moral stamina and possessed of an inferiority complex. 'No great or successful man ever whistles,' declares this oracle. Well, we can recall quite a few who did, including Lord Tennyson, Lord Balfour, Disraeli, and Sir Arthur Sullivan, to say nothing of W. S. Gilbert, Sir Herbert Tree, and T. P. O'Connor. But perhaps they all were morons and possessed of a low mentality—as Professor Shaw assays such things.

The world is full of people who seem bent upon extracting all that is left of the joy of living out of life. They would impose every possible sort of negation upon us, and leave us with nothing permitted save to read what they write. But the world will in all probability continue to whistle, despite Professor Shaw. Whistling is an outlet for all sorts of emotional reactions. At its worst it is not half as bad as an auto syren, and at its best it may be quite diverting. In any event, it does nobody any harm, it costs nothing, it is one of the least annoying of noises, and we should miss it if it were prohibited. Did you ever hear a woodbird whistle to its mate, Professor Shaw?"

Shamming Death

The so-called habit of shamming death in a moment of danger or surprise is common among wild animals of almost every species. The amateur naturalist need go no farther than the nearest strip of seashore to find an example.

Turn over any flat stone reasonably distant from high water mark; a hundred to one there will be a shore-crab under it; also there may be some weed. If there is weed, and the crab happens to be among it, he will not stir a fraction of an inch. Poke at him gently with a stick; he will make no effort to defend himself. His big claws, his legs, seem nerveless. To all outward appearances he is dead, and he will remain thus indefinitely unless he is poked away from the weed on to the bare rock.

Early Dusk

The moon is as frail as a disk of cobwebs,
The willows are scarcely green among the meadows
Where a thousand paper pennons wave above the crops
And the black oxen walk slowly homeward beside the still canals.
In the distant sky a kite is tugging at its string,
The rooks caw among their nests in the treetops,
Above the doors set deep in russet walls
Droop broken branches of faint green willow,
And the men and girls come from their work in the fields
Carrying sprays of flowering almond in their hands.
—Elizabeth J. Coatsworth, in "Fox Footprints."

Streetsville High School

As both Junior and senior boy champions this year at the Field meet won the Literary Society Medal previously, a short competition in eight events was staged after school last Friday.

In the junior contest Barron Adamson got first place with sixteen points, closely followed by Elmer Workman with fourteen. In the senior, against several competitors, Unit Bailey left no doubt as to his ability to wear the senior medal winning by sixteen points. Roy Hollingshead gave him a close run, and led in the half mile race.

These medals along with girls' will be presented at the annual Commencement this fall.

Mr. Gerhart has been away the first part of the week due to the death of his mother in Hamilton. The Literary Society express sincere sympathy.

The boys of the school are concentrating on rugby in spare time and are scheduled to meet Brampton juniors next week.

Christian Science

It was my privilege during a recent visit to Toronto to attend service in a Christian Science Church in the Beach district.

The church was filled to its utmost capacity.

Two doors led into the main building, where four ushers showed us to seats. When the service began they seated themselves at the doors—four at each door. They also took up collection, all the time wearing kid gloves. At the desk, was a lady and gentleman who read alternately from the Bible, portions of scripture to prove their belief in the healing power of faith. There was a powerful high-toned organ and a soloist. The congregation sang hymns from their own hymnals. When they were dismissed the best of friendship seemed to prevail amongst them all. The congregation seemed to be a superior class of people, and blest with a large portion of this world's goods. To me it was a new service and showed to us al that we can worship God in our own different ways and it is the same God we worship.

Locals

Mrs. Chas. Hollingshead, of Toronto is visiting her daughter, Miss V. L. (Bessie) Hollingshead.

Mr. John C. Rutledge celebrated his 85th birthday this week—and attended Streetsville Fair.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Thompson and son, of Milton, spent Thanksgiving at the home of Mr. Joseph Drennan.

Mum's Church, Trafalgar, will hold anniversary services Sunday, October 18, with a fowl supper the following Monday evening.

A regular army of men are being given employment picking and packing apples in the southern end of Trafalgar Township.

Messrs. James and Joseph Ross, W. J. Campbell, Mr. ad Mrs. W. J. Wilson, Georgetown, attended Streetsville Fair on Monday afternoon.

Among the visitors at the fair on Thanksgiving Day were Mr. James McCracken, of Brampton, who is over ninety years of age. He is still quite active and enjoys a day's outing as well as anybody.

Mr. Robert Edwards left at our office this week a piece of raspberry bush containing several ripe raspberries, and some hardly developed. He says that out of his patch he could pick a couple of boxes if the frost did not kill them within the next few days.

Toronto Oddfellows will, on Friday, October 16, tender a banquet at the Royal York Hotel, to Mr. E. J. Powley, Grand Sire, of the Oddfellows of the world. He is the first Toronto man ever to be elected to this high and honorable position. Br. J. S. Williams, P.D.D.G.M., will be Chairman and all the D.D.G.M's. will be present, including Mr. S. S. Council met Oct. 5th, with all members present.

Several acounts were passed:—

Mr. Charles Quennell interviewed the Council, asking to have a drain put in on Mill Street to drain his property.

Mr. Charles Dawson, of Huttonville Park, appeared, wanting to rent the power dam property for a picnic grounds. Council will consider the matter.

The Council is considering the question of disposing of the local electric light and power plant and putting the Village on Hydro. They are getting full particulars from the H.E.P.C. and expect to put the matter to a vote of the people at the time of the next Municipal election.

Here and There

Montreal with 996,000; Toronto with 627,582; Winnipeg with 217,587; and Vancouver with 245,207, show as the four largest cities of the Dominion on the Federal Government census returns for 1931.

Saskatchewan ranks second to Ontario as an egg-producing province with an estimated production last year of thirty million dozen eggs. Total value of poultry products to Canadian farmers in 1930 was $30,000,000.

United States motor traffic to New Brunswick for the current season up to July 31 was 12 per cent. heavier than for the corresponding period of last year, according to a tabulation just issued by the Provincial Government Bureau of Information and Tourist Travel.

What is regarded as probably the highest park in the world is the National Park on Mount Revelstoke in the Canadian Rockies, on the main line of the Canadian Pacific trans-continental system. It covers an area of 100 square miles and is above the clouds. There is a new motor road to the summit of the mountain.

Evangeline Memorial Park, Nova Scotia, with its chapel and museum dedicated to the memory of the heroine of Longfellow's poem and of the Acadian pioneers, has been visited by more than 94,000 tourists since it was opened in 1924, it is announced from Dominion Atlantic Railway headquarters.

Steady development of young Canada's interest in farming has increased to the point where a Canadian Council on Boys' and Girls Club Work has been formed to co-ordinate the junior agricultural movement as a whole. The programme has been broadened to include practically every line and department of modern farming in Canada.

Harassed officials of the Canadian Pacific Express Company at Vancouver played nurse recently to a mother and her family of 14 when "Fanny," a sad-eyed retriever, carried by the company from Nelson, B.C., became the mother of 14 puppies. Hurry-up calls were put through for the consignee, a Vancouver youth, who was overjoyed to find the unexpected parcel.

When Dr. Josef Wielawski, surgeon of the S.S. Polonia, suffered an attack of appendicitis, his life was saved by the intervention of Dr. A. B. Taylor of the Canadian Pacific liner Duchess of Richmond, who attended him after a boat had been lowered and the stricken physician taken on board the Duchess. The incident occurred recently when the Duchess of Richmond was 300 miles off the coast of Ireland.

With a jammed rifle and a rearing grizzly, a few yards distant, Dr. L. B. Kingrey, of Portland, Oregon, guest at the Banff Springs Hotel, on a hunting expedition in the Palliser River section of the Canadian Rockies, had a narrow escape. The huge animal delayed its attack long enough for the doctor to clear his rifle and shoot it. His bag on the hunt was two grizzlies, four black bears, three goats and two elks.

Soothes restless, wakeful CHILD

THERE are times when a baby is too fretful or feverish to be sung to sleep. There are some pains a mother cannot pat away. But there's no time when any baby can't have the quick comfort of Castoria! A few drops, and your little one is soon at ease—back to sleep almost before you can slip away.

Remember this harmless, pure vegetable preparation when children are ailing. Don't stop its use when Baby has been brought safely through the age of colic, diarrhea, and other infantile ills. Give good old Castoria until your children are in their teens! Whenever coated tongues tell of constipation; when there's any sign of sluggishness, just give them a more liberal dose. Castoria is so pleasant-tasting; all children love to take it.

Are you a victim of habit ?

Do you arrange your week with washday on Monday because it is more convenient, or because that day has always been dedicated to this part of household work ? If you send your wash to a laundry, does it make any difference what day it goes ? Many Toronto women, on thinking it over, have asked us to change their day to Friday or Saturday, and this is a great help to the girls in this laundry, as it eases the pressure of work in the early part of the week and provides work in the latter part, where work is usually not so heavy. If you desire to make this change we would be glad to have our driver to call on Friday or Saturday. Phone us to-day

IT PAYS TO ADVERTISE

The Little Mountain Girl

I recall walking one sundown on an old upland road that ran over the edge of a long-deserted mountain orchard. It was a place I was very fond of visiting, partly because of the fine view to be had there of the far-shining valley; partly because of its solitude; partly because of the manner in which, from the coign of vantage, the watcher can see how the stars march up the great dome of heaven, as if they were angels in procession, carrying tapers, joyously climbing a mighty hill. I reached the asture just at the right moment. The dark-blue flower of twilight was opening wide. The sky showed lilac lanes, wan gulfs, sea breakers of misty red.

In that high pasture I thought myself alone; but presently, as I sat on the roots of a gnarled and ancient apple tree, two cows with tinkling bells came by. They were followed by a tiny mountain girl, not more than five years old. I knew her well, but I hardly had expected to see her so far away from home at such an hour. She recognized me at once and stopped to talk with me; and the cows, no longer urged, buried their broad noses in the dewy grasses of the hilltop.

"What you doin' out here so late?" she asked, with womanly directness. She, of course, had her work to do; but why should I be loafing around?

"I like to watch the stars come out," I told her, "and I like to see the valley down yonder in the mist."

"Do you like them things too?" she asked, in a tone more kindly than that in which her initial question had been put. "I nearly allus stops here when it ain't rainin'. I don't get lonely when the stars come out."

"Why do you love to watch the stars?" I asked my tiny comrade.

"I talk with them," said the child. "And they lights me home."

In a moment she was gone over the fading hill, leaving me with another treasured memory about solitude. And I never look at the spangled heavens without recalling what that baby said of the stars—"They lights me home." —Archibald Rutledge, in "Peace in the Heart."

Nomads of the Sky

(Animal Life)

Just as the nomad savage wanders to and fro about his wilderness, making his camp here one day, miles away the next, according to the ever-fluctuating supply of the bare necessities of life, so do certain birds pass the greater part of their existence in moving around. Few birds are really stationery during the year; in fact, it is rather the exception for a species to be absolutely sedentary. Many, if not all, young birds are great wanderers, being driven from their birthplace by parents or deserting it voluntarily as soon as parental care becomes unnecessary.

In the autumn, when quarrels and bad friendships associated with mating and nesting in the previous spring and summer are forgotten, many birds become gregarious, and forming into companies, both large and small, undertake roving movements throughout the country—and even the world—to suit their feeding. Bush-cats, larks and parrots are among these nomads of the bird world.

Either as nomads or migrants, the chats cover a great area of Australia in the course of a year, and they consume enormous quantities of insects. One spring I made a rough calculation of the number of insects consumed by twelve families of bush-chats nesting in the radius of an acre at the edge of a tidal marsh. There was an average of three young in each nest, and a conservative estimate made between the time the young were hatched and when they had left the nest, revealed that those 36 young birds accounted for no fewer than 36,000 grubs and insects. It was impossible, of course, to estimate the number consumed by the parent birds.

Beauty of plumage and definite individuality mark the few families of chats in Australia. In point of coloration the crimson chat surpasses both the handsome little orange-plumaged chat and the common black and white member of the order. It is without question one of the dazzlingly beautiful birds of Australia. The forehead, crown, breast, and upper tail feathers are a brilliant crimson, while the throat is white and the back brown—a veritable gem in the outback bush lands. The chats are unique Australian forms. They belong exclusively to this part of the world, having no relation to the whinchat and the stonechat of Great Britain. They go about in flocks, and are most partial to moist localities, such as river valleys and tidal marshes, and most frequently the dry saltbush country in the interior, while, as its name would infer, the "desert chat," or gibber-bird, lives in the more or less arid areas in the north of South Australia, the west of New South Wales, and the country around Lake Eyre and Lake Torrens. All of them make their nests quite close to the ground, usually in tufts of grass, rushes, or briar bushes, and sometimes near the roots of tall thistles.

Many birds desire the company of their fellows in winter, and it is customary to see large flocks of different kinds feeding in field and forest. The gregarious nature of the red-breasted robins forces itself upon our notice a little time after the birds have finished nesting, but this flocking habit is witnessed at its best in autumn, when the birds form into companies and undertake a well-defined migration from highlands to lowlands to escape the rigors of winter. Often the males keep to themselves, and there is nothing prettier than a flock of these sprightly and gaily-colored little creatures moving across the open lands, flying from one stone to another, then to the ground, and to another stone or a fence, and so on, feeding as they go. City parks and suburban gardens are frequently visited by these dainty winter migrants.

Probably the best example of nomadic migration are afforded by parrots and lorikeets. Their movements, like those of the chats and robins, are purely in quest of food, and as this, in the case of the lorikeet, is found in the flowers of the eucalyptus, we find the birds following up the irregular flowering of the trees. When the blossoming of the handsome crimson-flowered eucalyptus in suburban streets and gardens, one is almost assured of observing a flock of musk and swift lorikeets nearby. Just as soon as the flowering is over in one district, they move on to another where the trees are blooming, and in that way they wander throughout the country, breeding in favorable localities when spring comes upon them.

Migrant birds form a stream like a tide that is always ebbing and flowing. Only for a few weeks in the year, when some are nesting, is there a period of "slack water" before the turn. Birds are not only leaving for and arriving from countries on the other side of the world, but are moving from one state to another, and throughout the four seasons movements of one kind or another are taking place. Nevertheless, we see little enough of migration actually in progress, and the ordinary man in the country might never suspect its existence were it not for the complete absence of some species at certain seasons ,or the periodical variations in the numbers of others. Migration takes place very largely at night, even in the case of birds which are not ordinarily nocturnal, and for this reason usually escapes notice. Sometimes, however, the cries of the travelling flocks may be heard overhead on a still night, even from city streets and to the lighthouses round the coasts great numbers of migrants are often attracted, under certain atmospheric conditions, by the blinding glare of the lanterns, when many dash themselves to death against the glass.

The movements of the nomads of the avian world represent incipient migration in the past, which never developed in the species of their ancestors to any greater extent than that we now witness.

Scots View First "Air Circus"

Renfrew, Scot.—Scotland had its first opportunity to see an "air circus" recently when Capt. C. D. Barnard, British pilot, led an aerial pageant at Moorpark Aerodrome here on Sept. 5.

The circus consisted of eight machines, including Captain Barnard's 12-seater Spider, an autogyro, and a French Potez, which was making its first visit to Scotland. In addition to the aerial acrobatics and other carnival features, Mr. J. A. Mollison, who recently made a record flight from Australia to England, gave exhibition flights and practical lessons in aviation.

Chinese Aviatrix Gets Official Appointment

Nanking—Miss Wang Kwei-fen, the first Chinese young woman to receive an American airplane pilot's license, has been given an executive post in the aviation administration of the Ministry of War. She returned recently from New York University, where she studied aviation and qualified as a pilot. She intends to work in Nanking only for one year, after which she will go to Europe to study technical aviation, hoping to assist China to establish its own airplane factories.

Ancient Village Found in Shetland

Glasgow—A prehistoric village extending over several acres of shore land has just come to light in the island of Shetland off the north coast of Scotland.

Excavations were begun earlier in the summer and already relics have been unearthed which point to a Bronze Age survival. It is expected that it will be some five years before excavating operations are completed.

Aviation Laws Taught

Los Angeles—College students at the University of Southern California are offered an opportunity to study the laws of aviation in a new course which opened here this fall. The instruction offered also includes radio law.

In Wales the maternal death-rate has been, during the past forty years, about forty per cent. higher than that of England.

Life Dormant Million Years

U. S. Scientist Declares at Association Gathering

Cleveland.—Dean Charles B. Lipman of the University of California described to the Botanical Society of America the nature of his experiments that convinced him that it is possible for life to remain dormant millions of years.

The report, delivered before the botanists' meeting carried forward previously announced conclusions based on the finding of living organisms in the interior of anthracite coal from deep mines in Wales and Pennsylvania.

Belief of the California scientist that the organisms have been in the coal since it was formed from rotting vegetation of coal-age swamps is founded chiefly on unsuccessful attempts he made to force such organisms into the coal.

In the grinding up of the coal and at all times in the experimental steps he said, the samples were shielded from contamination.

Dean Lipman said: "I believe it is quite possible for a cell like a spore to remain in a state of suspended animation.

His studies warrant, he said, the belief the micro-organisms that he has made to resume animated life and multiply are descendants directly from cells "dormant in the anthracite from the time of its formation," which geologists calculate is from 15,000,000 to 200,000,000 years.

"Talkies" Used In Court Evidence

Melbourne, Vic.—A sound film, specially recorded for the purpose, was recently admitted as evidence in the Supreme Court of Victoria.

The case was one in which $500 damages was claimed by a Melbourne suburban resident for nuisance caused by noises in an adjoining dairy. Before the hearing of the case a sound film recording apparatus was installed on the premises of the claimant, and a record made of the dairy noises during the night. The judge then visited the studio and heard the talkie run through.

Justice Lowe ordered the dairy proprietor to refrain from using his bottling machine between 11 p.m. and 7:30 a.m., and to refrain from causing a nuisance between those hours.

Peddler's Song in Autumn

Ah, 'tis well enough roving in a world of summer skies!
A peddler might be merry then, and not be sore at heart,
With gold and silver trinkets for to match with laughing eyes,
And a little gray donkey and a high-wheeled cart!

A peddler might be merry then—aye sure, as I have been.
A-questioning down the country when hills are starred with flowers,
And all the woodland singing, and all the meadows green.
And never a lamplit window for to haunt his evening hours.

For then he'd walk with Wonder, but now 'tis Sorrow old,
A far faint voice that follows him, that goes with him along,
And mocks him on the hillside, and in the valley's gold,
And sweet in roadside gardens filled with autumn robin-song.

'Tis all but him have dwellings, over all the shires,
Over all of England, from sea to misty sea;
And men will come at twilight to their own hearth's fires.
And mice will build their winter nests beneath the wild rose tree.

Aye! 'tis well enough roving when the land is bright,
A peddler might be merry then, before the swallow's flown,
With never a lamplit window for to haunt him through the night,
And he and his little donkey on the dark road alone.

—Hamis Maclaren in the Spectator.

He—"I have something serious to tell you. I love you, dearest."

She—"Is that all? I've known that a long time. I thought you were going to tell me that you had a job that would support both of us."

She—"I wonder why we can't save money!" He—"The neighbors are always buying something we can't afford."

Salvaging of Treasure Nearly Accomplished

For many months salvagers aboard Italian ship Artigho have been working to recover gold from steamship Egypt sunk in Bay of Biscay in 1922. Final preparations to raise gold are under way. Here is Fortunato Sodini, one of divers, enjoying a cigarette after a spell in the water in bell-type apparatus.

Canadian Apples Bought By France

Ten Carloads Ordered to be Sold in Vending Machines

Ottawa. — Automatic "coin-in-the-slot" machines will be used for the sale of apples in France, according to a report received from Paris by the Department of Trade and Commerce.

One of the largest fruit importing firms in France has placed an initial order for ten carloads of apples with an approximate value of $18,000, and is considering dealing in the Canadian fruit exclusively. Two thousand of the automatic vending machines will be placed throughout France, and the firm has also organized a series of public auctions for the sale of Canadian apples. Hercule Barre, Canadian trade commissioner in France, working in conjunction with J. Forsyth Smith, Canadian fruit trade commissioner at London, was responsible for the sale to the large French firm.

The extent of the activities in developing the French market for Canadian apples is realized when it is seen that only 2,415 barrels of apples were exported to France from the 1929 crop while 28,261 barrels of last year's crop found its way to that country. There were practically no shipments of Canadian apples to France previous to the 1929 crop.

Berlin Crowds Applaud French Film

Berlin.—Twice every night, one thousand men and women of Berlin crowd one of the city's largest cinemas to applaud a film in which, with very few exceptions, nothing but French is spoken, writes a correspondent of the Christian Science Monitor. Now, this may not seem strange in any other country. But after all that has happened between Germany and France, such an incident is worthy of note. It is not merely a slight conversation that is carried on in French. On the contrary, one mass scene follows another, and French songs, French cheers and the chattering of French crowds sweep down from the screen and fill the vast auditorium. The Germans scarcely understand a word, but they do not mind. They laugh and enjoy themselves like children while they discover that the French are subject to the same feelings as they are. And when Georges Milton, the chief actor in this French film entitled Le Roi des Resquilleurs, makes a final bow from the screen, applause fills the hall. Leaving the cinema one cannot help thinking that in this instance, at least, the moving picture is working for the rapprochement of the people of the world.

World Shortage of Soft Wood Predicted

Jerusalem—A world shortage of softwood in 15 years' time is predicted by Mr. Richard St. Barbe Baker, founder of "The Men of the Trees," who recently addressed a meeting here, writes a correspondent of the Christian Science Monitor.

In Palestine the Government Forestry Department has done much to conserve the trees, he said. The Balfour Forest of the Jewish National Fund was established out of voluntary contributions.

The "Men of the Trees" in Palestine, he continued, are now endeavoring to obtain concerted acton. Financial support of some friends in England and America has been enlisted, while a present of 10,000,000 tree seeds was sent to the Girls' Nurseries of the Federation of Jewish Labor by a Chicagoan.

"I see Jerusalem growing apace," Mr. St. Barbe Baker said. "Before it is too late, open spaces for trees should be provided."

3½-Ton Machine Carried by Plane

Perth, W. Aust.—A piece of machinery weighing 3½ tons was recently carried by air over 25 miles of bush to the gold fields in New Guinea, according to Mr. O. S. Lucas, who has recently returned here from the island, writes a correspondent of the Christian Science Monitor.

Mr. Lucas found that the cost of living in New Guinea was high, bread being 2s. 6 d. a loaf, potatoes 1s. a pound, onions 1s. a pound, and meat 5s. A pound of butter cost 4s. 9d. and a dozen apples 7s. 9d. Skilled Australian workers receive approximately £25 a month. The company has put a freezing plant in operation for the employees and also furnishes electric lighting.

Study of Native Tongue Urged in Scotland

Hawick, Scot.—A proposal for the inclusion of Scottish literature in the school curriculum received the enthusiastic support of the Burns Federation at its annual conference held here according to correspondent of the Christian Science Monitor.

The means of realizing the plan lay almost wholly within the teachers of Scotland, speakers pointed out, since they are allowed a large measure of freedom in drawing up the syllabus for literature. Meanwhile it was reported, good progress was being made in the promotion of the use of the vernacular.

"Short Hair" Declares Paris

Decision Reached at Recent Hair Dressing Convention

Paris.—Women will wear their hair short, with the ear lobes exposed, the International Hair Dressing Congress decided recently, but many Paris experts on the subject merely mumbled "yes? maybe," and adopted a policy of watchful waiting.

The congress was pretty definite in its conclusions, despite the fact that short hair admittedly handicaps the wearers of Empress Eugenie hats and gowns which date back toward the period when the consort of the Third Napoleon was gallivanting around Europe.

The hair will be drawn back from the cheeks and waves or curls will appear low on the back of the head and on the neck, the congress decreed. There were 24 nations represented in the competition for the best style of hair dressing. The first prize went to England, the second to Germany and the third to France. The United States was represented only in the judges' box.

Eugenie Hat Blamed

The Eugenie Hat style was generally blamed for the quarrel, for the long-hair style was more becoming in connection with the new dress and hat models. The short-hair advocates, however, were ready to adopt other styles for the winter.

Several well-known exponents of long hair had been letting their locks grow for some months but they cut it all off again at the last minute. Some of them said they found short hair was much more convenient on vacations and at the beaches. They said they would not worry about inability to wear the new hat styles with short hair and many milliners supported them.

The Birth of Jazz

Strictly speaking there was no jazz music before the World War. At least, it was not known by that name. The word jazz was in use, however, in New Orleans, where its origin has been traced, perhaps twenty years before the end of the Nineteenth century. But it was used in the verb form and applied to a rudimentary syncopated type of music as a cue to speed it up, or to enliven it. Some years later orchestras on the west coast began developing this type of music, and in 1914 a complete jazz orchestra composed of two saxophones, cornet, trombone, violin, banjo, piano and drums, played at Los Angeles. A year later this music gained popularity in Chicago and a banjoist and orchestra organizer there named Bert Kelly made an adjective out of jazz and called his own orchestra Bert Kelly's Jazz band. This appears to be the first use of the term "jazz band."

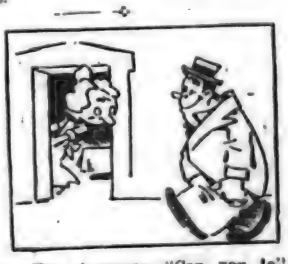
Dogs Deterioating Veterinarian Declares

New York.—A back-to-nature movement for dogs was urged by a prominent Park Avenue veterinarian who has found that the canines of America are being pampered and petted so much that they are subject to fits of hysteria and nervous break-down. Dogs, said Dr. J. F. De Kiralki, can't stand the pace of modern life. Owners feed their dogs Russian caviar or oysters tures to stand up and take it. "What on the half shell and expect the crea- those dogs need," said the doctor, "is raw meat. A dog is naturally carnivorous. He'll degenerate into a regular pussy cat if he doesn't get it. And Crepes Suzettes are not raw meat."

Last Course

An English business man was taken out to lunch by a Scottish friend in Glasgow.

"Now," said the host, as he called the waiter, 'this is going to be a real Scottish meal. We'll have cockie-leekie soup, finnan hadies, a haunch of vension, sheep's head, jam roly-po'y with brandy sauce, and a bottle of whisky. Now," he turned to his guest "is there anything else you fancy?"



"Well," suggested the Englishman in a feeble voice, "what about ordering a couple of stretchers while you're about it?"

Caution

The hotel manager was passing down the passage one morning when he saw the Boots kneeling at one of the bedroom doors cleaning a pair of shoes.

"What are you doing?" he asked. "Take them down to the basement at once and clean them there."

"Impossible, sir," replied the Boots. "there's a Scotch gentleman inside the room, and he's hanging on to the laces."

Tax Assessor—"Can you tell what your husband is worth?"

Lady of House—"I don't know—but you can have him for two cents."

Lines For Autumn

Something fluttered on the sill,
Brushed against the windowpane,
Yet there was no whir of wings
Nor another sound.
Trees stood tall and straight and still,
Not a blade moved on the plain,
Gone were twilight murmurings—
Silence all around,
Then one said he saw it swing
Athwart the casement. It was red.
He had seen its ruddy hue—
A comet in the grass.
And all knew how it would bring
Gaudy hordes on whispering tread,
Golden curves against the blue—
Knew these would not pass
Till new glories had been spent,
Cast on footpath and on wall,
Flung like thunder at the hill,
Swept away by gales;
Pass not as the summer went,
Quietly as first leaves fall,
But as gusty autumn will,
High on windy trails.

Paper Made From Banana Leaf

Rio De Janeiro.—A process for making paper from banana leaves has been developed by Dr. Virgilio Campello, attached to the Chemical Institute of Rio De Janerio. Two factories are employed making banana-leaf paper and efforts are being made to develop a regular industry.

RESTFUL SLEEP for FRETFUL, FEVERISH CHILD

—With Castoria's regulation

When your child tosses and cries out in his sleep, it means that he is not comfortable. Very often the trouble is that poisonous waste matter is not being carried off as it should be. Bowels need help—mild, gentle help—but effective. Just the kind Castoria gives. Castoria is a pure vegetable preparation made specially for children's ailments. It contains no harsh, harmful drugs, no narcotics. Don't let your child's rest—and your own—be interrupted. A prompt dose of Castoria will urge stubborn little bowels to act. Then relaxed comfort and restful sleep! Genuine Castoria always has the name:

An old Dutchman, returning to Holland, was asked by a friend what in his estimation was the strangest thing he had noticed, and he replied: "The United States has many wonderful things, but the strangest is a drink called the cocktail—and here is how they make it: They put in whiskey to make it strong, then water to make it weak; gin to make it hot and ice to make it cold; lemon to make it sour, sugar to make it sweet; then they say, 'Here's to you!' and drink it themselves."

Father—"When I was your age, son, I was glad to get dry bread to eat."

Bright Five-Year-Old—"You're much better off now that you are living with us, aren't you, Daddy?"

Bandi.—"What! Only thirty cents? Been playing poker, eh?"

Victim—"No, but I've been sitting with some fellows who were!"

The handiest place to live is within your income. When the cat lays back its ears and humps its back, the smart dog knows it is time to use diplomacy. Our heart goes out to the man who joined the Navy to see the world and then spent four years in a submarine. A barking dog seldom bites, and a blustering man never fights. The book "What Every Young Man Should Know" should be changed to "What Every Young Girl Should no." If we have to do without things we need, we just grin and bear it, it's doing without unnecessary things we want that makes us downhearted.

She—"What should I do for a sprained ankle?"

Joe—"Limp!"

Mother—"Come, Freddie, and kiss your aunt."

Freddie—"Aw, Ma, I ain't done nothin'."

Mary had a little lamb,
Given by a friend to keep;
It followed her around until
It died from loss of sleep.

Old Lady—"Why didn't you try to keep out of prison?"

"Gangster—"I did, and they gave me three months for resisting an officer."

The only man really interested in hot air is the owner of a furnace. The penitentiaries are filled with those who got caught and the resorts crowded with those who didn't. The older friends of a girl who's about to be married often try to comfort themselves by saying they'd hate to be as crazy about a man as she is. Some travel broadens the mind, but hitch-hiking seems to enlarge nothing but the gall.

Wife—"Well, dear, have you found a job yet?"

Hubby—"Yes, my pet, you go to work to-morrow."

The driver of the dilapidated car asked the bystander: "Can you tell me the quickest way to Victoria?"

After a critical glance at the car the bystander replied, "Yes, take a 29 bus."

Unavoidable

"Jackson," said the master of the house to his gardener, "I thought you said you had rolled the lawn this morning?"

"That be right, sir," said the gardener.

"Then what are all these little bumps?" asked the master.

The gardener gazed at the lumpy ground.

"Now that's a very funny coincidence," he explained. "Only yesterday I was reading in a paper that there's a lot of little earthquakes we never hear nothing about."

Malice

Malice itself drinks in the best part of its own poison. That of serpents is deadly to others, but harmless to themselves. This has no resemblance to it; it is deadliest to its possessors.

Anywhere, Anytime

"Operator! I need your help!" exclaimed Mrs. Herbert Brodie as she hurriedly told the telephone operator of her need.

"My son Billy is very sick and his father must be reached."

Bert Brodie, a commercial traveler, was known to be somewhere in the western section of the province.

However, such is the persistence of Long Distance operators that when an urgent call has to be put through and complete information about the location is lacking they "follow through" as long as there is any hope of completing the call.

Twelve cities and towns were called before Mr. Brodie was located. Within two hours he was at his boy's bedside. Upon the return of the father the boy began to show improvement. The telephone bridged the gap!

Big Entry List For Winter Fair

Live Stock and Agricultural Displays Higher Than Usual

A welcome and refreshing tone of confidence in Canadian agricultural conditions is sounded in the announcement by the management of the Royal Winter Fair that "prospects for entries at the Royal in all departments were never better than at the present moment."

"Exhibitors in the western provinces are most anxious to continue to display their live stock and other agricultural products," the Royal's statement goes on, "and the Dominion Government and the Provincial Governments, recognizing the advantages of the provinces continuing to occupy a prominent position at the Royal are contributing their usual financial assistance in transportation and in the selection of the live stock and agricultural products.

"There has been more than the usual number of inquiries from United States points this year and the Royal's survey of Ontario and Quebec indicates that there is considerably more live stock than usual ready for exhibition, so that we are very satisfied that the Winter Fair will open with the best and most representative live stock displays which we have ever had.

"Although general conditions last November were anything but favorable, 1930 was the Royal's record year, not only in exhibits and attendance, but the spirit of the people at the show was happier than at any previous event. We feel sure that the spirit of optimism at that time has served a very useful purpose in that it has enabled Canadians better to view recent economic adjustments with equanimity. We believe that a similar result will be secured at the forthcoming Royal Winter Fair, and be more noticeable perhaps on account of the greater contrast in conditions.

"The Royal this year is designed to commemorate its founding and inauguration ten years ago, when in the depression that followed the war it helped so signally to restore confidence to Dominion agriculture generally. Since its 'birthday' at that time it has established itself as an institution to which Canadians all over Canada have pointed with a very considerable pride.

"The Royal is entering upon its new cycle under conditions which permit it to perform a service to Canada in influencing the general outlook and state of mind of the Canadian people, apart altogether from its influence upon agriculture. The aim of the management is that everyone who visits the Royal and everyone who exhibits there shall be better equipped to meet whatever problems may cross their path in the immediate future.

Silver Clue

When Simpson was leaving his club one night he discovered somebody had taken his new umbrella—by mistake of course—and had left an old one in its place. Next day he met Jimpson in the street with it.

"I say, old chap," said Simpson pleasantly, "would you mind handing over my umbrella?"

"It's not yours," replied Jimpson indignantly. "I bought it only last week."

"Sorry if I make a mistake," said Simpson. Then in a more serious tone he added: "Would you care to do me a slight favor?"

"What is it?"

"Give me that silver band from around the handle: it's got my name on it."

Rabbit Hole in September

(F.M.W. in The Countryman)

On hands and knees in that hot stubbly field
I peered into the warm dark earthy place,
Curious to know what might lie hidden there—
Whether some frightened whiskered rabbit face
Would stare a frozen moment into mine
Before he plucked up heart to bolt away.
But, 'No one at home in here,' I said aloud,
And every word on that warm twilit air
Fell cool and clear as the words of a young boy.
I did not know my voice could play so rare
A game. 'No one at home,' I said once more:
The boy's voice, like a chime of lazy bells
Fled echoing down dim rabbit corridors
Remote and sweet. I sat back on my heels
In the hot sun. Idly, contentedly,
I felt the quiet of earth flow into me.

Still a Chance

The Londoner met what appeared to be the oldest inhabitant outside the village inn.

"May I ask how old you are?" he said.

"I be just a hundred, surr," came the wheezy reply.

"That's a fine old age," went on the Londoner, "but, if I may say so, I don't suppose you'll live to see another hundred years."

The old man calmly tossed down his drink and turned to the Londoner.

"Well, don't know so much about that," he replied, "I be stronger now than when I started on my first hundred."

Soon Settled

They were listening to an orchestral concert.

"By the way," she asked her companion, "what is that piece they are playing now?"

"I've no idea," he replied, "but we'll ask one of the men in the orchestra."

Together they approached the players.

"What's that you're playing?" he asked politely enough.

"Just a piano, sir," came the reply.

"Just a piano."

Insects Face Hard Times

Night Lights and Low Temperature Disturb Pests' Regime

The depression has hit the insect world. Oriental peach moths and codling moths which infest certain New Jersey peach and apple orchards are worried about the state of affairs.

Up to now these insect pests found egg-laying conditions in these orchards just right—darkness at night and an average temperature not far from 60 degrees Fahrenheit for a good part of the year. Photo electric cells and sensitive thermostats have changed all this and now the moths face the prospect of not being able to lay their eggs at all.

Dr. Thomas J. Headlee, entomologist of the New Jersey Agricultural Experiment station, has discovered that these moths will not lay eggs on the trees in daylight or if it is colder than 60 degrees. Accordingly he has had electric floodlights, with "electric eye" control, installed in a large orchard, together with themostats to cut the floodlights out of circuit at temperatures below 60 degrees.

The electric eyes turn on the floodlights at dusk and turn them off at dawn. To the surprise of the moths it now never gets dark in that orchard except in very cold weather and then they are too torpid to lay. Consequently the next generation of moths in that region seems likely never to be born and the orchard men believe they have found an economical method of eliminating these pests. Times change, for better or for worse, according to whether one is a fruit raiser or an insect pest.

Cold Water Taps On Tropic Roads

Simla.—"Cold water for every man." This is the inscription that may be read hanging over a tap beside a trading post on the Hindustan-Tibet road, between Simla and Mashobra, writes a correspondent of "The Christian Science Monitor." The announcement, with its implied invitation, is another evidence of the thoroughness with which the British authorities in India seek to serve wayfarers and those poorer members of the Indian and Tibetan communities whose livelihood is earned along this ancient highway. Lying far below the snow line of the Himalayas at this point, the Hindustan-Tibet road in the summer is one where water is rarely to be seen; and the boon of these unexpected wells and faucets can be readily imagined. There are other water facilities on the road, but government coupons are required to secure the water from wardens who serve it out. And for those men whose work takes them daily along the sun-baked road the advantage of the availability of this "cold water for every man" is one that can be estimated only by those who know India and Tibet.

SHE HAD TO CRAWL TO BED

One stair at a time—on her hands and knees—that was how she had to do it. And when she did get to bed, her troubles were not over.

"Twelve months ago I could not sleep on account of the terrible pains in my knees, and I might say in all my joints. At night I could only crawl up to bed, one stair at a time. But since taking Kruschen Salts regularly, I have entirely lost all pains and stiffness, and, if needed, could now run upstairs two at a time. In fact, I feel 10 years younger. I shall never be without Kruschen Salts."—Mrs. A. E. D.

Do you realise what causes rheumatism? Nothing but sharp-edged uric acid crystals which form as the result of sluggish eliminating organs. Kruschen Salts can always be counted upon to clear those painful crystals from the system. The six salts in Kruschen are bound to dissolve away all traces of uric acid. And more! They ensure such perfect internal regularity that no such body poisons as uric acid are ever able to accumulate again. Prove this for yourself by buying a bottle of Kruschen.

THE BELL TELEPHONE COMPANY OF CANADA

Hospital days were lonely. Of course, her friends did all they could to keep her cheerful — her room was a bower of roses — but how she looked forward to evening when Jack could sit by her and talk of his day at the office.

Then came the news that he must leave town on business. She wondered how she could stand the wait until he came home. But Jack, wise fellow, knew how to bridge the gap. Promptly each evening at nine he called her over Long Distance and told her all the things she wished to hear.

Extravagant? . . . not a bit . . . for night rates are always inexpensive! What could be worth more for what it cost?

Our Village Council Wants Hydro Power

Ratepayers to Vote on the Question Next January

COMMUNICATION

To the Citizens of Streetsville:

Re Power and Light Question:

Your council has been trying to work out a solution for this problem and now they feel they have succeeded. The following are some of the suggestions which we hope to put before the voters at the January election. (1) That a commission be formed and appointed or elected to take over full charge of the power in town. Doing this will give a more definite result as to the true operations of the plant. As it is now, it is run under the one account along with taxes, etc. (2) We expect to bring in a by-law enabling us to raise necessary money by debentures. (3) To bring in a by-law to change to Hydro. Now this does not mean scrapping or discarding the present plant as some of our good citizens are claiming, but on the contrary we are planning and have the information to use the present plant as what may be termed a booster plant. That is by discarding the present 60 cycle generator and installing an induction motor of proper size to use all the power from the water-wheels a few hours each day. In doing so you keep down your peak demand meter load. We might mention here that the Hydro sells to corporations such as Streetsville power by the horse-power peak demand meter load only, not on kilo watt hours. But your local commission would resell this power which occurs several times on demand meter and on kilo watt hours. For example. Georgetown, we understand, pays $35.00 per year per horsepower to the Hydro Power Commission of Ontario but sells it to their consumers at $21.00 base per horsepower. You might wonder how this could be done. The answer is that reselling is the solution.

Your council has given a tremendous amount of thought and work this year to the power situation although we are accused by some for allowing our plant to run downhill. That is the farthest from our thoughts. We know there are some slight repair jobs that should be done but could not see our way clear to close the plant for two or three days. We are hoping that we may have a chance to do this at some future date when we will have the opportunity of closing the plant. We feel that we have the real solution now. It is hopeless to expect the present power plant to meet the demand for increased power. That has already been proven by the best customers being allowed to use Hydro as private consumers. These should not have been allowed, for the simple reason that the load of power which makes any system profitable has been given away. An explanation of this: We are to-day within our town operating two different systems. The heaviest load on the hydro receipting no benefit to the corporation. Then you operate a power plant of your own to generate the peak load at night. This is the point we like to bring out and every citizen should think seriously that your hydro users such as Dominion Sash, Creamery, Wm. Couse & Sons, etc. are actually paying the total bill. You say, "How is this possible?" But when you figure that these industries are practically a day load, when they close down at five or six o'clock at night that the amount of power of which they use approximately 150 H.P. is lying idle until seven o'clock next morning or as the case may be. Sunday or a holiday. This power will light the town and give all domestic services at this time and will not cost the local commission one red cent. Now are we not foolish to consider any expenditure on the local plant by way of increasing power, putting an additional water-wheel, generator, etc. in what is known as Mr. Vic Johnston's Power Rights or the old Dracass power dam. Another line of thought was to install a Deissel oil engine that would run the present generator when the water was low. These are only remedies for the time being, not cures, and you are not considering the present hydro users in such schemes. The fact is that we must sooner or later change over to hydro with 25 cycle power and as time goes on putting up with the inconveniences as we have in the past will only incur increased cost to the individual and the town as a whole. The present plant was installed in a faithful and conscientious manner, and was at that time a sound investment. You must remember though since installation that electric energy has increased in consumption by the application of the modern appliances, such as the radio, the electric stove electric washing machines, etc. These all demand twenty-four hours service seven days a week.

The foregoing is just a summary and an explanation for you to consider. We hope to have some definite figures as regard to the cost to the consumer and the cost of changing over to hydro. We understand that this will not be expensive as we have had a hydro official check over the town. Further we would like to clear up the misunderstanding or the report of the necessity of all the homes having to be re-wired. This is most absurd when the fact is that the town has been inspected by the inspection department of the hydro. In fact they have been approached as to what they would do if we should change over to 25 cycle. The answer is that they would take no action on this account. 25 cycle will go through the same wires as 60 cycle. There may be some wiring that is in such a state that it is dangerous to the owner and to the town that will have to be changed but that will be in very rare cases. Would not the average citizen like to have our village as well lighted as any other municipality? Have any of you taken notice of other places: Oakville, Brampton, Weston, etc. How well the streets are illuminated and stop to think how this is done. The direct answer is that the industrial power users are paying the bills. We hope that every citizen of our Village who wishes it to progress and to be a modern village to live in, will back your council by boosting and not knocking.

Signed:
H. W. HOPE,
Reeve.

THIRD QUARTERLY REPORT OF CHILDREN'S AID SOCIETY

Ending September 30th, 1931

The work of the C.A.S. is steadily increasing, due no doubt to the employment situation. During the last three months there have been a large number of complaints received, involving nearly fifty children, with over forty investigations made.

It is exceedingly difficult to place children in foster homes, twelve applications have been received, with only two placements, the majority of the applications are for boys and girls beyond school age. Assistance in procuring a home for a child is always appreciated.

Thirty-seven Wards of the Societies have been visited, one legal adoption completed.

There are a number of fine children under the care of the Society at present, waiting for some one to give them a chance in life.

COMMUNITY CLUB NOTES

Our last meeting was held Oct. 14, at the home of Mrs. W. E. W. Steen. Our new president, Mrs. C. May presided, the day was cloudy and wet but there was a goodly number of members present and a few visitors.

The hostess then served the dainty "Club Lunch", assisted by Mrs. N. McCracken, and we all departed for our several homes feeling that it was good to have been there.

The next meeting will be held Oct. 28, at the home of Mrs. H. Lee, at two o'clock sharp. Will every member please bring a needle and thimble and come prepared to sew;

A hard time party has been planned for Thursday evening, Oct. 29, at the home of Mrs. Harold Beattie, and every one is asked to come dressed accordingly. A fine will be imposed on any who transgress.

YORK COUNTY TEACHERS VISIT WINDSOR

Study Rotary System—See Jack Miner's Bird Sanctuary

By J. H. BEAMISH

Windsor, Oct. 10th—Six hundred teachers from the six inspectorates of York County, have been in annual convention here for the past three days. They usually hold their yearly conclave in Toronto or suburbs, but once in five years a long-distance trip is planned, and in the past such educational centres as Guelph, Hamilton, Ottawa and Buffalo have been visited.

About 500 came by special train from Toronto on Wednesday evening and these were supplemented by another 100 who motored. The principals and staffs were accompanied by Inspectors Jordan, Trench, Fydell and Gillies, their headquarters being at the Prince Edward and Norton Palmer Hotels.

During Thursday and Friday forenoon the visitors observed the larger schools of Walkerville and Windsor, while in regular session. The enrolment of these schools varies from 500 to 1400 and all are conducted on the Rotary plan. The pupils remain in their regular rooms for an hour-and-a-half in the forenoon and for about the same length of time in the afternoon, where instruction is given in the fundamental subjects—reading, writing, spelling, arithmetic and composition. During the other periods they move from room to room where are special facilities for the teaching of art, nature study, music, history, geography and novel courses in library and gymnasium work, each class visiting six of these special rooms daily.

Yesterday afternoon about 400 of the teachers were conveyed by a fleet of busses down to Kingsville, where they visited Jack Miner's world-famous wild goose farm and Bird Sanctuary. Here they had the honor of meeting "Jack" who proved himself to be a most delightful host, and an illuminating conversationalist—a veritable encyclopedia on Nature Study! To-day (Saturday), excursions are being made by groups of teachers to Detroit, where chief points of interest are visited in that wonderful city. This evening the pedagogues return to Toronto by special train, all being loud in their praise of the warm reception accorded them by the Principals of the Border Cities school.

'Twas a Gala Night At Old St. Andrew's

Minister Given Reception on his Return Home

On Oct. 16th the basement of the Old St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church was a place of beauty. The Young People's Society had full charge. The large Sunday school room was beautifully decorated. Plates were set for one hundred guests, salads, meat, coffee, cake and ice cream were there in abundance. There are still something remaining to remind us of the past. There were two rows of old fashioned candle holders on each table with candles lit. Congratulations, Young People, for this relic of the past. This Banquet was the last act in the competition for membership and attendance between the White and the Red roses. Floyd Marlatt was captain for the Red; Reg. Tucker for the White, Reg's side winning by a small margin.

When Floyd and his followers were preparing for the banquet, the losing side were supposed to give The winning side, like good sports that they are, asked to be allowed to join with them and make it a grand reunion to welcome our loved Minister, his wife and family, who had spent part of their holiday days, at their home in the Old Land. And also for the senior members, who for many years, had never been weary preparing for just such banquets.

They did not want them to think they were trying to supplant them, but just to show them how they appreciated their labor of love in the past and give them a holiday for one night.

There was a feeling of satisfaction by the senior members: (Perhaps not all joy) when they bid farwell to scenes like these where the great unknown awaits them. That this generation of young people can carry on the work of Old St. Andrew's Church as well as it has been done in years gone by.

We missed some who we know were on a bed of sickness. Their thoughts were with us and ours were with them. Many were missing who had passed away forever, who were always the life of meetings like this.

"Still o'er scenes like these our memory wakes
And fondly broods with miser care.
Time but the impression stronger makes
As streams their channels deaper wear."

The accompanists were:—for Mr. Holland. Mrs. Harry Cook, for Miss Willa Couse, Miss Clara Steen, and for Community singing, Miss Hollingshead.

Miss C. Woodr ff presided over the meeting in a charming manner, always saying the right things in the right place. All joined in the Toast to "Our King and Country," by singing "God Save The King," and "The Maple Leaf Forever."

Toast to the Church, proposed by John Weylie, responded to by Mr. McCree: Piano duet by the Misses Bailey; Solo, Willa Couse; Toast to our Honorary Guests, proposed by Miss Reba Weylie, responded to by Rev. Mr. and Mrs. McCree; Solo, Mr. Holland; Toast to winning side, proposed by Floyd Marlatt, responded to by Mrs. Maas; Solos, by Mr. Holland, all joining in the choruses, of the "Roaming in the Gloaming" and many other of Harry Lauders f vorites; Toast to the visitors, propose l by Mrs. Hal. Couse, responded to by Will Couse, Dr. Bowie, Eddie Wol , Thomas Wilson and D. McGregor. Community singing had a conspicious place throughout the programme, everyone joining in the old favorites, Nellie Gray, My Bonnie Lies Over the Ocean Loch Lomand. My Old Kentucky Home and many others.

Every speaker when rising to speak would be greeted with "See him Smiling Just Now." But when Mr. and Mrs. McCree rose to reply to the Toast, "Our Honourary Guests" all joined in singing "For They are Jolly Good Fellows" over and over again, it must have made our much-loved Minister and his wife glad to see every one so delighted to see them with us again.

Second Toast to Mr. and Mrs. McCree our Honorary Guests:
(Tune, "Will Ye no Come Back Again.")

We all wish to make it plain,
You are welcome back again,
On our faces you can see,
Better loved you cannot be.

Toast to the Senior members who were always active, but Guests to-night:

To Senior members we wil say,
Autumn now is served by May,
All of us feel great delight,
To show our love for you to-night.

In the closing number when all joined hands and sang "Should auld Acquaintance be Forgot and Never Brought to Mind," all were happy.

Then another chapter of pleasure in the basement of Old St. Andrew's Church was in the past.

SANDY

Trinity Church is Eighty-Eight Years Old

Will Celebrate Anniversary Next Sunday and Tuesday

Sunday last was Children's Day throughout the Church in Canada, which was honored by the S. S. marching from the hall to the Church, where they led in the singing, when a very hearty and helpful service was held.

At 7 Mr. Thos. McDuff Copeland sang with great effect "Nearer My God To Thee," "Oh Love That Will Not Let Me Go," and "Lead Kindly Light."

On Friday evening the Wardens, Messrs. James E. Bailey and J. C. Crozier and their wives gave a supper to the choir in grateful recognition of their splendid service and hearty co-operation in always making our services bright, devotional and reverent. The choir, overcome by the good will expressed and by the lavish abundance of good things, one and all expressed their deep appreciation to their generous hosts.

The 88th anniversary of the erection of the present Church will be fittingly commemorated Sunday next, at all services. According to records in the Synod offices, the church was erected in 1843. Although there is no record of a former Church building, yet there must have been an enthusiastic and active body of people several years before to bring into being a Church building so commodious and so well made as to stand unimpaired the wear and tear of almost a century.

Services will be held on Sunday next as follows:
8. a.m. Holy Communion.
10.a.m. Sunday School.
11 a.m. Morning Prayer.
7 p.m. Evening Prayer.

We hope all former and present friends will join with us in grateful and humble thanksgiving for God's many blessings.

The Rev. David Cornish of Port Dover, a Trinity boy who entered the ministry of the church, will be the special preacher.

The annual Fowl Supper and entertainment will (D. V.) take place on Tuesday evening in the Parish Hall.

The supper will be served from 6.-15 p.m. Entertainment 8.30 p.m. A splendid program will be rendered by a Male Quartette, under Mr. W. E. Capps, which is always so much appreciated, and by Mrs. W. H. Brydon, also well-known as an effective singer; accompanist, Mrs. W. G. Fulton. The Young People are putting on a short play, which promises to have the usual appeal. Admission 50c. for adults, and 25c. under 12 years.

October Letter

Bring with you, for me to have, a spray of sweet-olive,
Or one of the leaves that fall from your fig tree by the door.
There was a yucca tree by the door, I remember,
With flowers of moonlight—
You cannot pluck moonlight to bring in your pocket!
And acorn would do, or a burr, or a stone;
Or a pink leaf from the wild grape.

Has the frost left my dahlias untaken?
Have any new dahlias bloomed since that day?
You gathered the dahlias for me that day and laid them in my arms
As if heaped rainows were laid in my arms.
So I think are the colors of yourself you have given me to hold.

ISSUE No. 43—'31

Science Aims To Eradicate "Why"

Science aims at making the world—nature and man—intelligible, declared Sir Arthur Thomson in a recent address. Religion in its intellectual aspects seeks to show that the world is reasonable. Science is descriptive, while religion is interpretive.

Science gives empirical verifiable answers to the questions: What is this? How does it persist in its state of being? Whence came it. Whither is it moving? What? How? Whence? and, perhaps, Whither? But science never asks why?

It seeks after formulations or laws which enable us to say: "If this, then that." It never explains in terms of purpose, or deep-down meaning. Science is necessarily an abstract or partial kind of knowledge.

Religion on its intellectual side is cognate to philosophy—it is the layman's philosophy. It always implies something spiritual, something beyond ordinary experience.

Science describes in terms of lowest common denominators, such as electrons and protons, protoplasm and mind but religion interprets in terms of the greatest common measure.

If religion is to interpret the world and man, it is of obvious importance that it should deal with the facts of the case. But science is always giving us a new world—Copenican, Newtonian, Darwinian, Einsteinian, and so forth. Thus it is an unending task of religion to adjust its interpretation to the new world; and it is often hazardous to put new wine into old skins. . . .

Science seeks primarily for understanding but it also seeks, less directly, no doubt, to remove evils and increase good.

Grasshopper Mice Devour Cockroaches

A kind of mouse which might earn its keep usefully around houses by killing cockroaches and other obnoxious insects is described by Dr. Vernon Bailey, Chief Naturalist of the United States Biological Survey in a recent communication to the American Nature Association of Washington, D.C. It is the grasshopper mouse or scorpion mouse, a variety of small field mouse of the western part of the United States. The common names of this mouse come, as would be expected, from the animal's habit of eating insects, grasshoppers being preferred, but scorpions, crickets, beetles or almost any other insect being accepted if grasshoppers are scarce. On one occasion, Dr. Bailey states, his house was invaded by cockroaches which had got a foothold in the basement and kitchen. A pair of the grasshopper mice happened to be on hand for scientific study, so Dr. Bailey placed the cage containing these mice in the kitchen one night, closed the kitchen doors and windows and opened the cage. Next morning both mice were found fast asleep in their nest in the cage, with hundreds of loose cockroach legs scattered around the edges of the kitchen to show that the night had not been idle. Repeating this for a few nights ridded the kitchen of the insects. The two mice were then left loose in the basement, provided with ample water and with vegetable food. Preferring insect food, however, the two mice soon cleaned up the cockroach invasion of the basement as they had that of the kitchen. Grasshopper mice are fearless fighters against insects or other small animals.

To a Late Bird Singing

Now I will never chide a bird
To wake from sleep with dreams undone,
Lend me your spill of morning-tunes
I'll flaunt my dream with any one.

With echoes through the livelong day—
But there are waiting trysts to keep;
Now when a bird will lift as high
Across the well from day to sleep.

Why may I not forsake his song
But listen as my pulses chime—
If cheerful birds at twilight sing
When shall I find my grieving time?
—Eleanor O'Rourke Koenig, in "Two On An Old Pathway."

Beauty

A thing of beauty is a joy for ever;
Its loveliness increases; it will never Pass into nothingness; but still will keep
A bower quiet for us, and a sleep
Full of sweet dreams and health, and quiet breathing.
—Keats.

THE

TULE MARSH MURDER

STORY OF A MISSING ACTRESS AND THE TAXING OF WITS TO EXPLAIN HER FATE.

BY NANCY BARR MAVITY.

SYNOPSIS

Don Ellsworth's wife, formerly the actress Sheila O'Shay, disappears. Dr. Cavanaugh, criminal psychologist, learns that their married life has been very unhappy.

Peter Piper, a Herald reporter, while trying to interview Dr. Cavanaugh meets Barbara Cavanaugh, and finds that she was engaged to Don Ellsworth before his marriage.

Dr. Cavanaugh identifies the burned remains of a body as that of Sheila O'Shay, and Barbara faints when she hears this. Peter climbs the porch of the Ellsworth home and finds Dr. Cavanaugh in Sheila's boudoir, and is invited in. They find the breach of promise papers with which Sheila forced Ellsworth to marry her, have been taken from the safe. But they find something else.

CHAPTER XXVII.

Dr. Cavanaugh finished his righting of the overturned chair. Then he reached deliberately for the sheet of paper, holding it gingerly by the edges.

"No use gumming up the fingerprints," he observed. Camberwell's very fond of nice fingerprints."

He laid the sheet of paper face upward on the dressing table, securing each corner with one of the toilet articles for a paperweight.

"It's your find, young man. Come and have a look."

Together the two men bent over the flattened pages.

"Dear Sheila," it read, "I've found you out. You sentenced me to a sojourn in hell, such, as you would neither understand nor care about. Did you ever in all your life, I wonder, care about anything but your own desires? You've attained them every time, those desires, riding roughshod over all who opposed you. You've used everything you have—your beauty, your terrible charm (yes, it is terrible, Sheila; even I, who know you well enough to hate you, feel it even yet)—for your own purposes, destroying others along the way. But you, who have destroyed others, may yet be destroyed by the very forces you have raised. There are things that not even you can manage. I have come to myself at last, and you have me to reckon with. You'd better arrange to see me at the earliest opportunity.

"DAVID ORME."

"H'm!" the doctor's deep bumblebee hum broke the silence as he straightened from his leaning position over the dressing table. "What do you think of that, Peter?"

"It's a brand new angle—thank heaven!" Peter exclaimed.

"You needed a new angle?"

"I did," Peter agreed emphatically. A new angle—and one with which Barbara, at least, had nothing to do! "It's a threat, obviously. Who's David Orme?"

"Precisely. Who is David Orme? It's going to be somebody's business to find that out."

"It might be an alias, of course," Peter suggested.

"I hardly think so. The writer of that letter expected Sheila O'Shay to know who he was."

"Yes," Peter broke in eagerly, "and that handwriting doesn't look as if it were disguised, does it? It's a bit shaky, but quite natural and flowing."

"I'm not a handwriting expert, but I'm inclined to think you're right, Camberwell, of course, can tell. Taking it at face value, it's the writing of an educated man—the letters are very small, for one thing, and there's the Greek 'e' and the final 'd's'. While an educated man might try to imitate the handwriting of one who was almost illiterate, the reverse would hardly be feasible."

"There's the choice of words, too. 'Attained your desires.' Nothing roughneck about that—and yet it's not exactly stilted, as if he were trying to talk big. Gee, this begins to look good!" Peter was rocking back and forth on his toes with suppressed excitement.

The doctor reached absent-mindedly for a cigar, and then regretfully thrust it back into his case.

"Too bad," he murmured, "but we can't leave a lot of smoke about. I'll have to tell you again, young man, that you've a good mind for seizing significant points. Perhaps you noticed also the choice of ideas. That is a threatening letter, yes; but it goes in for what are called glittering generalities. The writer was thinking more about his own feelings than about any definite plan of action. He's what we psychologists call an introvert. There's the double parenthesis, too—correctly punctuated, by the way. His mind wound in and out among his emotions. He couldn't resist that bit about her 'terrible charm.' Unfortunately, though we know all this about his insides, there's not much of a clue by which to pick him out on the street."

"What about the envelope?"

Peter grovelled a moment on hands and knees and retrieved the envelope where it had fallen under the telephone stand. This time he was careful to touch it only at the edges. "It wasn't posted at all," he said disappointedly. "Delivered by hand. Still, this is sort of funny, isn't it?"

The envelope, which he laid on the table beside the letter, was addressed in a single line: "Sheila O'Shay (Ellsworth)."

"A regular demon for parenthesis, that bird. Now what do you suppose he put that one in for?"

"If he were being facetious, I'd say he was imitating the newspapers. You wouldn't say, now, that this letter was written by a newspaper reporter gone wrong?"

Pete looked as startled as if a gun had suddenly been pointed at him, barrel foremost.

"I certainly wouldn't," he said sharply.

"There! You see how careful we must be not to jump to conclusions. Even you, who had nothing whatever to do with it, looked momentarily guilty when confronted with a suggestion which seemed to come home to you. You are not David Orme, but you remembered that you had expressed a rather extreme dislike for the lady in the case."

"I never saw her in my life!" Peter protested.

"I know you didn't," Dr. Cavanaugh said soothingly. "But I wanted to warn you to be very cautious about theorizing. The race is not always to the swift—they sometimes race in the wrong direction. By the way, did you happen to notice the pages of the directory where the letter was thrust?"

"I'm afraid I didn't," Peter admitted. "I ought to have told you and let you take it out yourself. I just didn't think! It was somewhere near the front of the book—that's all I remember."

"Well, don't worry. It can't be helped. It just gives the police a chance to exercise their own wits instead of ours."

"I'm sure it wasn't as far back as the 'O's'," Peter said dejectedly. "And yet it was stuck in with the edge just a little beyond the margin, as if to mark the place. I don't think she had any idea of hiding it there."

"No. She wasn't hiding it. Mr. Orme, whoever he may be, wouldn't be in the telephone book anyhow. If he were, he'd have telephoned probably instead of writing—and he wouldn't have 'found her out' at this late day if he were living in the same town with her. She was rather a public character, you know. But she might have known how to get in touch with him through someone else. They may have met since that letter was written, for all we know."

"I'm awful sorry," said the crestfallen Peter. "I've made an awful mess of it."

"On the contrary, you found the letter, which may be important evidence and is certainly well worth looking into. It is your . . er, scoop."

"You mean I can have it for the asking?" Peter beamed.

"Hardly that—you forget Mr. Camberwell's penchant for fingerprints. Besides, your enterprise in getting it at all might not be appreciated by the police department. But I see no objection to your making a copy, if you think your editor would like it—you've certainly earned that much."

"Like it!" Peter was already scribbling frantically with a stubby black pencil on a sheet of copy paper snatched from his coat pocket. "I'll say he'll like it."

"I shall tell Camberwell that you assisted me in my unofficial inquiry," the doctor said. "That will allay his curiosity—and there's no reason that I can see why we should try to keep the letter secret. If it was written by the criminal, he'll expect it to be found sooner or later. And when the police begin to look for him, he'll be a very poor criminal indeed if he isn't aware of their efforts. I'm beginning to take a personal interest in the news-gathering projects of the 'Herald'."

"It'll make the 'city' edition," Peter sighed happily. Suddenly his pencil paused in mid-air. "Here's another thing," he said. "That letter was written on cheap paper—almost as poor as this stuff in my pocket. It would hardly take the ink. And yet it was written with a good smooth pen point. It must have been fountain pen ink, or it would have blurred more than it did. Unless the paper is a blind—and the only apparent blind about the whole business—this Orme person carries an excellent fountain pen, but is reduced to the cheapest possible kind of paper. Gee, I'm beginning to find him interesting!"

"So am I," said Dr. Cavanaugh.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

'Well, look what the cat brought in!" Jimmy, who prided himself on being the first of the Herald editorial staff to arrive in the morning, had signaled the freight elevator as usual in the gray light of a 6 o'clock dawn, swung around the jutting corner of the photographers' dark-room—and was brought up short in his headlong progress across the local room by the sight of Peter hunched over his typewriter, the light from a battered green shaded desk lamp outlining a harsh circle about his slouching shoulders.

A Hen With Its Own Incubator

(The N.Y. Times)

The leipoa, the bird that is credited with having invented the incubator, is becoming rare. Once widespread through Southern Australia, where it is known as the mallee hen, it has dwindled in numbers as its eggs have been devoured by foxes, iguanas and aborigines. In Victoria its only refuge is the sanctuary known as Wonga Park.

The mallee hen is about two feet long from head to tail tip and has dotted plumage of black, brown, white and gray, strong legs, large feet and a short crest. Unlike turtles and certain bird species that lay eggs in hastily scratched holes, it builds its incubator with a constructive skill approaching that of a beaver.

In June males and females begin making a mound, sometimes nearly 50 feet in circumference and 3 feet high, in which the eggs are to be deposited five months later. Using both feet and wings for scraping, the birds clear out a depression, deepen it somewhat and line it with sand. Then they fill it with leaves and rubbish, leaving this to be saturated by the Spring rains of October. Later they cover the heap with sand, so that the temperature within may rise as the vegetable matter decays.

In November the warm mound is scratched open and the hen deposits her eggs, placed upright on the smaller end, in pyramid layers separated by sand. She lays every third day, opening and closing the mound each time, until from eight to twenty-three eggs have been deposited.

The new chicks, emerging from the top of the eggs, are strong enough to scratch their way through the sand to the surface on their first day; they can even run and fly a little. Thus the mallee hen avoids not only the necessity of sitting on its eggs but also the need of guiding its young in its first contact with the world.

When You CAN'T QUIT

Fatigue is the signal to rest. Obey it if you can. When you can't, keep cool and carry-on in comfort.

Aspirin was meant for just such times, for it insures your comfort. Freedom from those pains that nag at nerves and wear you down. One tablet will block that threatening headache while it is still just a threat. Take two or three tablets when you've caught a cold, and that's usually the end of it.

Carry Aspirin tablets when you travel. Have some at home and keep some at the office. Like an efficient secretary, they will often "save the day" and spare you many uncomfortable, unproductive hours. Aspirin is harmless, so keep it handy, keep it in mind, and use it. No man of affairs can afford to ignore the score and more of uses explained in the proven directions. From a grumbling tooth to those rheumatic pains which seem almost to bend the bones, Aspirin tablets are ready with quick relief—and always work. Neuralgia. Neuritis. Any nagging, needless pain.

Get the genuine tablets, stamped with the Bayer cross. They are of perfect purity, absolute uniformity, and have the same action every time. Why experiment with imitations costing a few cents less? The saving is too little. There is too much at stake. But there is economy in the purchase of genuine Aspirin tablets in the large bottles.

THE SAVING GRACE

By Edward Woodward

"I am indulgent father, aware of the claims of youth," I said, regarding my daughter Ethel across the breakfast table.

"Marmalade, please, Mums," remarked Ethel, who is in the twenty-first year of her superiority.

"But," I persevered, removing the top from my lightly-boiled egg with the air of Mr. Justice Avory summing up, "I consider a metropolitan race meeting no place for a delicately-nurtured girl of your age on a Saturday afternoon."

"Bob ought to know better than take you," supported Agnes, my wife.

"Bob knows better than not to," smiled Ethel.

Bob is the young hot-head who dreams of leading my daughter to the altar. He possesses good looks and a racing car, so Ethel permits him to dream.

"Undesirables frequent such places and win other people's money," I continued.

"If they're lucky," retorted Ethel, and, lighting a cigarette, she picked the morning paper from the table at my side. "I shall back Paterfamilias for the three o'clock. He should bring home the washing."

I hate to have the morning paper second-hand. It annoyed me.

"Young woman," I said, "you have no sense of the gravity of life. When you were a tot—"

"Now," interrupted Ethel, "we come to the part about the youth of today never having heard shells fired in anger. Take it as said, old hero; I'm off."

She departed like the passing of a breeze. My wife sighed.

"I was hoping Ethel would accompany me to the Women's Institute Fete this afternoon," she said. "She was asked to take charge of the Fishing Pool."

"What's the fishing pool?" I asked.

"People pay a penny and try to catch an electric fish with a magnetic pin on the end of a line. If they succeed they get a prize."

"More gambling," I said, feelingly, owing to my having suffered considerable disappointment over a Derby Sweep.

"It has the saving grace of charity," said Agnes. "What shall you do with yourself this afternoon?"

"Amuse myself intellectually," I answered, somewhat tersely.

I had to visit the bank that morning, and there I met Stewart, of the Stock Exchange. He was dressed for holiday.

"Where are you going?" I asked.

"Hurst Park," he replied, with a grin.

"Didn't know you were a racing man."

"I'm not. I go for distraction and to study human nature." And Stewart moved off.

The idea of an astute business man going to a race meeting interested me; and when, reaching the station to take my train home, I observed several well-dressed people booking for Hurst Park, I decided on the spur of the moment to ascertain at first hand just what the attraction was. Agnes would be out, and so there was a good excuse for avoiding a solitary afternoon.

Never having been to a race meeting, and wishing to get the best view of the proceedings, I went into the most expensive enclosure open to the public; and as the crowd seemed very friendly amongst themselves, I soon felt lonely. I was, therefore, rather pleased when a well-turned-out gentleman came up to me and extended his hand.

"Well, I'm hanged!" he said, with effusion. "If it isn't dear old—Dash it, what is your name?"

"Carter," I said, taking his extended hand, considerably startled by his jovial manner.

"Of course! Of course! I can see you don't remember me. . . . Long time since the war. . . . 'xpect I look a bit different in mufti."

I still could not place him.

"Where was it?" I asked.

"Now guess!" There was a roguish twinkle in his eye.

"Bapaume?" I ventured.

"Guess again."

"Pop?"

"Got it," laughed the old comrade. "Major in the Worcesters, weren't you?"

"Captain in the Warwicks," I corrected.

"That's right. Don't you recall me, Major Webster. . . . Brigade Staff, you know. . . . Ha, ha! Of course you do, Carter, my boy Come along and let's have a drink. . . . Splendid to see you again."

I felt happy at this reunion with a man with whom I had apparently fought shoulder to shoulder, but whose name and face had been washed from my memory by the hard ships of peace.

"Well," said Major Webster, when a drink had put us in easy humour. "What are you backing for the three o'clock?"

"I didn't intend—" I began.

"Nonsense," chortled Webster. "The only excuse for coming to Hurst on a Saturday afternoon is the chance of making a bit on an outsider. I'm going to make all my week's exes and a bit for charity on Argosy. . . . Have a cigar."

"Can he run fast? I asked, accepting the smoke.

"Fast enough for my purpose," laughed Webster. "You see, Carter, my friend, a man in my position has to support a good many charities, and so I just have to take a chance in these hard times. Keep a bit of sugar for the bird and pass on a percentage to a deserving cause. . . . See what I mean?"

The excitement of my surroundings affected me. I thought of my wife's remark about the Fishing Pool gamble having the saving grace of charity; she was touching me for a fat donation, and, well—

"How much are you putting on? I asked.

"Twenty pounds as he's such a snip," said Webster.

"Suppose the horse loses?" I exclaimed.

"Suppose nothing of the sort," retorted Webster. "If you want to make a bit for yourself and do your local hospital a bit of good, follow my lead. Twenty quid will bring you two hundred; fifty for the sick, and a hundred and fifty for yourself."

Now I knew why the astute Stewart came to Hurst, and how Ethel managed to cut the dash she did on the small—but quite adequate—allowance I made her. I opened my note-case, and took out twenty one-pound notes, drawn from the bank that morning.

"Wise chap," said Webster. "Let's go for the Tote. Time's getting short."

There was a seething mass of humanity round the Tote.

"Here," said Webster, quickly, "give me the cash, I'm known here, and I'll get it on through the Member's 'trap.' . . . Meet me here after the race, and draw your winnings."

Feeling grateful to my old comrade-in-arms, I made my way to the stand and watched the race. I missed nothing from the start until the moment when Paterfamilias came cantering in far ahead of any of the other horses. Argosy appeared to have other business down the course.

I felt disgusted and disheartened. I felt vexed with Webster, and decided to go home without seeing him again. There was a train at three-thirty-five.

I felt for my watch. It wasn't there!

I put my hands in my pockets. They were empty!

My note-case had also vanished.

I hurried to the Tote to find Webster. He was not there, either.

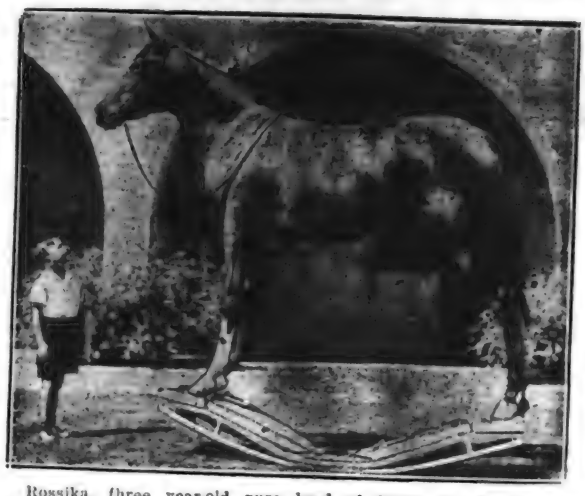
Then I knew I'd been stung; and was wondering how on earth I should get home, when a clear young voice sounded in my ear.

"Holy smoke! Here's Pa!"

I turned and faced my daughter and her young man.

"I came to ascertain whether this place was a fit resort for you," I explained with what dignity I could assume. "It's a sink! I've been robbed!"

Ethel's clear eyes rested on the spot where my watch-chain ought to have been, and she gave a gurgle of amusement.



"Bob, my cherub," she cried. "Poor Pa has been raided."

With much mortification I recounted the story of my reunion with the "old comrade"; and Ethel and Bob enjoyed every word of it.

"Never mind, my lamb," said Ethel. "You're with true friends now. We put our undies on Paterfamilias and are rolling in the doings. Mums shall never know you've been human for once. Come and have some tea."

She led the way to the buffet with her easy care-free stride, and, following humbly in the rear, I knew exactly what my daughter was. She was the Saving Grace of Charity!—Tit-Bits.

Mission of Flowers

Why has the beneficent Creator scattered over the face of the earth such a profusion of beautiful flowers? Why is it that every landscape has its appropriate flowers, every nation has its national flowers, every rural home its home flowers? Why do flowers enter and shed their perfume over every scene of life, from the cradle to the grave? Why are flowers made to utter all voices of joy and sorrow in varying scenes? It is that flowers have in themselves a real and natural significance; they have a positive relation to many; they correspond to actual emotions; they have their mission—a mission of love and mercy; they have their language, and from the remotest ages this language has found its interpreters. —Henrietta Dumont.

Twilight Hour

'Tis a perfect hour.
From founts of dawn the fluent autumn day
Has rippled as a brook right pleasantly
Half-way to noon; but now with widening turn
Makes pause, in lucent meditation locked,
And rounds into a silver pool of morn.
Bottom'd with clovre-fields. My heart just hears
Eight lingering strokes of some far village bell.
That speak the hour so inward-voiced, meseems
Time's conscience has but whispered him eight hints
Of revolution. Reigns that mild surcease
That stills the middle of each rural morn—
When nimble noises that with sunrise ran
About the farms have sunk again to rest;
When Tom no more across the horse-lot calls
To sleepy Dick, nor Dick husk-voiced upbraids
The sway-back'd roan for stamping on his foot . . .
And, kitchenward, the rattling bucket plumps
Souse down the well, where quivering ducks quack loud
And Susan Cook is singing.

A Conquest

It is the consciousness of the identity of that which is realizing itself within and without us—the consciousness that the necessity which is the precondition of our freedom is the manifestation of the very principle that makes us free—that turns morality into religion. For it is this alone which enables us to regard the realization of the highest ends of human life neither as a happy accident, nor as a conquest to be won by the cunning of man from an unfriendly or indifferent destiny, but as the result towards which all things are working.—Caird.

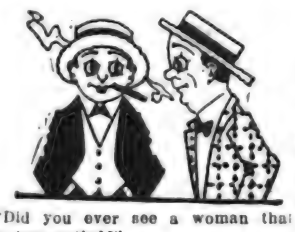
She planted herself firmly in front of him and gritted her teeth.



"Henry," she snapped, "you thought I didn't see you, but I did. You kissed the maid."

He paled.

"But, darling, you asked me to try to persuade her to stay another week."

Her attitude changed at once.

"Oh, Henry, tell me quick—did she promise to stay?" she asked.

"Did you ever see a woman that was tongue-tied?"

"No, but I've seen lots of them that ought to be."

Sunday School Lesson

October 25. Lesson IV—Paul in Corinth—Acts 18: 1-11. Golden Text—Now abideth faith, hope, charity, these three: and the greatest of these is charity.—1 Corinthians 13: 13.

ANALYSIS

I. DEPRESSED, Acts 18: 1-4.
II. BUOYANT, Acts 18: 5-11.
III. THE WAY OF LOVE, 1 Cor. Chap 13.

INTRODUCTION—From Berea Paul made his way to Athens, the ancient intellectual capital of the world, a city filled with the treasures of art and learning. Romans came there to "finish their education." Everything was discussed there, but with no great seriousness. It was poor soil for a gospel of intense earnestness. Paul was disappointed, perhaps disillusioned there. He withdrew and came to Corinth.

I. DEPRESSED, Acts 18: 1-4.

Paul was a man of emotional nature, subject to moods of great exaltation and equally great depression, sensitive to environment, and with a great yearning for companionship. He entered Corinth alone. Silas and Timothy had not yet arrived. He was then passing through probably some of the darkest days of his life. He preached, he said, "in bodily weakness, and fear and much trembling," (1 Cor. 2: 3; "without were fightings, within were fears," 2 Cor. 7: 5. The "care of all the churches" was upon him.) Evidently some bodily illness overtook him, probably an attack of his "stake in the flesh."

It was also a time when a despondent view of his whole mission was almost inevitable. Ever since he crossed over to Macedonia—until he came to his little room in Corinth he had been having trouble, disappointment, danger. . . . Prison in Philippi, riots in Thessalonica, a hurried escape from Berea, laughed at in Athens, and now the loneliness of this great and wicked city. It would all depress men less emotional than Paul.

Lodging with an exiled fellow-countryman and fellow-craftsman, Paul went to work at his trade. Aquilla and Priscilla meet us again in Ephesus (1 Cor. 16: 19), then in Rome (Rom. 16: 3-5). On the Sabbath days Paul "reasoned" in the synagogue and "persuaded" some. Everywhere there is a sense of strain and difficulty and depression. But in those dark days Paul gave himself to the common duty that lay at hand. It kept him from brooding over his troubles. Like Spurgeon and Frederick Robertson, men similar in temperament, he fought through these moods and did the best he could.

II. BUOYANT, Acts 18: 5-11.

The arrival of Silas and Timothy (v. 5) completely dispelled the cloud under which Paul was working. It was the companionship and support of friends who knew him and believed in him that worked the miracle. Then, when they took him aside and told him the good news from Thessalonica (1 Thess. chap 1) his cup of joy was full. They helped him to believe in himself again, to believe again in the power of God. "On all occasions two missionaries should go together," said James Gilmour of Mongolia. The one strengthens and encourages the other. Besides the good news, there was the gift of money from Philippi (2 Cor. 11: 9). Now, free from financial worries, Paul could give his whole time to his mission. Like all men, he could do his best work only when untroubled over money matters.

Immediately he changed his preaching method. He now began to "testify" (v. 5) to the goodness of God in Christ. He was "pressed in the spirit," that is, impelled by an inner urge to share with others. "What about the so-called Christians," Alexander MacLaren asks, "who have no desire to share?" They are like the vessel that does not run over—because it is half empty.

Such preaching produced the usual results: enthusiastic followers and bitter hostility. Again Paul was compelled to turn from the Jews to the more receptive Gentiles. He began to hold his meetings in a house hard by the synagogue. The Gentile Corinthians attended in large numbers and many of them embraced Christianity. The conversion of Crispus and his family (v. 8) must have led to increased hostility. Paul evidently began to wonder if he had not better move on again. But in a dream the Lord helped him to see the silver lining of the cloud, vs. 9, 10. Thus encouraged, he stayed for eighteen months "teaching the word of God" among them, v. 11. His main work was instructing the crowds of somewhat undisciplined and unruly Corinthians who were flocking into the church.

III. THE WAY OF LOVE, 1 Cor. Chap 13.

Paul's letter to the Corinthians throws much light upon the characteristics of the Greek people. "Greece has always been noted for division, faction, rivalry of parties!" Paul found these faults in the Corinthian church. Some had emotional gifts, for example, the "gift of tongues"; others had intellectual gifts; others practical gifts—a great capacity for church and philanthropic work. But eloquence, cleverness, church activities are not infrequently substitutes for Christianity. Unless love is the heart, all these are nothing. Love is the great power which welds humanity into one brotherhood.

Students at the University of Edinburgh have voted to wear red gowns hereafter instead of the traditional black.

Man is not the creature of circumstances. Circumstances are the creatures of men.—Benjamin Disraeli.

What New York Is Wearing

BY ANNEBELLE WORTHINGTON

Illustrated Dressmaking Lesson Furnished With Every Pattern

The redingote has already enjoyed much popularity and Paris doesn't mean to let this becoming style drop by the wayside. So she has designed this smart dress to simulate a redingote.

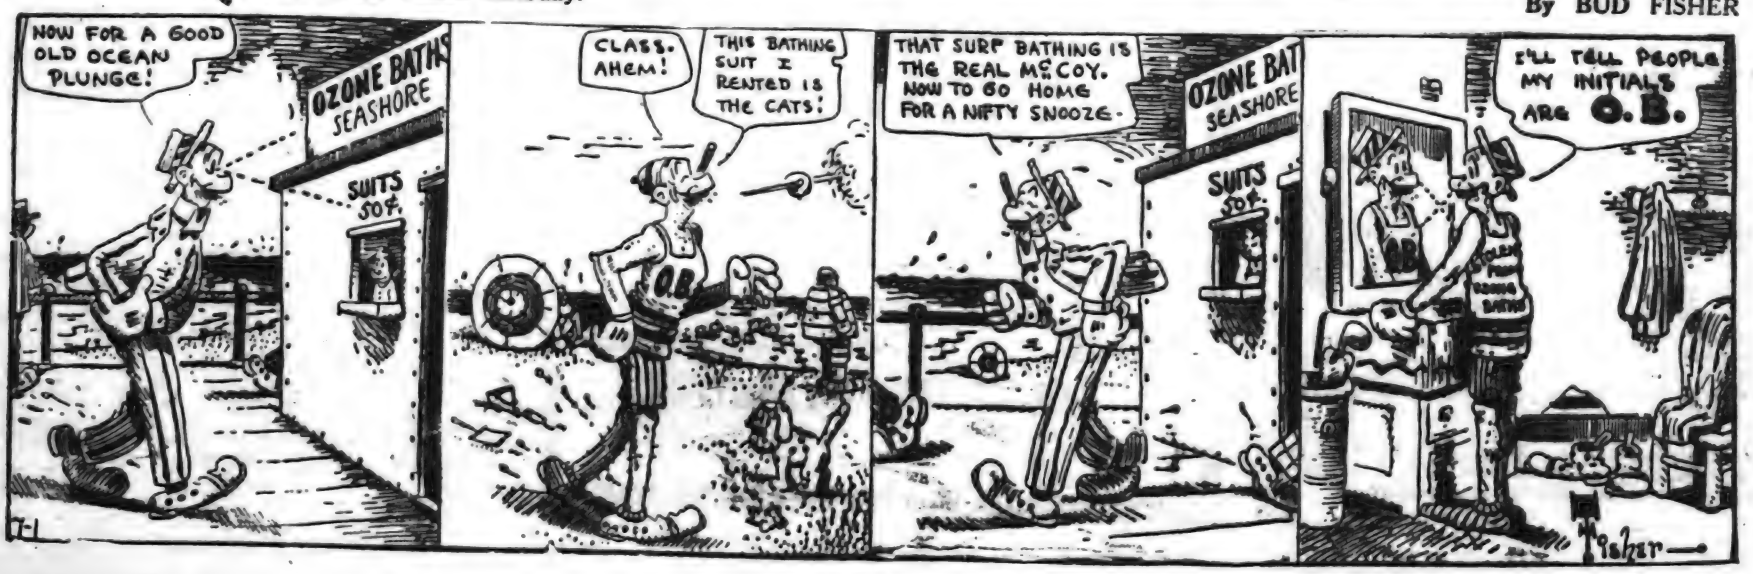
It's just the sort of dress smart women feel so happy in for early fall wear.

Today's model is especially designed to give the heavier figure slimness and grace. The softly falling one-sided jabot rever combines with the plaited skirt inset to give a lengthened effect. The curved seaming and drape of the skirt yoke, help immensely toward disguising hip bulk.

It can be carried out nicely in plain and printed sheer worsted.

Style No. 3155 is designed for sizes 36, 38, 40, 42, 44, 46, 48 and 50 inches bust measure.

Size 36 requires 3½ yards of 39-inch material with 1 yard of 35-inch contrasting.



It is also very smart made of black crepe satin with the rever made of white satin crepe.

Castoria corrects CHILDREN'S ailments

WHAT a relief and satisfaction it is for mothers to know that there is always Castoria to depend on when babies get fretful and uncomfortable! Whether it's teething, colic or other little upset, Castoria always brings quick comfort; and, with relief from pain, restful sleep.

And when older, fast-growing children get out of sorts and out of condition, you have only to give a more liberal dose of this pure vegetable preparation to right the disturbed condition quickly.

Because Castoria is made expressly for children, it has just the needed mildness of action. Yet you can always depend on it to be effective. It is almost certain to clear up any minor ailment and cannot possibly do the youngest child the slightest harm. So it's the first thing to think of when a child has a coated tongue, is fretful and out of sorts. Be sure to get the genuine; with Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the package.

This is Education Week Throughout the Province

Teachers Want You to Know What Work They are Doing

EDUCATION WEEK

To all interested in Education:

Throughout the province of Ontario and with the co-operation of the Prime Minister, a campaign is being carried on this week of mutual benefit to school and home. Do you know what is being taught Why are your children coming to school? What opportunities does a modern education offer? We want you to know; we want your co-operation, and we wish to assure you of our whole-hearted interest in the future of your boys and girls.

May I first present an outline of the school system of Ontario:

(A) Elementary Schools (graded and ungraded).

1. The Public School (including Kindergarten in most).

2. Special Auxiliary Schools for under-privileged pupils.

3. Forest Schools for the physically delicate.

4. Railway-car Schools in the far North.

(B) Junior Vocational Schools (a few, to determine what the pupil is best fitted for, one to two years' course).

(C) Secondary Schools.

1. Continuation Schools for matriculation (two to four years).

2. High Schools, urban and rural (four to five years).

3. Collegiate Institutes, same as High Schools, but with superior facilities.

4. Vocational, Technical and Art Schools.

(a) Agriculture, e.g. Ridgetown, Ont.

(b) Commercial, e.g. High School of Commerce, Toronto, Ontario.

(c) Mining, e.g. Sudbury School.

(d) Industrial, e.g. Bowmanville.

In these schools 50% of the work is academic, as in High Schools.

5. Composite School with Collegiate and Vocational, e.g. St. Catharines.

(D) Special School, Deaf, Blind, etc. e.g. Brantford.

(E) Universities, e.g. Toronto, Queens, McMaster, etc.

(F) Training Schools for teachers, etc. e.g. O.C.E., Toronto.

Streetsville has a four-year course (rural High School) for matriculation and entrance to Normal. In addition good positions in business, library, hospital and trades are open to those completing the High School course. Matriculation is necessary for the following professions: Medicine, Dentistry, Nursing, Pharmacy, Veterinary, Clergy, Law, High School Teaching and many civil service and agricultural positions. The several provincial Universities offer specialized training of from three to seven years in the above professions.

High School Course, Subjects, etc.

To enter a High School a pupil must first have covered the Public School course and obtained his entrance certificate.

The first two years are known as Lower School in which the following subjects are taken each year: Arithmetic, Physiography, Zoology, Botany, Art, Geography, British History and Grammar. These are all final. The other subjects taken are not finals till Middle School, which is also of two years length; namely, Algebra, Geometry, Physics, Chemistry, Latin, French, Canadian History, Ancient History, English Literature and Composition. Upper School work is a continuation of most of the work of Middle School and corresponds to first year University. Our High School offers complete Junior Matriculation and entrance to Normal, and also the English, Upper School.

The work is in charge of thoroughly competent and experienced teachers, who co-operate for the best interests of the school. Mr. H. W. Gerhart teaches the Mathematics and Science subjects; Miss B. Cliff has the English, Art, Geography and some History and French; and the Principal has the Languages and two Histories.

In addition to preparing your children for the examinations, set by the Department of Education we aim to teach them how to work, to have an appreciation for good reading, to be artistic and to co-operate in work and play. The Athletic, Dramatic and Literary Society's activities are coached and directed. The Literary Society issues a monthly paper, holds monthly meetings, finances athletics, finances dramatics, and sponsors the Commencement Day program and other programs.

The school is limited in its work by lack of an assembly hall, gymnasium and lunch room. The laboratory, sanitary and lighting facilities are very inadequate, but in spite of those handicaps the work this year is progressing splendidly. A new school would be a boon to the community, a common meeting place for clubs, and an institution in keeping with the facilities offered in adjoining municipalities.

Our attendance has increased 10% over last year—there are few absents and lates, and in most cases the wholesome attitude to regular study should result in a good showing on the term reports.

From 'High School Regulations'

Sec. 10 (a) A pupil shall attend punctually and regularly.

(b) He shall be neat and clean in his person and habits, diligent in his studies, kind and courteous to his fellow pupils, obedient and respectful to the teachers.

(c) A pupil shall be responsible to the Principal for his conduct on school premises and on the way to and from school except when accompanied by a parent.

Sec. 5 (a) It shall be the duty of the Principal to suspend any pupil guilty of truancy, of persistent opposition to authority, neglect of duty, and use of improper language or conduct injurious to the moral tone of the school.

We wish the co-operation of all parents in observing these regulations.

Respectfully submitted,
C. P. McARTHUR, Principal.

EDUCATION WEEK AND ITS PURPOSE

By A. S. Zavitz, B.A., Peterboro' Collegiate, President of the Ontario Secondary School Teachers' Federation

The Ontario Secondary School Teachers' Federation, following the example of Great Britain, of the United States, and of other Provinces of our Dominion, have introduced in Ontario what is known as Education Week. It was felt that with the numerous changes that have taken place in recent years in our educational system, some opportunity such as this was needed to keep the general public informed in regard to what is actually going on in the schools of to-day.

No definite program is being outlined, the thought being that each locality might feel entirely free to make arrangements to suit its own local needs. The movement is gaining momentum, but the co-operation is needed of all those interested in the task of making the best citizens of our boys and girls, if Education Week is to be a real success throughout the Province.

EDUCATION IN DEMOCRACY

(By Sir Robert A. Falconer, President of the University of Toronto)

I thoroughly agree with the statement put forth, under the auspices of the Ontario Secondary School Teachers' Federation, that, in an enlightened democracy, public opinion should be the basis of all public effort, and therefore that it is desirable to rouse and deepen public interest so that support may be given to educational advancement. Probably we take for granted too often that public interest in the development of education may be maintained or furthered of its own accord.

Undoubtedly, the parents of children realize the advantages to their families of the magnificent opportunities given in our schools and public institutions, but there is danger lest in self-satisfaction we may stand still. There are directions in which progress should be made, and the public discussion, which will lead to the probable advance in the next decade, will be of value, provided it is led by far-seeing and broadminded persons.

MR. HENRY APPROVES

I have no hesitation in saying that concerted action by the friends of education to stimulate interest in school activities, and to broaden the knowledge of our people generally in the work, is an excellent plan. If, as is the design, the celebration of Education Week is to be Province-wide, it will probably vary in accordance with the wishes of each locality, and, as the progress of our school system rests upon the support of teachers, trustees and ratepayers, their united efforts must be irresistible. Co-operation in all organized movements is essential, and the record of Ontario education proves this to have been the outstanding factor in its advancement. We can point to many able and devoted men and women who were conspicuous for their services in this work, but their sucess rested in great measure upon the ability to rouse enthusiasm and apply it to the purposes in view. I congratulate the Secondary Teachers' Federation, which has sponsored the idea of Education Week, and believe it will evoke general response.

GEORGE S. HENRY,
Minister of Education.

Editor Review

Your Council wish to contradict the report in the Review of Oct. 15th, saying that they are considering disposing of the power plant and going on Hydro. We wish to state that we are considering making use of the present power plant on a more satisfactory basis by combining it along with Hydro.

This lady got a little jolt

She wondered whether her old blankets could really be made as good as new, so she sent a pair just to find out. When they were returned to her all washed and re-fluffed — looking the same as when she first bought them — and tied up with dainty colored silk ribbons — she got a distinct jolt of surprised pleasure. This is a common occurrence. It is almost incredible the way blankets that are worn down to a hard surface are made soft and downy by our re-fluffing process. This is one of our special services. There are eight different kinds of family wash including completely finished work on men's shirts and collars. Phone to-day or stop any one of our courteous driver salesmen. A Close Call

On Tuesday, while Mrs. J. A Workman was out in her garden working among her flowers, she heard a bullet from a rifle whiz by over her head, and it was so close she says, that if she had been standing up she would have been shot. She did not see anybody, but afterwards she heard rifle shots in the bush nearby. The shooting may have been done by boys hunting for rabbits, but whoever it was they certainly were very careless and might have caused serious harm. This should be a warning to people using fire arms to be more careful in the future. We think the authorities should investigate the matter.

WOMEN'S INSTITUTE

The regular meeting of Women's Institute was held Thursday last at the home of Mrs. Frank Reid. After singing the Ode and repeating the Lord's Prayer, meeting proceeded. The business part of the meeting was attended to and plans were made to hold a euchre and draw for blankets in about four weeks time which, we hope, when the date is announced, will be attended by all as the work of the Institute is a very wonderful one and with the proceeds great good is done in the community by helping the needy.

An apron contest was held which was won by Mrs. W. Atkinson

Mrs. Reid, Mrs. Ross and Mrs Caslor then read very interesting little sketches.

Lunch was then served and the meeting closed.

The November meeting will be held at Mrs. Jake Switzer's, Thursday, Nov. 19th

If anybody has an apple to beat this, we wish to hear from them. Don't bring in more than a bushel of them as the editor might not be able to use them all.

Thomas Edison, Greatest Inventor, Succumbs at Age of 84

Passes Quietly—World Joins in Tribute to Man Who Revolutionized Industry—Ontario Recalls Boyhood

West Orange, N.J., Oct. 18.—Thomas A Edison died at his home in Llewellyn Park at 3.24 a.m. Sunday. He was 84 years old. His wife, six children, his personal physician and two nurses were at the bedside when the end came.

The pronouncement of death was made by Dr. Hubert S. Howe, Mr. Edison's personal physician, at 3.24 a.m. and transmitted by Arthur Walsh at 3,37.

The announcement of death, given to the press by Mr. Walsh, Vice-President of the Thomas A. Edison Industries, said:

"Thomas Alva Edison quietly passed away at twenty-four minutes after three a.m., Oct. 18, 1931. (Signed) Dr. Hubert S. Howe."

The end came after a day and night during which Mr Edison sank deeper and deeper into a state of coma, while his heart, which during weeks of illness had stood up wonderfully, began to falter.

As soon as the sad tidings were broadcast men of world-wide prominence joined in paying tribute to the character and genius of Thomas Alva Edison. Some of the more significant statements follow:

By Herbert Hoover—"It is given to few men of any age or nation or calling to become the benefactor of all humanity. That distinction came abundantly to Thomas Alva Edison, whose death in his 84th year has ended a life of courage and outstanding achievement. His life-long search for truth fructifying in more than 1,000 inventions made him the greatest inventor our nation has produced, and revolutionized civilization itself.

"He multiplied light and dissolved darkness. He added to the whole wealth of nations. He was great, not only in his scientific creative instinct and insight, but did more than any other American to place invention on an organized basis of the utilization of raw materials of pure science and discovery. He was a rare genius. He has been a precious asset to the whole world. Every American owes a personal debt to him."

By Henry Ford—"Mr. Edison was a truly great man. He changed the face of the world in his lifetime and everything he achieved was beneficial to mankind. The epoch created by his work will influence all the future. His fame is independent of the fluctuating judgments of history; it is etched in light and sound on the daily and hourly life of the world. I knew him for nearly 40 years. He was the chief hero of my boyhood and he became my friend in manhood. That experience must be rare—to have one's early hero for one's later friend. The first encouraging word I ever had from any informed person on the making of a gasoline automobile was given me by Mr. Edison."

By Harvey Firestone—"One of the great privileges of my life has been to have had the friendship of Mr. Edison and to have enjoyed close association with him. Mr. Edison, we all know, had the greatest mind of any man in our generation. There was no subject you could take up with him on which he could not discourse brilliantly. His unselfishness, his willingness to sacrifice himself for others, his concentration and his natural genius all combined to drive him at top speed in his determination to increase the comfort and the welfare of the people and to lift human happiness to its highest standard.

Ontario Recalls Boyhood

St. Thomas.—The death of Thomas Edison, famed inventor, is of particular moment to a number of his relatives in this district.

Edison's boyhood home still stands as a landmark on the banks of the Otter River, 25 miles east of St. Thomas in the little village of Vienna.

It was to this thriving little humbering town that Edison's family fled when their lands, on Manhattan Island, were confiscated along with those of other United Empire Loyalists. The Edisons owned 800 acres of rich valley soil in East Elgin, and it was here that Thomas Edison as a boy roamed the picturesque countryside, had his boyhood dreams, learned to swim and built up a rugged constitution that death has taken so long to wear down.

Edison's chief companion in those days was Oscar Edison, his uncle, head of the present Vienna family which still occupies the ancient homestead. Oscar Edison was the youngest of a large family, and was not so much older in years than Thomas.

The future inventor was delicate in health in those days. He did not go to school early, but his mother was Nancy Elliott, a school teacher, who undertook to teach the young Thomas.

Many stories are told of Thomas Edisons' early life in this district. He was always tinkering, experimenting with something. One of his first jobs was that of a train news agent, but one day the water dried off a bottle of phosphorus he had in the car with him, and it set the car on fire, costing him that job.

In Port Huron, it is said, he joined his father's printing house, but some man became offended at an article he wrote and threw him into the river, ending his career as a reporter.

While still in Port Huron he and a companion are said to have experimented in the generation of electricity, making use of two cats which were rubbed vigorously together, but the cats objected so strenuously that the experiment had to be abandoned. At Fort Gratiot, Mich., where he was visiting relatives, he became incensed at one of the men who told ghost stories, so he wired the chair and succeeded in giving the story-teller a real shock as he approached the climax of a story.

His relatives at Vienna have many keepsakes by which they treasure the memory of the old inventor.

German Auto Exports 170 P.C. Ahead of 1930

Berlin—In the first half of this year Germany exported 5,236 motor vehicles, as against 6,182 for the whole of last year, and at this rate the exports for 1931 would exceed those of the preceding year 170 per cent.

Trucks lagged behind passenger cars in foreign sales as the latter were nearly doubled. This is largely attributed to the pinch of hard times everywhere, making the small car—especially featured by the German auto industry—more attractive abroad than it used to be.

While it is a good thing for the Reich, which badly needs a favorable trade balance, this growth in exports affords a consideration relief to German auto manufacturers, who, with improved facilities for production, found domestic consumption steadily shrinking.

In the half year foreign sales absorbed 13 per cent. of the total German auto production as against 8 per cent. last year. At the same time auto exports from other countries went down considerably, so that Germany's improved share of the world auto trade is greater than the foregoing figures would indicate.

Motorcycles, not included in the tabulation, show an increase in foreign sales amounting to 15.8 per cent. of production as against 9.9 per cent. last year, but production this year was sharply reduced.

Auto Deaths in U.S. Average 90 Daily

New York—In the first nine months of this year more than 24,000 persons were killed in automobile accidents in the United States, making the toll the largest ever recorded in a similar period, according to a compilation made by the Travelers Insurance Company from State reports. This loss of life brings the fatalities up to an average of nearly ninety daily for the country. August was the first month to show a decline from the corresponding month last year.

New York, with 1,961 deaths, a gain of 4.36 per cent. over the similar period of 1930, reports the greatest loss of life from automobile accidents of any State during the nine months. California, with the second largest toll of 1,680, shows a gain of 13.67 per cent. Pennsylvania and Ohio were next on the list.

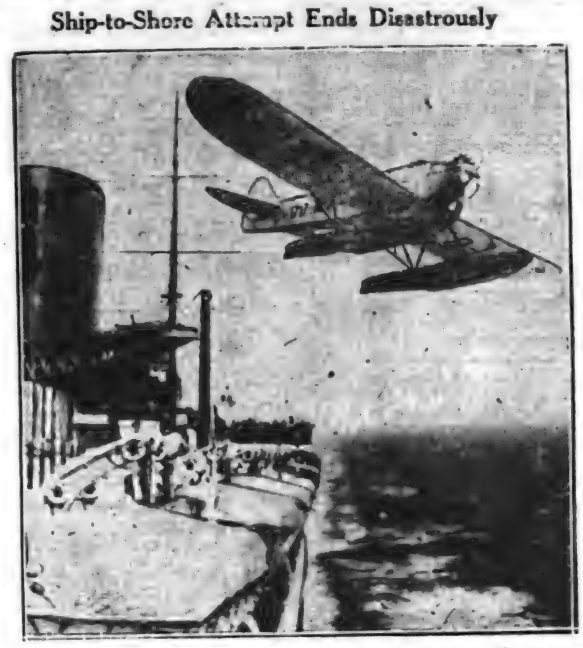
When Horseshoes Were First Used

The practice of nailing iron plates or rim-shoes to the hoofs apparently originated about the second century, B.C., in the countries bordering on the Mediterannean. It was not commonly known till about the fifth century, and iron horseshoes were not regularly used until the middle ages.—Animal Life.

Air Tour Started By British Airmen

London—Determination to obtain wider markets overseas for British aircraft is evident in a high speed demonstration tour of Europe begun recently with a display at Brussels by three Blackburn aircraft flown in formation from an airdrome in Yorkshire.



Inspired by Robert Blackburn, one of the pioneers of British airplane construction the tour is to last twenty days and cover 5,700 miles. Demonstrations will be given at Prague, Vienna, Budapest, Belgrade, Athens, Istanbul, Bucharest, Warsaw and Amsterdam.

Proposes One Currency for Nations of Empire

London.—As the first step toward an international currency conference, The Observer suggested that nations within the British Empire should endeavor to elaborate a common currency policy.

The newspaper said no more important step in the direction of Empire unity could be conceived than an agreement bringing into existence a common currency with a single standard throughout the Empire. The British Empire, the newspaper adds, would then stand solid as a rock in the midst of a world struggling with diverse currencies.

Japan Adopts Motor Tricycles

Tourists in Japan are interested in the strange vehicles that the sons of Nippon have evolved as their answer to the motor age. In that country many of the streets and roads are still so narrow and full of turns as to handicap full-sized automobiles. Consequently merchandise is often transported by motor tricycles, which have one wheel in front and two in the rear, called a "rear car." The vehicles are efficient and economical, can travel at a speed of thirty-five miles an hour and can climb steep grades.

The motor tricycles are products of evolution. Several years ago small merchants began to use trailers and sidecars attached to ordinary motorcycles. Later, enterprising dealers cut off the rear sections of motorcycles and substituted therefor specially constructed frames, with a steel box for merchandise carried on the rear axle. From this converted motorcycle it was just a step to the tricycle. The first machines of this type produced in Osaka were noisy, hard-riding and inclined to break down. Those manufactured today are a great improvement and, in spite of the depression, their production has increased rapidly in the past year.

Japan's highways are being widened and equipped with stronger bridges as quickly as funds permit, but it is a lengthy task to improve 590,000 miles of roads and streets, especially with land priced so high. The use of small vehicles that move fast is therefore an imperative need of delivery men.—The N.Y. Times.

New Theatres are Opened In London Despite Depression

London.—The London theatre seems to be peculiarly free from the evils of depression, if the steady building of new playhouses is any criterion.

Several new theatres opened their doors last year and more are yet to make their debut. Two more are shortly to be added to the growing list—the Westminster, in Buckingham Palace Road, opening with James Bridie's play, "The Anatomist," and the Saville, in Shaftesbury Avenue, where "For the Love of Mike" is to be done.

Other recently opened theatres include the Cambridge and Phoenix.

Glider Boat

Vienna.—A new type of passenger boat has made its appearance on the Danube river. It is built in the fashion of the cabin of a huge flying boat, and a pusher propeller mounted on the rear drives the boat along at a speed of more than 50 miles an hour. It accommodates 20 passengers and their baggage.

British Women Lead As Pilots

Larger Proportion of Feminine Flyers Laid to Sport Phase

New York.—By adopting aviation as a sport women of Great Britain have won a larger proportional representation among pilots than have their sisters in the United States, Charles S. ("Casey") Jones, vice-president of the Curtiss-Wright Corporation said when the British Aircraft Constructors, Ltd., made public a report on feminine flyers. It is more a difference of geography than temperament that has given Britain's women pilots a relatively larger place, Mr. Jones declared after a comparison of feminine participation in flying here and there.

In the United States according to the latest figures of the Department of Commerce only 445 of the 16,268 licensed pilots were women. In Britain of 3,349 pilots' certificates, 112 Air Ministry "A" licenses are now held by feminine flyers, as are five of the rare "B" permits, which can be gained only with much flying and wide technical and mechanical knowledge.

"In England and elsewhere in the British Isles aviation has attracted a large following as a sport or diversion," said Mr. ones. "The government there sponsors and aids flying clubs, while here the person who flies for fun gets no subsidy."

French Farmers Covet Agricultural Medal

Paris.—The Agricultural Order of Merit is prized by French farmers, according to a correspondent of the Christian Science Monitor. To obtain it, one must have been actively engaged in agriculture for at least fifteen years. When it was founded by Jules Meline Minister of Agriculture in 1884, it met with a great deal of ridicule. But its present popularity may be judged by this year's "promotion," which comprises 406 officers and 2,436 knights in France and twenty-eight officers and 196 knights in Algeria and the colonies. The recognition which membership in the order accords is eagerly sought after, and many a farmer is proud to wear the green ribbon in his buttonhole.

...bless In France Now Number 650,000

Paris.—Record compiled by the Federation of Labor place the total number of unemployed in France at 650,000, and the Ministry of Labor reported that plants with payrolls of more than 100 men are employing 218,500 fewer workers than at the same time last year. The Socialist Party figured that 2,500,000 workers are on part time employment.

Lone Scouting continues to grow apace in Ontario, and during the past month some thirty new members were registered at Lone Scout Headquarters.

It is gratifying also to note that this month two new Troops have been added to the growing list of Regular Scout Troops which have been formed as a direct result of Lone Scout activity. These are at Maple and at Unionville. The others are located at Paris, Killaloe, Cobalt, Sault Ste. Marie, and Beamsvill .

On October 2nd, the Lone Scout Commissioner, with Commissioner Irwin and Scoutmaster Don Hutchison, of the 1st Ont. Lone Scout Troop, journeyed to Maple to attend the special meeting and present the Charter to the new Maple Troop.

There was a splendid turnout of Scouts, and the Lonies from King also attended to add their good wishes, and after a number of interesting Scout activities, the Charter was presented in the presence of a nice gathering of interested citizens of Maple.

We wish the new Maple Troop, and their Scoutmaster, Mr. Bryan, the very best of Good Scouting.

Ontario Lone Scout will be interested to learn that a new Shoulder Tape Badge has now been issued.

This reads as follow "Ontario Lone Scouts," and is to be worn on the right shoulder by all Lone Scouts in this province. These can be obtained from Lone Scout Headquarters for 5c each.

Fire Prevention Week

Lone Scouts are urged to put aside one week during October for special work under this heading. All over Canada this Fire Prevention Week is being observed by Scouts, and the idea is to clean up and destroy all rubbish and inflammable matter around your houses, barns and in the vicinity of your premises, and in the case of Patrols, in the Villages in which they are located.

Thus before the winter sets in, everything will be cleaned up and snug, and there will be no danger of fires starting as a result of rubbish left around, or of unheeded rubbish adding to the seriousness of any fire which might occur.

Bear this in mind, Lonies! You can do lots of "Good Turns" in this way.

Lone Scout Question Box

Is there a Special Badge for Lone Scouts?—(M.L.J., Moscow).

No special badge has yet been issued to Lone Scouts in Canada, although Imperial Headquarters in London, England, have approved of a special badge for overseas Lone Scouts, which consists of a scroll bearing the words "Lone Scout" superimposed on the Fleur de Lys. Arrangements are being made to obtain a supply of these for the use of the Lone Scouts of Ontario.

Ontario Lone Scouts may be distinguished, however, by their Mauve Neckerchief and by the special shoulder tape which is mentioned in this column.

Lonies are invited to address questions on Scouting subjects to "Lone E" at Lone Scout Headquarters, 330 Bay Street, Toronto 2.

Noted Educationist Taken By Death

Mrs. Edith Groves Only Woman Chairman of Toronto Education Board

Toronto.—Mrs. Edith Lelean Groves, internationally known educationist, friend of underprivileged children and first and only woman chairman of Toronto's Board of Education, died on Saturday night following an operation.

A woman of versatile talents, a teacher, lecturer, poet, educationist, philanthropist, and a good friend to all, Mrs. Groves filled a large place in Canadian life, and was a favorite in the United States, where she often addressed educational gatherings and where she did much research work in educational fields at her own expense. She was twice a delegate to the Imperial Conference on Education, held in the University of London in 1924, and in the Sorbonne in 1926.

Educationists of all ranks mourned with the announcement of her death.

Henry Pays Tribute

The Minister of Education, Hon. George S. Henry, spoke in glowing terms of her work and achievements. Members of the Department of Education expressed their regrets. Members of the Board of Education who had worked side by side with her, told of her accomplishments. Teachers, too, felt they had lost a real friend. And little children, who had pulled at her skirts, and always won affectionate attention, talked of the "nice lady."

Mrs. Groves has been the mainspring of a great deal of the development in the Board of Education during the past decade. Her work in connection with the handicapped will always be a monument to her," Premier Henry said. "Certainly the Board of Education, the city and all the activities in which she was engaged, have lost greatly by her passing. Her place will be hard to fill."

Not only the Board of Education and the school children but the entire city has lost an unselfish and generous public servant. And not only the city but the whole North American continent will mourn the death of Mrs. Groves," the chairman of the Board of Education, Zeph. Hilton, said.

Born in England

Mrs. Groves was born in Cornwall, England, of ancient Huguenot stock. Her family, the Leleans, was a seafaring one. Persecution of the Huguenots drove it to seek a home in England and her family settled in the Cornish village of Trovagisey.

Prior to becoming a trustee, she had been vice-president of the Local Council of Women, and of the Home and School Council, president of the Toronto Girl Guides, and president of the Sir Douglas Haig War Auxiliary during the war.

Trustee F. B. Edmunds has been a member of the board for 15 years. As the member who had served longest and throughout the whole of Mrs. Groves' term of service, he said: "It is a terrible shock. We have lost one of the most active and interested members of the board, a woman who devoted all her time to educational work. Her whole educational outlook was enlightened, and she stood for every reasonable advance in education."

Two brothers and one sister survive. They are Leo Lelean, mayor of Redlands, Cal.; C. S. Lelean of Berkeley, Cal., and Mrs. C. S Warren, Shrewsbury, Mass.

Mrs Groves' profound devotion to the work of the Board of Education was due to her understanding its problems, having been a teacher herself, in the opinion of the Chief Inspector, David D. Moshier. Her work had been strongly influenced by her understanding of the teacher and the teachers' viewpoint, he said.

That understanding had shown itself in sympathy to those whose need was greatest, and the attention which she gave to handicapped children resulted in the establishment of auxiliary classes in the public schools for 'teenage boys and girls.

Electric Light Anniversary Date of Edison's Funeral

New York.—By a strange coincidence, Thomas Alva Edison will be buried on the 52nd anniversary of what he considered his greatest invention, the incandescent light. Although he did not give his famous Menlo Park demonstration until Dec. 31, 1879, he perfected it on Oct. 21 of that year.

Electricity Man's Maid-of-All-Work

Few Precautions Result in Efficient Performance

Electricity is still, in the minds of many people, a mysterious power, closely akin to black magic writes Margaret Fleming in the N.Y. Herald-Tribune Magazine. Generally speaking, we are its masters and can make it perform unheard of labors, but once in a long while we use the wrong formula to invoke it, and the "whatever-it-is" runs amuck and often destroys its own evidence, and this makes it easy, whenever evidence of the cause of a fire is lacking, to avoid the trouble of further investigation by concluding that electricity was somehow responsible.

Each year a small number of fatalities are cused in homes by ordinary lamp voltages. Careful surveys have shown that not more than sixteen to twenty persons a year meet their deaths in this way, and 95 per cent would still be alive if they had followed a few simple rules in the use of their electrical equipment.

These, briefly, are the electrical rules which every home owner should observe. Rule 1. Have your wiring done by a reliable expert.

Rule 2. In wiring your house, have plenty of outlets, not only for today's needs, but those which you anticipate tomorrow.

This will help a great deal to reduce the danger of fire or shock, since it will mean fewer wires trailing from one part of a room to another and consequently wearing them out, less amateur tinkering, and less possibility of overloading wires with more current than they were made to carry. Even in this electrical age the great majority of homes are inadequately wired for satisfactory electrical service. Many of them were built before electricity became an accepted household servant, and even homes erected in the last ten or fifteen years, have failed to anticipate the electrification of almost every imaginable household job. Especially is it important to have installed in the kitchen and laundry one or two high power circuits to be ready for any demands which the future may bring.

Rule 3. Play fair with your fuses. The fuse was designed, not to annoy, but to protect you, by automatically burning out and thus shutting off whenever more is being drawn through the wires than they can safely carry. This safety limit is indicated by the electrical company when it puts in fuses of a certain amperage. When one blows out, it means either that you are using too many lamps or appliances on that circuit, or that one or more is defective. To meet the difficulty by putting in a fuse of higher amperage, or, as some household daredevils have even been known to do, to substitute a penny for the fuse, is to invite trouble.

The average circuit in a private home calls for a fuse of fifteen amperes. The high power circuit which supplies the electric range carries more. In this connection it is well to remember that any electrical appliance supplying heat—such as a range or a heater—uses, generally speaking, more current than an appliance supplying power—such as a washer or refrigerator—or one designed to give light, such as a lamp.

Rule 4. Remember that water is a conductor of electricity, that all electrical connections should be protected from dampness, and that no part of any eletrical equipment should be touched with damp hands.

An analysis of electrical shocks shows a high percentage resulting from failure to remember these facts. The strength of a current is in inverse proportion to the resistance of the medium through which it is passing. Normally the skin of the body has a fairly high resistance, and thus serves to shield the inside of the body, which has a low resistance. If the skin, however, is wet, or even damp from perspiration, it becomes an excellent conductor of electricity, and a shock which would otherwise be slight, may become grave. You should, therefore, be especially on your guard in all parts of the house where water or dampness is likely to be encountered, such as the bathroom, the laundry and the cellar. Of thirty-one fatal cases of electric shocks investigated in the United States by the National Safety Council, twelve occurred in bathtubs, and seven happened to persons who were standing on wet basement floors.

Of thirty-seven cases investigated by the National Electric Light Association, eleven were bathtub fatalities, and wet basement floors accounted for seven; extension cords under cellarless houses, where the householder rigged up a bulb at the end of a non-waterproof cord and crawled over the damp earth to investigate some problem or other, brought eight to their death. Three fatal cases which occurred last summer were in hot, muggy weather, when the skin of the victims was damp with perspiration.

All these facts mean that almost all electrical shocks resulting from dampness could be avoided if we would take a few more precautions.

Rule 5. Never touch an electric appliance of any kind while you are in the bathtub. If it should chance to be defective the danger of shock is greatly increased.

Rule 6. Secure the use of molded composition or porcelain sockets in your bath-rooms, basements and all other damp locations and on extension cords.

Screw base receptacles or outlets are no longer approved. Where they exist equip them permanently with the detachable screw base sections of attachment plugs or have your electrician replace them. This will prevent inquisitive children from poking their fingers into the sockets and possibly receiving shocks.

Rule 7. Wherever an extension cord is used in any damp place see that the cord is one with waterproof protection.

Such cords have always been easily purchaseable, and now the householder may avail himself of an extra protection, a rubber waterproof connection cap.

In handling the cord of any piece of electrical appliance, grasp and pull by the plug rather than by the cord itself. This is made easier for you in a type of heater cord and plug, new on the market and especially recommended for such things as irons and toasters. It has, above the plug, which connects with the appliance, a new pull-grip which relieves the strain on the wiring itself.

Rule 8. Always disconnect, before leaving it, any electrical appliance which is in contact with inflammable material.

An electric heating pad is a great convenience, but do not take liberties with it. Heed the warning that comes with the pad itself and take care not to let it get wet, not to stick pins in it (pins are electrical conductors) and not to put it snugly over a wet poultice, on the aching one's chest, as some trusting souls have been known to do!

From Country to Town

'Tis strange to me, who long have seen no face
That was not like a book whose every page
I knew by heart, a kindly commonplace—
And faithful record of progressive age—
To wander forth, and view an unknown race;
Of all that I have been, to find no trace,
Not footstep of my by-gone pilgrimage.
Thousands I pass, and no one stays his pace
To tell me that the day is fair, or rainy—
Each one his object seeks with anxious chase,
And I have not a common hope with any—
Thus like one drop of oil upon a flood,
In uncommunicating solitude—
Single am I amid the countless many.
—Hartley Coleridge, Poems.

Advice to the Young

Bestow thy youth so that thou mayst have comfort to remember it when it hath forsaken thee, and not sigh and grieve at the account thereof. Whilst thou are young thou wilt think it will never have an end; but behold, the longest day hath his evening, and that thous shalt enjoy it but once, that it never turns again; use it therefore as the springtime, which soon departeth and wherein thou oughtest to plant and sow all provisions for a long and happy life. —Sir W. Raleigh.

"THESE HARD TIMES"

"The hard times and scarcity of money makes it more important than ever to economize. One way I save on clothes is by renewing the color of faded or out-of-style dresses, coats, stockings, and underwear. For dyeing, or tinting, I always use Diamond Dyes. They are the most economical ones by far because they never fail to produce results that make you proud. Why, things look better than new when redyed with Diamond Dyes. They never spot, streak, or run. They go on smoothly and evenly, when in the hands of even a ten-year-old child Another thing, Diamond Dyes never take the life out of cloth or leave it limp as some dyes do. They deserve to be called 'the world's finest dyes'!"

Owl Laffs

Wife—"Dear, to-morrow is our tenth wedding anniversary. Shall I kill the turkey?"

Hubby—"No, let him live. He didn't have anything to do with it."

Mistress—"Now, Matilda, I want you to show us what you can do to-night. We have a few very special friends coming for a musical evening."

It's a simple thing to get too sick to work and still feel just well enough to go fishing. All salesmen are Scotch when they're payin' their own expenses. A real estate agent was denied entrance to Heaven the other day; St. Peter didn't want the place subdivided. She was just the landlady's daughter, but everyone wanted to know how the land lay. Uneasy lies the face that wears a frown. After careful observation we report that two may possibly live as cheaply as one, but not as quietly.

Teacher—"What cow is best known for the amount of milk it gives?"

Johnny—"Magnesia."

Teacher—"Magnesia?"

Johnny—"Yessum, all the drug stores sell milk of magnesia."

The hardest thing for a wife to forgive a husband is having him call the evening meal "supper" if the company present is snobbish. Then there's the sap who wanted to weed the garden, but couldn't distinguish between the weeds and plants, so he turned the chickens loose and pulled up what was left. Man does not understand woman. That is his tragedy. Woman understands man. That is also his tragedy. The modern woman's idea of showing backbone is to have no waist in the rear of her evening gown. Men are of two classes—those who do their best work to-day and forget about it, and those who promise to do their best to-morrow and forget about it. Most people you meet know there is something wrong with the country, but very few of them even think they know how to right it.

Fond Father—"Wasn't that nice? You like having a ride on father's knee, eh?"

Small Son—"Not bad, but I'd rather ride on a real donkey."

Second Mountaineer — "Yes, that makes six Reckon he'll have t' get a double-barrel if he wants t' get 'em all married."

Carl—"Do you believe in the old adage about marrying in haste and repenting at leisure?"

Jake—"No, I don't. After a man marries he has no leisure."

A good loser is one who feels like you would have felt had you won. Very few big jobs are held by men who honk and honk in a traffic jam. The modern girl isn't affected by the movies. They go in one eye and out the other. A man never knows what a woman thinks of him; he only thinks he does.

Seaplane to Be Used On Jungle Journey

When Commander G. M. Dyott takes off in another month or so to explore the Brazilian jungles in the Malta Grasso region to the north of the Xingu River he will not only be returning to familiar ground, where he sought three years ago to find some trace of Colonel P. H. Fawcett, who was lost there with two companions in 1925, but he will be returning to a mode of travel in which he was among the pioneers, the airplane. He will take a Bellanca seaplane which will cut laborious canoe trips of weeks to days and make it possible to fix his base at Alta Mira on the lower Xingu, 670 miles from the confluence of that river with the Amazon.

Eleven men are expected to comprise the exploring party which he is now organizing at his headquarters in New York. Those already definitely selected, in addition to himself, are Captain Erskine Loch, a British veteran of the World War; George Rommill, now attached to the Pan American Airways in Cuba, who will pilot the plane, and Robert Cutler. Complete radio and motion picture equipment will be included in the baggage and plenty of knives and axes for trading purposes with the Indians. Commander Dyott hopes not only to find more definite traces of Colonel Fawcett but to make ethnological and geographical discoveries of importance in the region. Legends of an unknown tribe of Indians living in stone houses are strongly current there. The party will make the journey from New York and up the Amazon in a yacht.

I Shall Walk Today

By Grace Noll Crowell, in "Scribners."

I shall walk to-day upon a high green hill,
I shall forget the walls and the roofs of the town;
This burden, strapped to my back, shall be unloosed,
And I shall leave it there when I come down.

Warm is the hill upon which I shall walk to-day;
Gold is the sun upon the close-cropped grass,
And something of the peace of grazing sheep
Shall permeate my being as I pass:

Something of the look within their eyes
Of upland pastures, and of clean wind blown—
The tranquil, trusting look of those who know
And shepherd watches, I shall make my own.

And I shall gather the little wind flowers there,
And press their sweetness upon my heart to stay,
Then I shall go back to the walls and the roofs of the town,
Stronger than I have been for many a day.

AT THE AGE OF 40

"I was very stout, and I have taken Kruschen Salts for 3 months, and have reduced from 212 lbs. to 182 lbs. (age 40). I am a hearty eater, and have never dieted in any way. Also I have never felt any ill effects whilst I have been taking Kruschen salts."—T. H.

That is an instance of Kruschen succeeding without assistance. But if any fat person will be satisfied with a moderate diet, and will take one half teaspoon of Kruschen Salts in a glass of hot water before breakfast every morning—they can lose fat in just the same way.

This is what Kruschen Salts does—it cleans out the impurities in your blood by keeping the bowels, kidneys and liver in splendid working shape, and fills you with a vigor and tireless energy you'd almost forgotten had existed—you get the needful exercise.

As a result, instead of planting yourself in an easy chair every free moment and letting flabby fat accumulate, you feel an urge for activity that keeps you moving around doing the things you've always wanted to do and needed to do to keep you in good condition.

When PAIN Comes

WHAT many people call indigestion very often means excess acid in the stomach. The stomach nerves have been over-stimulated, and food sours. The corrective is an alkali, which neutralizes the acids instantly. And the best alkali known to medical science is Phillips' Milk of Magnesia.

One spoonful of this harmless, tasteless alkali in water neutralizes instantly many times that much acid, and the symptoms disappear at once. You will never use crude methods when once you learn the efficiency of this. Go, get a small bottle to try.

Be sure to get the genuine Phillips' Milk of Magnesia prescribed by physicians for 50 years in correcting excess acids. 50c a bottle—any drug store. (Made in Canada.)

MILTON

A very interesting meeting of the board of management of the Gordon Home was held at the Home in Milton. The property committee reported that a new fire escape had been erected during the summer months and the building has been pronounced up to standard, with regards to fire protection by the Government inspector. A caretaker has been engaged by the year. During the meeting an enlarged portrait of the late Dr. E. Gowland was presented to the board by the Halton County Childrens Aid Society. Mrs. Gorham, in the absence of J. M. Denyes, president of the Society, made the presentation, and T. W. Duggan, chairman of the board, replied. The portrait was hung in the board room. It is handsomely framed and has a brass tablet placed on the lower part of the frame bearing the following inscription: "Marshall E. Gowland, M.A., M.B., for ten years beloved physician and friend to the children in the Gordon Home. Died April 9th 1931." Dr. Kenneth Stevens has kindly offered his services as physician to the children in the Home. Amos Mason, of Acton, Halton County's genial warden, presented a winter's supply of underwear to the children in the Home. Mr. Duggan presented the Home with roses for Thanksgiving, which were much appreciated. The board adjourned to meet on Jan. 9th, 1932.

Here and There

Maple sugar and maple syrup produced in Canada in the spring of 1931 had an estimated value of $3,537,700 of which the former accounted for $930,800 and the latter for $2,606,900. The Province of Quebec is the largest producer in the Dominion.

Following a long succession of shipments in an experiment commenced a year ago, thirty-five cars of beef cattle, the bulk of them for British consumption, left Winnipeg recently by special Canadian Pacific train for the Atlantic seaboard for shipment to Great Britain.

Thousands of salmon recently "took the elevator" on their way to the spawning grounds in the upper sections of the Stamp River, British Columbia, when they used the fishway built by the Canadian Government Department of Fisheries to overcome the tumbling waters at Stamp Falls.

With the departure on October 1 of the big Sikorsky amphibian plane for Boston, the Pan-American Airways concluded their service between Boston and Halifax which was inaugurated August 1. In August, 76 passengers were carried on the southbound trips and 67 northbound in 18 flying days.

Manitoba's threshing was practically complete for 1931 in the first week of October, according to the weekly crop statement of the Canadian Pacific Railway department of agriculture. Saskatchewan was then 61 per cent. threshed and Alberta 55 per cent., with northern areas in each province still holding heavy crops ripening for the machines.

His Excellency the Earl of Bessborough, Governor-General of Canada, together with his eldest son, Viscount Duncannon, have in view hunting and fishing trips in New Brunswick next year. During his recent visit to the province, His Excellency was presented with a complimentary hunting and fishing license by Hon. C. D. Richards, Premier of New Brunswick.

Completion of organization work of the Dominion Agricultural Credit Company was announced recently by E. W. Beatty, chairman and president of the Canadian Pacific Railway, who stated that "subscription to over sixty per cent. of the capital stock of the company have been received and the requisite steps to complete the organization have been taken." Head office of the company will be in Regina.

The new dental car, built by the Canadian Pacific Railway and equipped by the Rosedale, Toronto, Chapter of the I. O. D. E., was turned over for use in Northern Ontario to the Ontario Government recently. This car, claimed to be unique on the continent, will have running rights over all railway lines in Northern Ontario and is equipped with fully modern dental facilities, waiting room, living accommodation, laboratory, consulting room, clinic and dental chair.

The number of Canadians who are part owners of the Canadian Pacific continues to increase. A year ago, on September 2, the total number of the company's Canadian stockholders was 26,185. On September 1 of this year the number had grown to 35,217, an increase of 9,032 shareholders. Many of these have been added since the recent break in the security markets carried stock prices to new low levels, indicating that Canadians have confidence in the country's ability to "come back" to prosperity. Contributed Huge Sum To Assist Employment

C.P.R. Spent more than $11,000,000 on new Branch Lines and station buildings and provided 351,000 days work for men otherwise unemployed. Co-operated by doing work years ahead.

Since the commencement of the existing economic situation the Canadian Pacific Railway has spent a matter of eleven to twelve million dollars in providing work for unemployed Canadians. When it was apparent in the late summer of 1930, that certain areas of southern Saskatchewan were to suffer from almost complete crop failure, the Company took upon itself to assist the people in that territory by beginning the construction of a branch line between Vanguard and Mayronne. This line would not, in the ordinary course of events, have been built for some time, and certainly not at a time when there was no crop available in that particular territory. But the Company desired to give employment to the farmers and their teams in the drought area. The total cost of the line is estimated to be approximately $1,000,000, and this work is still proceeding.

Mr. E. W. Beatty
Chairman and President
Canadian Pacific Ry.

The Dominion Government subsequently undertook considerable work for the unemployment relief, and the Canadian Pacific was called upon to cooperate. This the Company did to the limit of its ability by anticipating works which would, normally, not have been started for a number of years. These works included a number of new branch lines, the building of a new station at Regina, some grade revision in British Columbia, and also the application on various subdivisions of new rail and new rock and gravel ballast. The total cost of these works were estimated at $11,514,000 and, according to agreement with the Government, are to be completed at the end of the current year. It is true that the Dominion agreed to pay interest for a limited period on this capital cost, but after receipt of this interest, the Canadian Pacific will still have expended over $10,600,000 from its own Treasury in order to improve the situation in the country generally. This expenditure has been made at a time when the Company's revenues are suffering severely as a result of business depression. This programme of work, undertaken in order to cooperate with the Government, had given 351,000 days work to individuals otherwise unemployed up to August 31st last, and at September 14th it was estimated that approximately 100,000 more working days would be furnished before the works were completed.

Although the Company has succeeded in making substantial reductions in operating costs, it has hesitated to pursue its policy of economy to the limit out of regard for the serious obligation which rests upon all corporations to give as much employment as possible. While protecting the interest of shareholders as far as is consistent with its duty to the country, the Canadian Pacific has been conservative in its application of measures which would increase the number of unemployed in Canada. Only recently, after experiencing very severe decreases in earnings, have they pared down their forces to the bare essentials necessary for operation. 787

Walk on the LEFT of country roads . . . Face the Traffic

This rule is important at all times, but especially so at dusk and at night.

At such times, no matter how careful the driver of a car is, he may not see you until he is very near to you and it may be impossible for him to stop in time to avoid inflicting serious injury.

Should he swerve to avoid hitting you, though you may escape injury others may be hurt.

Of the 524 fatalities on the highways of Ontario last year a large number were caused by persons walking with rather than against traffic.

Why take a chance?

YOUR TEETH AND YOUR HEALTH

The comfort which comes from a clean mouth with healthy teeth, and the ability to chew properly with sound teeth are not the only important points to be considered with regard to the relationship of teeth and health.

In the mouths of many adults, there is present some chronic infection about the teeth which may lead to damage of some vital organ of the body by causing disease of that organ.

Infected teeth are a menace at all times. There are certain individuals who harbour such an infection for years with apparently no serious results. There is, however, no way of foretelling in which individual, who has an infection about a tooth, there will occur infections in other parts of the body as a result of the infection present in the tooth.

The germs responsible for the infections about the teeth may be picked up and carried by the blood-stream and desposited in any part of the body. Here they multiply and set up a chronic infection similar to the one which they caused in the mouth.

Just how serious this is depends upon where the infection occurs. It is obvious that if it should be a valve of the heart which is damaged as the result of such an infection, the secondary infection is much more serious than was the primary one in the tooth.

As we have indicated, no one can say what will happen in any particular case. That is why the dentist extracts infected teeth in order to remove the infection from the mouth where it is a constant menace because it may lead to serious damage in other parts of the body.

Once tooth infection has occurred, it is necessary that, as a preventive measure against other conditions which may arise from such infection, the infected tooth be properly dealt with. It would have been still, however, to have gone one further step back, which would have brought us to prevention of infection about the tooth.

Healthy teeth in adult life are the reward of proper feeding from the time of birth on throughout the years of growth. Next in importance to diet come cleanliness and regular visits to the dentist in order that serious trouble may be prevented by early treatment.

The child should be taken to the dentist, not because he has a toothache, but in order that he may never have one. If parents will co-operate with their dentists, beginning with their child's primary teeth, it will be possible for them, in most cases, to secure for their children healthy teeth throughout adult life, and besides, free them from the dangers which accompany infected teth.

Questions concerning Health, addressed to the Canadian Medical Association, 184 College Street, Toronto, will be answered personally by letter.

MARRIAGES

Thompson—Drewell

A very pretty wedding was solmnized at St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, by Rev. W. T. McCree, M.A., on Saturday, Oct. 24th, at 7.30 p.m., when Miss Gertrude Drewell was united in wedlock to Mr. Arthur Sidney Thompson, son of Mrs. Thompson, of Streetsville. The groomsman was Mr. James Thompson, a brother, and the bridesmaid, Miss Maudie Thompson, sister of the groom.

The bride was escorted to the altar by Mr. William Couse.

She was becomingly gowned in white georgette and beautiful veil looped with a wreath of orange blossoms, and carried a bouquet of roses and lily of the valley. The bridesmaid wore a gown of figured voile and a picture hat. She also carried a bouquet of roses and lily of the valley.

The church was nicely decorated with chrysanthmums and ferns. Quite a number were present to witness the ceremony.

Miss Willa Couse sang "The Voice that Breathed O'er Eden" during the signing of the register, and was accompanied by Miss Clara Steen.

The wedding breakfast was served at the home of Mrs. William Couse, with whom the bride had resided, when about thirty guests were present.

The bride received many beautiful gifts.

The happy couple left for Alton and Guelph on their honeymoon and on their return will reside in Streetsville.

Forster—Featherstone

The wedding took place in Streetsville United Church, on Saturday last, by the Rev. G. H. Purchase, pastor of the church, of Miss Isabel Featherston, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. K. Featherstone, Streetsville, to Anson Cumming Forster, son of Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Forster, Port Credit. Miss Featherston was given away by her father and was attended by Miss Josephine Featherston, Toronto, her cousin. The groomsman was Sidney Stewart, Port Credit. The wedding music was provided by Herbert Falconer, organist of the church, and Mrs. Frank Reid, Streetsville. Following a wedding supper at the home of the bride, Mr. and Mrs. Forster left for a honeymoon to New York. On their return they will live in Cooksville.

Local High School Beats Brampton

Return Game to be Played This Week

HIGH SCHOOL NOTES

Local High School Eleven Defeats Brampton Junior Team 21-5

In a fast exhibition game played at the Rosalia, Brampton, on Oct. 22 Streetsville High School won the first game of the season by defeating Brampton Junior Eleven 21-5.

In the first quarter the teams appeared to be very evenly matched. Brampton kicked off, Pope ran the ball back to Brampton's 10 yard line, McGill took the ball and broke through for a touch. A few minutes later Brampton scored a touch. The score at the end of the first quarter was 5-5

In the second quarter McGill and Steggall each scored a touchdown, Steggall broke through from Brampton's 5 yard line for a convert. Score at half time Streetsville 16, Brampton 5,

Early in the third quarter, Pope, broke away and scored a touchdown for S.H.S. There was no score in the last quarter.

Much credit for the victory must be given to the strong scrimmage line and the quick-thinking of Bailey our quarter-back.

We have a better team this year than we ever had before and many more victories are hoped for. A return game with Brampton will be played sometime during this week. Other games are being arranged with Milton and Etobicoke.

The Journal

Instead of publishing a monthly paper at the school this year, we are planning to have three (3) or possibly four (4) issues printed in book form by a local publishing house. To help defray cost of publication, advertisements will be inserted at a nominal charge. Billy Munro is advertising editor.

THE

TULE MARSH MURDER

STORY OF A MISSING ACTRESS AND THE TAXING OF WITS TO EXPLAIN HER FATE.

BY NANCY BARR MAVITY.

SYNOPSIS

Don Ellsworth's wife, formerly the actress Sheila O'Shay, disappears. Dr. Cavanaugh, criminal psychologist, learns that their married life has been unhappy.

Peter Piper, Herald reporter, while trying to interview Dr. Cavanaugh, meets attractive Barbara Cavanaugh and finds that she was engaged to Ellsworth before his marriage.

Dr. Cavanaugh identifies the charred remains of a body found in the tule marsh outside the city as that of Sheila O'Shay. Barbara faints when she hears this. Mrs. Kane, Sheila's maid, is arrested and Peter learns that Sheila forced Don to marry her by threat of breach of promise. Peter sees Dr. Cavanaugh enter the Ellsworth house and climbs the porch where he finds Dr. Cavanaugh in Sheila's boudoir, and is invited in. They find the breach of promise papers are not in the safe, but they find a threatening letter signed "David Orme." Peter rushes to the Herald office.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

At the moment, Peter's fingers were poised silently over the typewriter keys, but simultaneously with Jimmy's greeting they resumed action in a clattering burst of sound.

"Don't fuss me," Peter growled, with a brief glance at the city editor. "Be with you in a minute."

The fanfare of the typewriter keys continued in irregular rapid-fire staccato, then ceased with a rattling cadenza as the last sheet of copy paper was ripped from the carriage.

Peter strolled with elaborate nonchalance between the empty desks, numbering the pages as he went, and thrust them under Jimmy's nose.

"Read 'em and weep," he said.

Jimmy clawed the sheets of copy paper toward him, pushing his eyeshade at a rakish angle above his left ear. Peter leaned across the desk in a pose of extreme casualness, listening to the faint slip-zip as each page was read. At last Jimmy looked up.

"It's a pretty-good yarn," he said solemnly; and that, Peter knew, was the supreme accolade bestowed but rarely by the city editor on work well done. Jimmy marked the first of the sheets, "first run, hed to kum," and yelled for a copy boy. Then, for the first time, he looked closely at Peter.

"Hell's bells!" he exclaimed. "Where have you been all night, anyhow?"

"Oh, just around," Peter waved his hand vaguely in a circle of the horizon.

"Well, you look as if you'd been around and over and through," Jimmy remarked caustically. "Say, there's no funny business about this, is there? It'll check all right?"

"Cavanaugh's behind it," Peter assured him. "He gave me the letter to copy."

"And just where did the dog fight come in?"

Peter was indeed a disreputable object. His face and the backs of his hands were scored by long red lines, along with the blood that had congealed. His coat was ripped under the arm, and several jagged three-cornered tears decorated each trouser leg.

His chin showed the need of a morning shave, a black smudge across his forehead gave him a sinister, piratical expression, and his eyes were bloodshot from lack of sleep. Nevertheless, he faced the city editor with an incorrigible grin.

"Oh, there wasn't any trouble—no trouble at all. These are honorable wounds, received in the line of duty—before I got around to the doctor. I guess it's about time I got around to a cup of coffee, though. And if you don't mind, I'd like to buzz home long enough to get into a suit that hangs together a little better than this one."

Jimmy surveyed the hollow-eyed, smiling figure beside him.

"Go home and go to bed," he growled. "I guess we can live without you for the rest of the day. If anything breaks, I can let you know."

Peter, however, continued to lean across the desk.

"I say, Jimmy," he pleaded, "I'd rather follow this up. I've got a hunch about the man who wrote that letter. D'you suppose there'd be a chance of giving me a few days, just to root around on my own? It may not come to anything, of course."

"When you're as old as I am," Jimmy said in his gruffest tones. "You'll have enough sense to take a day off when it's handed you on a silver platter. But there's no fool like a young fool. Go wherever you durn please.

"You can turn in an expense account for that suit; but I warn you, if you go getting another one slashed up as if you'd been the centre of a stiletto contest, it's your own lookout. And, if you hang around here another minute trying to look bored, you're going to burst."

But Peter, with a final grin over his shoulder, was already half way to the door.

It was a very different Peter who parked Bossy on a side street two hours later and made his way along the drive marked "Tradesmen's entrance," to the back door of the Ellsworth house. He had donned a sweater in place of a coat, and buttoned its high collar close around his chin.

A wide visored cap was pulled far down over his eyebrows, casting his face into deep shadow. He had even discarded his cigarette in favor of a short curved pipe.

The picture thus presented before his mirror had delighted him hugely.

"If it ain't the spittin' image of Sherlock Holmes on a rampage!" he addressed his reflection enthusiastically. "It shouts 'disguise' to the very housetops. And of course the object of a disguise is to look as much like a disguise as possible. If not, why go to all the trouble?" Regretfully he abandoned the package of cigarettes on the dresser. "Ethel's favorite sleuths always smoke pipes—I know they do. And Ethel, my dear, you're going to have the biggest thrill of your young life. It's too bad I can't make it really good—wait till evening and then throw pebbles at your window. But I don't know which window and I couldn't hit it anyhow. Besides, I can't wait. You'll just have to be satisfied with things 'as is'."

As a finishing touch, he pinned his police "Press" badge under the rolled bottom of his sweater, and then devoted half an hour to the composition of a note which, after several scribbled drafts, he finally copied in laborious hand-printed capitals.

"Urgent and secret," it began. "If you would be of service to the cause of clearing the innocent and bringing the guilty to justice, come at once to the shrubbery at the second bend of the driveway to the left, and tell no one. I am the private assistant of C., whom you left in a certain room overlooking the back garden, between ten and eleven o'clock last night. P. P., Investigator."

Peter surveyed this literary production with beaming pride.

"Won't she just love it, though?" he gloated. "And the funny part is that reduced to plain English, it's true enough."

Having delivered his message to an astonished cook at the kitchen door, Peter retraced his steps along the driveway as far as the second bend, and half concealed himself in the thick shrubbery.

"If anybody with any sense comes along, I'm sunk," he murmured. "I'd send myself to the psychopathic ward for investigation, on sight."

The only footsteps, however, were light ones, tip-toeing along the gravel from the direction of the house. Peter waited until they were almost opposite and then stepped forward from his place of concealment.

"Sh!" he hissed loudly and unnecessarily to the palpitating Ethel, who was far too impressed to open her mouth. "Come behind these bushes, where no one can see us. I have something of the utmost importance to communicate."

CHAPTER XXIX.

"I'd have known you for a detective anywhere!"

Ethel stood in the doorway of the vine-covered summer house at the garden end of the pergola, to which she had conducted Peter, and surveyed him with respectful ardor.

Peter cast a disapproving eye at the rose tendrils thrusting their way here and there through the lattice of the walls; he had an idea that he would never cease to regard roses as the most vicious and hostile of floral specimens.

"That, of course, is because you know about detectives," he said. "Come in and sit down, where we won't be seen."

Ethel perched herself on the extreme edge of one of the small iron chairs which, with a little green-painted tea table, furnished the interior.

"Oh, there's nobody now who uses this place," she assured him. "I've always adored detective stories, but I never thought—never in the world—that I'd ever have a chance to be part of a real one, not even after Mrs. Ellsworth disappeared. It didn't seem a bit like a story somehow. Everything went on just about as usual. I know Dr. Cavanaugh's awfully grand, but he doesn't act one bit like a real sleuth, does he?"

"He conceals his talents," Peter solemnly.

"Do you work with the police?" Ethel's hands were clasped tightly in her lap and her face was a round beaming moon of excitement.

"I'm 'with' but not 'of' them."

With an air of great caution Peter flashed the shield of his police press badge momentarily into view. "I'm a sort of special deputy private investigator," he said with dignity. "I picked you out to help me because your reading has given you a certain familiarity with detective methods. But first I must ask you to swear absolute secrecy."

"What do you want me to swear on?" Ethel gasped.

"What have you got?" Peter inquired practically. The "swearing" was an inspiration of the moment and he had quite forgotten that, to be properly ceremonious, it must be done "on" something.

'Sh!" he hissed loudly and unnecessarily to the palpitating Ethel.

Mr. Close—"This vacation has cost me a small fortune."

Miss Spend—"Must have been small."

Sanctuaries In Ontario Prevent Game Depletion

The Province of Ontario occupies the geographical centre of Canada, a land of wonderful diversity in topography, as in resources, reaching northward to the waters of Hudson Bay and southward to the Niagara River, giving expression to nearly all the inventions of Mother Nature in soil, climate, forest types and the multiple varieties of wild life. Small wonder that a continuous woodland of 100 million acres, most of it in the primitive stage, and within such easy reach of the great human concentrations of the American Continent, has drawn to itself thousands of annual visitors equipped with gun or rod. Recognizing what has happened to other sections of America where easy access and popularity rapidly forced a depletion of games and fish, the same fear might arise respecting Ontario, now that the trek of sportsmen has turned in its direction. One overlooks, however, the great fact that Ontario is amply provided with vast sanctuaries, that shooting seasons are strictly limited, as is the bag, and that in the forested zones native population is so thinly scattered as to affect but meagerly the breeding range as it existed in days primeval.

How Carrier Pigeon Finds His Way Home

The theory that the homing pigeon has a special sense of direction is disproved by experiments conducted by Dr. Ralph H. Grundlach of the University of Washington. A better explanation for its skill in finding its way home is that the carrier has good vision, wide cruising range and some special motivation.

Dr. Grundlach constructed a maze in such a way that only a creature having a direction of sense would be able to solve it. Experienced homers were baffled even after three months of trial.

Another experiment was to release sixteen trained racing homers on a strange course. On the new course only three came home in less than five hours, six were out from one to fourteen nights and two never came home at all.

Boy Scout Statue Unveiled in England

Monument Commemorates Gathering of 50,000 at Birkenhead in World Camp

To perpetuate the memory of the third World Scout Jamboree at Arrowe Park, near Birkenhead, England, a statue of a Boy Scout has just been unveiled at the end of Pilgrim's Way, where the five main roads of the tent city met. At the Jamboree, held a little more than two years ago, 50,000 Boy Scouts from seventy-three countries camped together for two weeks.

In the absence of Lord Baden-Powell, the Chief Scout of the World, at whose call in August, 1929, the youth of the world came together, Lord Hampton, Chief Commissioner of the Boys Scouts Association of Great Britain, unveiled the statue in the presence of several high British Scout officials. Lord Hampton was the guest of honor at the twenty-first annual meeting of the National Council of the Boy Scouts of America at Memphis, Tenn., last spring, and later made a tour during which he observed many phases of scouting in America.

The memorial is in the form of a life-size figure of a Boy Scout carved in green stone in an open frame of buff sandstone. It was designed by Leonard Barnish of Liverpool. Below the figure appear the words: "Presented to the Borough of Birkenhead by the Boy Scouts Association to commemorate the World Jamboree at Arrowe Park, 1929." The inscription also includes an extract from Lord Baden-Powell's farewell message at the Jamboree which reads:

"Today I send you out from Arrowe to all the world bearing my symbol of peace and fellowship—each one of you my ambassador, bearing my message of love and fellowship on the wings of sacrifice and service to the ends of the earth. From now on, the Scout symbol of peace is the Golden Arrow. Carry it fast and far, so that all men may know the brotherhood of men."

Councillor E. J. Hughes, Mayor of Birkenhead, accepted the statue on behalf of the borough.

She had paid strict attention throughout the lesson, scarcely taking her eyes off the school master. At the end he said: "Now, Lucy, I'm sure you have something interesting to tell us. What is it?" She replied: "Please, sir, do you know you are wearing odd socks?"

"FATIGUE? I just postpone it!"

"No, I don't have 'nerves.' You can't have them, and hold this sort of position. My head used to throb around three o'clock, and certain days, of course, were worse than others.

"Then I learned to rely on Aspirin."

The sure cure for any headache is rest. But sometimes we must postpone it. That's when Aspirin saves the day. Two tablets, and the nagging pain is gone until you are home. And once you are comfortable the pain seldom returns!

Keep Aspirin handy. Don't put it away, or put off taking it. Fighting a headache to finish the day may be heroic, but it is also a little foolish. So is sacrificing a night's sleep because you've an annoying cold, or irritated throat, or grumbling tooth, neuralgia, neuritis. These tablets always relieve. They don't depress the heart, and may be taken freely. That is medical opinion. It is a fact established by the last twenty years of medical practise.

The only caution to be observed is when you are buying Aspirin. Don't take a substitute because it will not act the same. Aspirin is made in Canada.

Sunday School Lesson

November 1. Lesson V—World's Temperance Sunday—Galatians 5: 13-26. Golden Text—Be not drunk with wine, wherein is excess, but be filled with the Spirit.—Ephesians 5: 18.

I. LIBERTY FOR SERVICE, Gal. 5: 13-15.
II. THE ANGEL AND THE BEAST, Gal. 5: 16-26.
III. THE CHRISTIAN CITIZEN, Romans 13: 1-10.
IV. WORKING FOR UTOPIA, Romans. 13: 11-14.

INTRODUCTION—The early church was by no means perfect. The quality of the preaching was of the best; the performance of the pew left much to be desired. That was to be expected. These communities had just been won, partly from an impure paganism—partly from Judaism, a religion of law. The Gentile Christians were in danger of falling back into the impure customs of their former religions. The Jewish believers were, too often, easily persuaded that religion must be a matter of rules and prohibitions. The Galatians seem to have been specially unsteady and easily turned aside. "O foolish Galatians, who hath bewitched you?" cried Paul, Gal. 3: 1.

I. LIBERTY FOR SERVICE, Gal. 5: 13-15.

"You have been called unto liberty," wrote Paul, v. 13. This does not mean that you can do as you please. Liberty is not license. You are not at liberty to interfere with the liberty of your fellow-man. "Your liberty ends where my nose begins," said a man to his threatening opponent. The Christian must think of himself as free, not to sin, or harm his fellow—but free to help him.

The Galatians were worrying about the law. Paul assures them that the man who lives by love fulfils all law, v. 14. He will not harm his brother—nor steal from him—nor tempt him to any wrong. Instead, he will want to do him good. "Personal liberty" cannot be separated from "social responsibility."

The Galatians were also quarrelsome, v. 15. A wrangling church soon breaks up. A house divided against itself cannot stand. "Forget your petty disputes," says Paul, in effect, "and get on with the business."

II. THE ANGEL AND THE BEAST, Gal. 5: 16-26.

The Christian's life is a conflict where the high and the low struggle for the mastery. Paul himself knew all about that warfare, Rom. 7: 16-25. Acting on our lower impulses, we produce a ghastly harvest of sins. Paul gives a partial list of sins which were common among the Galatians. Any one of them is a "beast" which devours a man's finer life, sins of sensuality, v. 19, sins associated with heathen religions, v. 20, sins against society, v. 21. "They which do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God." That is, for all who indulge in these, there is, naturally, no room in the Christian Brotherhood.

To overcome the beasts, one must take the side of the angels. The Spirit, the mind of God functioning in a human body, produces a harvest of positive virtues which displace the lower desires and tastes. A man is not necessarily a Christian who is innocent of adultery, murder, profanity, drinking. A fence-post is also innocent of these. A real Christian, on the other hand, exercises positive virtues—love, joy, peace, long-suffering, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, meekness, self-control. These grow from love as the fruit grows on the tree. These qualities, Paul somewhat dryly remarks, do not call for the interference of the police, v. 23.

The defeat of our lower tendencies is a gradual process. Paul calls it crucifixion—a slow and painful death, v. 24. Our religion must show itself in our common tasks, v. 25. We must live in such a manner that the only explanation is that we are in touch with God.

III. THE CHRISTIAN CITIZEN, Romans 13: 1-10.

This passage seems to point to turbulence and anarchy among the Roman Christians—most likely, the Jewish Christians. Paul makes an appeal for law and order. "The higher powers (v. 1) are the existing authorities—the Roman Empire. He who "resists" the authority will bring upon himself "damnation" (v 2), that is, the punishment always meted out to law-breakers.

IV. WORKING FOR UTOPIA, Romans 13: 11-14.

"Awake out of sleep" (v. 11) is a call for the times. The signs of momentous changes in our economic and social structure are everywhere for those who have eyes to see. Business for gain will be replaced by business for the common good. The master and slave relationship will be replaced by the leader and fellow-worker relationship. Will a new day come through the Spirit of Jesus working in the consecrated intelligence of Christian men, or by the way of revolution? That depends upon us. All our activities and attitudes, as we work among our fellows, must be scrutinized. Wrongs must be righted. "The works of darkness" (v. 12), personal and social sins—drunkenness, impurity, wasteful competition, controversy, must be replaced by the attitudes of Jesus, vs. 13, 14. "Put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ"—that is, let him be your dress for daily wear, not merely for parade purposes. Make no plans for your sensual gratifications.

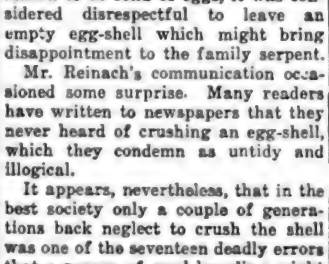
Egg-Shell Etiquette Stirs Paris Diners

Paris.—The French savant Salomon Reinach has precipitated a discussion in the press as to whether it is an important principle of good manners to crush your egg-shell at table after you have consumed a soft-boiled egg.

M. Reinach in a communication to the Academy of Sciences traces the custom back to one of the earliest superstitions of mankind. He stated that Pliny the elder reported that in earliest Roman times it was considered an omen of bad luck if one neglected to crush one's egg-shell.



The custom, M. Reinach found, originated with primitive peoples who were snake worshippers. The snake was a tribal institution and protector of the tribe, the hearth and the family, and nearly everyone in those times had a family snake. As snakes were known to be fond of eggs, it was considered disrespectful to leave an empty egg-shell which might bring disappointment to the family serpent.

Mr. Reinach's communication occasioned some surprise. Many readers have written to newspapers that they never heard of crushing an egg-shell, which they condemn as untidy and illogical.

It appears, nevertheless, that in the best society only a couple of generations back neglect to crush the shell was one of the seventeen deadly errors that a person of good breeding might make in eating a soft-boiled egg, which itself was one of the most difficult rites to perform in good society. The shell had to be cracked just so, and the egg removed in a particular manner. The small portion of egg contained in the cap of the shell had to be eaten from it with a spoon, and then a certain amount of the egg remaining had to be dipped out with a small piece of bread before the process of seasoning was undertaken. When the egg was eaten, the shell had to be taken from the cup and crushed on the plate. Any guest who neglected to do this was immediately crossed off the list of acquaintances and never invited for another week-end.

12 Metals Heavier than Lead

There are at least twelve metals heavier than lead, and ten of them are more precious than gold. They are palladium, platinum, iridium, mercury, asmium, rhodium, rubidium, ruthenium, tantalum, thallium, tungsten and uranium. Osmium, almost twice as heavy as lead, is the heaviest known substance.

Study Reveals Biting Habits of Mosquitoes

Fishermen long have known when fish bite best. Now the periods when mosquitoes bite best, or worst, have been revealed by entomologists of the United States Department of Agriculture.

There are mosquitoes that bite only at night, others that bite only during the day, some that bite best at sunrise and some best at sundown.

There is one grain of comfort for the mosquito-ridden citizen. Only the female mosquito bites. The male feeds on nectar and similar substances.

Here are some mosquito "schedules":

The "rain barrel" or common mosquito bites only at night and can find her victims no matter how dark it is. When flying it makes that irritating singing noise which is familar to every one.

The yellow-fever mosquito usually bites close to the ground or attacks from behind and often crawls under clothing to bite. It bites only in the daytime and is busiest early in the morning and late in the afternoon. It flies quietly. It will bite indoors all day.

The fresh-water marsh mosquito, known under the scientific name Mansonia, a severe biter, is busiest just at dusk. It passes the day in the grass and will bite during the day if disturbed.

Malarial mosquitoes will bite all night long and sometimes, too, in the daytime, especially on dark days.

"This is our golden wedding anniversary—married just fifty years ago today—and in all that time, my little wife has never spoken one cross word to me!"—Tampa Morning Tribune.

SYMPATHY

There never was so much sympathy as there is today. Witness the increased tolerance for diversity of opinion, the increased courtesy of controversialists, the growing tendency to dwell on the good side of men and systems.

The time is speeding on
When each shall find his own in all men's good,
And all shall work in noble brotherhood.
Momerie.

Many a man's strong health is due to his weak backbone.

These New Hats And the Depression

They may laugh at the new hats the women are wearing, but "one can not laugh off the impetus these styles have given to a score of industries."

In fact, continues Alice Hughes in her column in the New York World-Telegram, "instead of sneering at Eugenie, the milliners look upon her as a savior." And it is not the milliners only, to judge from what this writer goes on to say, not by a long shot:

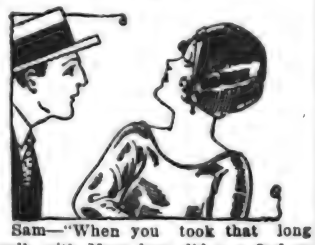
The Retail Millinery Association informs us that gold now courses through the veins of the trade where formerly only red ink flowed.

To begin with, the Danbury, Connecticut, hat factories, whose wheels had slowed down to snail's pace, suddenly whirred into demon speed—due to Eugenie—and have operated on a 24-hour-a-day schedule since August. In that month the highest pay-roll ever recorded by these hatters was paid out—$1,000,000.

Millinery labor throughout the country has increased 25 per cent., dyers are 30 per cent. busier since July, when the Eugenie elegancies first flared up. Hat label makers' work has increased by 75 per cent.

Feather dealers are writing 30 per cent. more business on their books; so are the makers of ready-to-wear hats and also those who make hatboxes. Fur felt body dealers are speeding ahead with a 70 per cent. increase. Blockers are blocking 40 per cent. more hats.

Hair net people are more than 30 per cent. ahead and stores' retail millinery sales are from 10 per cent. and upward greater than last year at this time.



Europeans Have Better Chance of Long Life

Paris.—A European at 40 has a better chance of living to the age of 65 than the average American, in the opinion of a group of American doctors who have just completed a tour of French health resorts. Periods of rest, health examinations and self-discipline as to diet and exercise have made the European health conscious and more concerned with rational living than the American, according to these physicians.

"We have prolonged the span of life in the United States, but we do not live any longer," said Dr. Frederic Sondern, director of the laboratories of the New York Lying-in Hospital. "We have accomplished this by saving the lives of young children, but at the same time we have neglected the care of chronic diseases.

"In this the European spas are doing exactly what we have left undone. They are giving importance to increasing the span of life of the adult. The European of middle age is apt to live much longer than the American.

Dr. A. H. Corwin of New York, a former officer of the New York Academy of Medicine, declared that American mineral waters were equal to many famed springs of the Continent, but said the cure idea had not grown in the United States to the extent it had in Europe because it was difficult under the prohibition laws and restrictions against gambling and racing to make the American spas as attractive and interesting for a three-weeks' rest as the Continental resorts, Vichy, he pointed out, is visited annually by 130,000 who take the cure.

Sam—"When you took that long walk with Mary how did you find so much to talk about?"

Sue—"We happened to pass a girl we both knew."

More reputations have been saved, more dangers averted, more family quarrels quieted, more rampant women placated, and more crises of one kind and another safely passed by saving and doing nothing than by any other one method.—Dr. Frank Crane.

Canada Third On Silver List

Dominion's Output Was 26,443,823 Fine Ounces in 1930

Canada ranks third among the silver-producing countries of the world and is consequently an important factor in the study of the silver problem now being carried on under the auspices of the International Chamber of Commerce, according to a recent Canadian Pacific Railway bulletin. The four largest producers of silver in the world are Mexico, the United States, Canada and Peru, in the order named. Together they supply more than 80 per cent. of the total silver production of the world. In 1930 the Canadian production was 16,443,823 fine ounces. The latest comparative figures available are for 1929, when the production of the dominion was 23,143,261 ounces. In that year Mexico led with an output of 108,700,372 fine ounces. The United States came second with 61,233,321 ounces, and Peru fourth with 21,495,169 fine ounces. The world production of silver in that year was 261,715,021 ounces of silver.

"Silver mining in Canada is not a distinct industry as silver generally occurs with other metals," the bulletin continues. "The two main branches of the industry are silver-cobalt mining, which is confined to Ontario, and the silver-lead-zinc mining industry, which operates in Nova Scotia, Quebec, Ontario, British Columbia, and in the Yukon and Northwest Territories. British Columbia led among the Canadian Provinces. The output of that Province was 11,825,930 fine ounces, while Ontario came second with 10,205,683 ounces. The Yukon supplied 3,746,226 fine ounces and Quebec came fourth with 571,164 ounces. There was also a production of a little less than 100,000 ounces from Manitoba, and a small production from Nova Scotia.

"The principle producers in the silver-cobalt industry in 1930 were the Nipissing Mine, the Mining Corporation and the O'Brien at Cobalt; the Keeley, Frontier-Lorrain and Lorrain Trout Lake at South Lorrain, and the Miller Lake O'Brien, Morrison and Castle Tretheway in the Gowganda area. The Nipissing Mining Company was the only company in this group producing silver bullion in 1930. During that year this group of mines produced 223,452 tons of ore and milled 202,565 tons to produce 3,392 tons of concentrates; ore cyanided amounted to 40,406 tons and silver bullion production reached 1,544,766 fine ounces. Shipments of ores and concentrates to the Canadian smelters amounted to 5,332 tons and to European and United States smelters, 1,696 tons, making a total of 7,028 tons in 1930 as against 5,195 tons in 1929. The total value of all shipments, including bullion, was $3,637,181, as against $3,918,316 in 1929.

"British Columbia is the leading centre of the silver-lead-zinc mining industry. In 1930 this Province, besides producing 45 per cent. of Canada's silver, was the origin of 97 per cent. of the lead and 93 per cent. of the zinc of the Dominion. The Sullivan mine, noted the world over for its output of lead and zinc, is the largest individual silver-producing mine in Canada.

"The largest operations in this industry are carried on by the Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company in the district about Trail, B.C. This company in 1930 introduced a new method of recovering zinc and lead, known as 'slag-fuming.' Electrolytic zinc is produced by this company and also by the Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting Company at Flin-Flon, Man. Electrolytic cadmium is produced in the refining of zinc at the Trail plant.

"Besides holding third place among the world producers of silver in 1930 Canada ranked fourth among those producing lead and fourth in the smelter output of zinc. Canada and Central Africa produce about equal amounts of cobalt. Among the metals and minerals produced in Canada silver held eighth place in 1930. Lead held sixth and zinc ninth in point of value."

Visitor: "Do you like reciting, dear?"

Child: "Oh, no, I hate it, really. But Mummy only makes me do it when she wants people to go."

Can't PLAY
Can't REST

—child needs Castoria

WHEN a child is fretful and irritable, seems distressed and uncomfortable, can't play, can't sleep, it is a pretty sure sign that something is wrong. Right here is where Castoria fits into a child's scheme—the very purpose for which it was formulated years ago! A few drops and the condition which caused the trouble is righted; comfort quickly brings restful sleep.

Nothing can take the place of Castoria for children; it's perfectly harmless, yet always effective. For the protection of your wee one—for your own peace of mind—keep this old reliable preparation always on hand. But don't keep it just for emergencies; let it be an every-day aid. Its gentle action will ease and [illegible] infant who cannot [illegible] in more liberal doses it will effectively help to regulate sluggish bowels in an older child.

All druggists have Castoria; it's genuine if you see Chas. H. Fletcher's signature and this name-plate:

88th Anniversary of Trinity Church

Large Congregations on Sunday—with Splendid Supper and Program on Tuesday

With an early morning service in which a goodly number held quiet communion with God, the 88th anniversary of the erection of the present Church building, began on Sunday last.

It was continued through the day with S. S. at 10 a. m. and at 11 a. m. a large congregation gathered to voice their gratitude and praise to God for His many unfailing and increasing mercies and blessings. The Church was well filled at 7 p.m. with a reverent and devotional congregation. The Rev. David Cornish M.A of Port Dover assisted the Rector Rev. R.J.W. Perry and was the special preacher. His quiet, thoughtful, helpful sermons left a marked impression. It was not only a pleasure for the citizens of Streetsville to greet this native son, who went out from us and into the ministry of the Church, returning to the place of early and hallowed memories with messages of hope and helpfulness, but to Mr.Cornish and his wife it was the renewing of old fellowships and the recalling of old associations along the hillsides and banks of the Credit that brought up tender and pleasant memories. Some of the old familiar landmarks, the home where he was born, the old hickory tree that he had hoped to see, had passed away, but he was delighted to meet and talk with many of his old schoolmates of those earlier happy days. In the early morning Sunday hours we stood in the cemetery over the grave of his grandfather and his little sister called early to the "Happy Land." What a rich and peaceful heritage the Christian has here now! What a glorious hope and inheritance as sons of God and joint heirs with Jesus Christ is laid up in Glory.

The Choir, in full strength, led the services in their usual hearty and devotional way, rendering effectively the anthem, "Head of the Church Triumphant."

The annual fowl supper and entertainment held on Tuesday night eclipsed all former gatherings of this nature. The sumptuous, appetizing and artistic supper in the beautiful and commodious basement, so well arranged for the purpose, won warm appreciation from the crowd,who for two and a half hours, thronged the tables.

At 8.30 the program given by Mr Capps, Dr. Peaker, Mr. Chudley and Mr. Hastel delighted the large and happy gathering. The numbers given by Mrs. W.H. Brydon were very splendidly rendered and inspiring. Mrs. Fulton was very effective as accompanist. The congregation and citizens generally feel they are under deep ohligation to these splendid and generous contributors of such a program. We were also favored by piano numbers from Miss Mary Crozier and Miss Mary Philpott, which were also well appreciated.

The play, "Never Again" given by Misses Edith Drennan and Dorothy Graydon and Messrs. Albert Quennell and Arthur Arch, was well received and places the congregation under a further obligation of gratitude to these frequent and capable entertainers.

A special feature was the presentation of two beautiful walnut chairs for the Hall, by Mr. and Mrs. James Halsey of Cooksville, in memory of the latter's mother, Mrs. Taylor, who for many years was an interested untiring and faithful worker and member of Trinity Church. We may never know how much our work is appreciated when we are in the flesh, but it is the right and proper and seemly thing for us to give some tangible, useful and timely recognition of those who bravely toiled among us,but "who now are working still where no disappointment hinders, no self will."

Our mutual thanks and gratitude are recorded to one and all who made the evening and the 88th anniversary such a proven success

Sunday next is "All Saints Day" a day that ought to mean much to all those who have had friends go on in the faith and fear of the Lord.

Holy Communion will be held at 11 a.m. when we hope our people will come in the spirit of worship with hallowed memories of the past and with joyful hopes of the here after

The beautiful anthem "God shall wipe away all tears" will be rendered by the choir.

The Deanery banquet will take place at Bolton on Friday evening next, addressed by Rev. Dr. Dyson Hague of the Church of Epiphany Toronto, who is noted for his splendid addresses to men. Cars will leave the Hall at 6 30

IT PAYS TO ADVERTISE

Hunter, Wounded, Is Carried Eight Miles Through Dense Woods

Sudbury.—Seventeen hours after his leg was badly mangled by the accidental discharge of a rifle, Mike Sachasky, Creighton Mines, had the leg amputated in the local hospital and stands a fair chance of recovery.

The accident occurred far back in the bush, and companions of the wounded man were compelled to carry him by boat, truck and hand to the hospital. For eight miles of the distance they carried him through dense brush.

Saturday, Sachasky and six companions went to Trout Lake. They intended to spend the week-end in a cabin there. One of the group, John Vranic, picked up a rifle. He tested the mechanism and the gun discharged, a mushroom bullet striking Sachasky in the leg.

One of the men walked to Blezard Valley, a three-hour hike, and notified the police. Constable Ernest Keen of the local provincial police staff, responded, taking a doctor with him. The wounded man was rowed across the lake, carried eight miles to the highway, and then brought the balance of the distance by truck.

24 Italian Planes To Visit New York

Rome.—Italy plans to send a formation flight of twenty-four seaplanes commanded by Air Minister General Italo Balbo to New York next month, it was learned recently. The tentative date has been set for November 15. The planes will leave from Lake Arbetello, the starting point of last year's squadron flight to Brazil, and will fly via Libson and the Azores.

It was understood that General Balbo hoped to fly back across the Atlantic, but his plans for returning to Italy were not definite.

The seaplanes designated for the flight are of the S-55 type, which were used for the south Atlantic crossing to Brazil. Each machine will carry two pilots, a mechanic and a radio operator.

8,000,000 Trees to be Planted in Three States

Milwaukee, Wis.—Eight million trees will be planted on 12,000 acres of federal forest lands in Wisconsin, Michigan and Minnesota before the ground freezes this fall, H. Basil Wales, assistant regional forester, has announced here.

Wisconsin's share is 770,000 trees on 1,100 acres in the northern section of the state.

Since July tractors have travelled 12,000 miles plowing furrows in which the small two-year-old trees will be planted. These furrows are eight feet apart and the trees will be planted at intervals of eight feet in the furrows.

The infant trees were procured at nurseries in East Tawas, Mich., and Cass Lake, Minn.

It is easy to find fault, but it's hard to tell what to do with it.

Avoid Influenza Month By Month

Month by month rules for fall and winter to avoid having influenza when the season for this disease comes around next February or March are suggested by Dr. L. D. Bristol, health director of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company. During October, Dr. Bristol s. s, the would-be avoider of influenza will continue to get as much sunshine as possible and store up additional sunshine effects for the winter. He will see his physician and have an examination of nose, throat and lungs for unsuspected infections or abnormalities. Chronic catarrh or similar disease will be treated at once. In November care must be taken to keep the body warm on the first chilly days; for example, by plenty of clothes on outdoor occasions such as football games. In December the thing to watch is an adequate combination of warmth and ventilation in rooms used for work, living or sleeping. Dr. Bristol believes in open bedroom windows at night even in cold weather. January requires chiefly the precaution of avoiding persons who have colds, as evidenced by coughing or sneezing. All crowds are to be avoided if possible. Hands are to be washed often to remove dangerous germs and care taken in using articles like towels which may have been used by other people. As the chief danger season for influenza arrives in February and March, the careful avoider will continue, Dr. Bristol advises, to keep a check on health habits, to eat plenty of proper food, drink enough pure water, get sufficient sleep and otherwise keep in good condition until April, when the danger will be past.

Canadian Gold Production May Reach 100 Million

Winnipeg.—Canada's gold production will reach $100,000,00 within ten years as the result of expansion on the part of present producers and the coming of new mintes, declares Sir John Aird, president of the Canadian Bank of Commerce.

Pointing to the record of Canadian gold mines which have more than doubled production within the last ten years, Sir John was confident that the anticipated increase from the present high record production rate of over $1,000,000 a week would be realized within the time specified. Canada would then be producing half the Rand's present output and one-quarter of the world's present turnout.

"Gold is what we most need," said Sir John. He expressed the view that the steadily increasing output from Canadian mines could materially help the present situntion.

With respect to the disturbed conditions resulting from the suspension of gold payments by Great Britain, Sir John expressed the opinion that people had temporarily lost their bearings. Securities had been thrown overboard without regard to their intrinsic worth and much confusion had resulted in regard to gold as the standard of values. In spite of this, he was confident toward the general outlook.

"Business men and financiers must learn that mass production is not merely large-scale production."—Edward A. Filene.

Firebug Quiet Over Week-End

No more Blazes Set—Farmers Still on Qui Vive

Hamilton.—The week-end having passed without further alarm, the farmers of Wentworth county were breathing easier Sunday night and believed that the firebug who fired 13 barns had departed for parts unknown.

County and provincial police officers had no new developments to report. The flood of calls regarding "suspicious characters" ended Friday. But there are many owners who are still standing on guard.

After investigating the series of blazes started two weeks ago, Provincial Inspector John Miller, sent here from Toronto for special work, expressed the opinion on Saturday that there had been undue alarm, and that the farmers has been too panicky.

Many of the fires were just accidents, he thought. A warning that farmers must not fire upon persons just because they regard them as suspects was the final word of the inspector.

A. W. Hilburn of Galt, secretary of the North Dumfries and South Waterloo Mutual Insurance Company, agreed that some of the fires could not be listed as being of incendiary origin.

After a conference at the Court House, Alfred Cuddy, deputy commissioner of provincial police, returned to Toronto.

Five-dimension Universe Einstein's Newest Idea

New York.—A universe with five dimensions instead of four, is the latest conception of Dr. Albert Einstein, as announced in a statement written by him and made public by the Josiah Macy, Jr., foundation.

The German scientist's relativity theory will not be affected by this change in view, which was made necessary by recent astronomical discoveries disagreeing with Einstein's earlier idea of the universe.

Early Financial Recovery Predicted for Great Britain

New York.—A note of confidence in the early economic and financial recovery of Great Britain was sounded by Sir Alexander Lawrence, former chief assistant solicitor of the British Treasury, in a recent address before the Canadian Club in New York.

"We shall know very shortly the result of the general election in Great Britain, and I feel certain that result will show an expression of confidence in the National Government," Sir Alexander declared.

"Today there is as great musical talent in England and America as in any other country in the world."—Albert Coates.

Japanese Destroy Chinese Barracks

In addition to floods devastating large areas China also has scenes like this to face. Japanese artillery wrought havoc with these barracks at Nanling, Manchuria.

It is surely not too early to begin to think about that popular season to which we all look forward—Christmas.

And to think about it from a correctly Scouting standpoint.

For the past two years, in fact ever since Lone Scouting has been an organized branch of the Association in this province, the Lonies have "Done Their Bit" towards lightening the task of Santa Claus as Christmas time.

It is not necessary to remind you that in this year of financial and business depression, of unemployment and hardship, there will be many to whom Christmas will bring only memories of better times, and the greatest opportunity yet offered for Scout Service will be brought within your reach.

Think of the many children whose lives can be made happy because Santa Claus, through his Lone Scout Assistant, did not forget them! There are over 300 Lonies in Ontario, and if each one will look after just one unfortunate kiddie, what a splendid record that will make!

Lone Patrols can organize "Scout Toy Shops," and even isolated Lonies can do their share. Now is the time to hunt up those broken and discarded toys, dolls, books, etc., and get busy cleaning and repairing them. Remember two broken dolls often make one good one! How happy will be the little boy who can pull that old broken clockwork engine around on a string, after you have taken out the works, repaired the wheels and given it a coat of paint!

Make up your mind, RIGHT NOW, that YOU are going to do your Christmas Good Turn this year, and then get busy! Do little odd jobs to earn the money necessary to pay the postage on your Good Turn Parcel—Lone Scout Headquarters will send you the names, addresses and ages of children who will not have any good cheer this year if Lone Scout Santa Claus does not take care of them!

If you go about it in the right way, you will find people only too pleased to donate to you odd pieces of lumber and cans of paint to repair the toys with.

The Lone Scout Department is most anxious that this year all records are beaten in this great Christmas Good Turn scheme, and what better way can you have of living up to your third Scout Law, which says: "A Scout's duty is to be useful and to help others."

Write to your Scoutmaster immediately, and tell him that you wish to help. Have your name enrolled, and say how many children you are prepared to take care of. Then get busy and make up attractive parcels. Headquarters will send you the names and addresses of boys and girls to whom they can be sent.

Thus your Xmas will be happy, because you have brought joy to someone less fortunate than yourself.

Lone Scout Question Box

Are there Lone Scouts in any other provinces? (L. G., Linden). Yes, Manitoba has a Lone Scout Troop about 200 strong, and there is also a Troop in Prince Edward Island. The other provinces have Lone Scouts, but they are not organized into Troops, working individually under the respective Provincial Headquarters offices.

What is the "Silver Wolf?" (Lonie, Simcoe). This is the highest award in Scouting. It is the Chief Scout's personal recognition of exceptional services, and the number awarded is very small indeed. It is a Silver Wolf, suspended around the neck by a green and yellow ribbon.

Lone Scouts are invited to send questions to "Lone E," c/o Lone Scout Department, 330 Bay Street, Toronto 2, who will endeavour to answer them through these columns.

If you are interested in the Boy Scouts, and unable to join a regular troop, write to the Lone Scout Department for particulars of how you may become a Lone Scout. Boys between the ages of 12 and 18 are eligible.—"Lone E."

Peru Forbids Wage Cuts Also Discharges Forbidden

Washington.—In Peru it's against the law to discharge a worker or cut his wages.

Mr. Julian D. Smith, acting commercial attache at Lima, reported to the Commerce Department the Peruvian Government had issued a decree prohibiting all agricultural, industrial and commercial enterprises from reducing wages or discharging manual laborers.

Chilean Government to Cut Budget $35,000,000

Santiago, Chile.—The Chilean Government expects to cut 300,000,000 pesos, approximately $35,000,000, from its budget for 1932 as compared with 1931, reducing the public expenditures from 1,000,000 pesos to 700,000,000.

The Ministry of the Interior announced that economies have been effected in that department which will reduce expenses from 150,000,000 pesos to 130,000,000. The Foreign Office announced an estimate reduced from 14,500,000 pesos to 6,600,000. Other drastic reductions are expected to be announced soon.

Mechanical Lung May Save Player

Member of Army Team Sustains Fracture of Neck Vertebrae

New Haven, Conn.—The measured pulsations of a "mechanical lung" and the skill of some of America's greatest surgeons were all that stood on Sunday night between Cadet Richard Brimsley Sheridan, Jr., and death.

Two fractured and dislocated vertebrae in his neck had been adjusted by Dr. Harvey Cushing of Boston, famous brain surgeon, Dr. Ernest Sykes of St. Louis and Dr. Samuel Clark of New Haven in an emergency operation soon after he was carried out of the Yale-Army football game Saturday. But the delicate nerves that control breathing had been impaired by the shock and he lay in a state of coma, unable to breathe without the respirator's aid.

Doctors revealed that when he was carried off the gridiron Sheridan's heart beat was so feeble it could not be heard without a stethoscope.

Sheridan's neck had been twisted when he tackled a Yale runner and the fourth vertebrae had slipped out of place, blocking the tubes which lead to the lungs. While an interne administered carbon-dioxide through a mask at intervals, the surgeons worked over the cadet's form in the white-tiled emergency room of the hospital.

Once the throat passage was cleared and the vertebrae adjusted, they ordered him placed in a Drinker respirator, such as is used in respiratory infantile paralysis.

Gold Suspension Causes Revival In Britain's Cotton Industry

Manchester, England.—Many Lancashire and Yorkshire cotton mills report increased activity as a result of an influx of orders since the gold standard was suspended.

Mills, in which the spindles had long been silent, are now humming with activity, executing rush orders, while the nearby Yorkshire district cotton doubling mills are working overtime.

One large mill at Rochdale has started a night shift to fill its orders and at Haslingden another cotton mill will operate on a 55-hour week instead of the usual 48.

Trade union officials have objected to the overtime work, but the workers, it is said, are generally glad to earn the extra money.

The sudden business pickup is attributed to suspension of the gold standard inasmuch as the drop in the value of the pound sterling against other world currencies amounts virtually to a reduction in the price of manufactured goods making Great Britain a good country in which to buy.

Britain Buying U.S. Cotton

New York.—Lancashire mills are selling more yarns and cloth than recently now that their cost in terms of foreign exchange rates has been reduced by the depreciation in sterling, the New York cotton exchange service reported.

Cables from England are more cheerful and an increase in mill activity has been noted. Margins have been improved and spinners' are buying freely for both immediate and forward delivery. Liverpool is inquiring on an extensive scale for shipments from the south and is buying on a larger scale after doing almost nothing for weeks. A large volume of Egyptian cotton has been sold at Liverpool.

Advices from the Continent, the report said, are irregular with some increase in mill activity reported in some sections. The effect of British competition is being felt, but activity on the whole is averaging better than for some months past.

Where Football Is Played in Silks

In Italy Medieval Calcio Is Again Played in the Jaunty Uniforms of Ancient Times

By Sean O'Larkin, in The New York Times.

Just about the time the American football season is at its height, the Italian, that is to say, the Florentine season, which dates back to the sixteenth century, will be ending. And while varsity elevens are wearing their headgear, shoulder pads, reinforced canvas breeches, knee guards and spiked shoes, the Florentine "twenty-sevens" will be putting their uniforms of silk and satin away in mothballs.

Yes, uniforms of silk and satin—including pancake hats—is correct. For in Florence where il gioco del calcio is as indigenous as the shade of Dante, the games is played with great formality by hardy youths, who insist upon the gentlemanly attire dictated by the old Tuscan custom.

But the calcio is a man's game despite its fragile habiliments. Whether the players wear plus-fours or plus-eights makes little difference.

The game, of Grecian origin—and probably Cro-Magnon, too, for our ancestors undoubtedly kicked a bone around in playful moments—was revived last year in Florence for the first time since 1898. Prior to that, it was played in 1739.

The revival was fostered by Premier Mussolini's mandate for general sports programs throughout Italy to improve the health of the youth. And in Florence it has proved to be an attarction for the tourist. For that reason, the calcio players pit brawn and wit under broiling Summer suns instead of waiting for cooler days.

The events is always subject to weather conditions. There is no playing in mist and cold drizzles. The costumes could not staand that. Since local groups vie with each other, there is no college spirit displayed. The factional interest has a gastronomic basis, for the prize of each game is a white ox with gilded horns and hoofs, provided by the municipal authorities. This prize is paraded to the bailiwick of the winners and barbecued.

One particular game is recalled. It was played in the Piazza della Signoria, the field hemmed by the historic Palazzo Vecchio, the Loggia del Lanzi, the sculpture of Michelangelo, Cellini and Orcagna and fine old Tuscan houses. A grand stand for the general public was erected across from the Loggia on whose steps were gathered the man officials of the calcio. These latter were also in sixteenth-century costume, for the event takes on the fancy dress atmosphere of a Beaux Arts Ball.

At sundown the procession began with the tolling of the bell in the old Palazzo, a bell that once summoned the populace to arms or to a public debate. The participants were gathered a mile away in the Piazza Santa Maria Novella and the bell started them marching—halberdiers in riotous uniforms, trumpeteers, the president of the calcio, looking for all the world like Dante himself with Petrarch's laurels on his head, his guard of honor wearing armor out of the museums; four ball-carriers, the referees, the players' drummers and trumpeters, the men of the White team with their flag-bearer, a platoon of pikemen; the Green team and finally the fatted white ox protected by a rear guard of halberdiers.

Through the old streets this procession wound its way, entering the field from the Galleria degli Uffizi. Respects were paid to the populace amid fanfares of brass and the rattle of drums. The players, resplendent in silken jackets with satin trim and bloomers—or doublets, if you insist—and light running shoes without spikes, maintained a military demeanor. No head or nose or shin-guards were in evidence. At a given signal the pancake hats were doffed and gathered up by little pages.

The twenty-seven men of each team took their places on the field, while their standard bearers secreted themselves in little tents at either end of the field marking the goals their playfaced. The sandy floor was studded with wooden pegs marking the starting position of each group of players. Why the men broke up into groups no one seemed to know—not even the officials; it was just tradition.

The object of the game was to kick, throw or place the ball—about the size of a basketball with the bounce of a golf ball—over a three-foot barrier and under a wire net three feet above the barrier, both of which stretched the width of the field. It was not half so easy as it looked, for if the ball went over the wire net among the spectators, half a point was gained by the goal defenders.

In the old days, the play ran from sundown until midnight on a field lighted by flaimbeaux. Now it is limited to an hour of solid running, kicking and rough-housing.

A well-mannered youth dressed like Petrarch and in the colors of both teams, half white, half green, was the pallaio or kicker-off. His sole function was to throw the ball between the opposing innanzi, or runners, at the boom of a little brass cannon on the steps of the Palazzo.

The innanzi, fifteen to a team, faced one another in the centre of the field in groups of fives; they were akin to our tackles. Behind them were five sconciatori, or fronts, four datori innanzi, or half-backs and guarding each goal were three datori addietro, or fullbacks.

The calcio is a combination of football, soccer and backetball derived from the ancient Greek game of "Harpasto," which the Roman legions brought into Italy. Once the ball was in motion, it was hotly pursued by the players, all of whom showed a sudden lack of team-work, preferring mob action. Each man did his best to make the goal himself. The ball was kept bouncing by kicks, punches, tosses and head-butting as in soccer. The player who corralled the ball had to "dribble" it, backetball fashion, as he ran, or kick it ahead of him.

As a result of fifty-four men's converging on a bounding ball, flying feet and fists frequently connected with faces, heads and stomachs.

Despite the costumes and pageantry, this game was played in deadly earnest. The gilded white ox was at stake. The Whites came from the town proper and the Greens from the south bank of the Arno. Bad blood was frequently shown, and when the Greens pulled themselves out of a losing streak by piling up points, the Whites "ganged" on their best players, putting a few to counting stars.

But the Greens triumphed with a score of 6 to 4, more than half of their points contributed by the Whites on faults. Then the players assembled before the grand stand in military formation, accepted the ovation with gallant bows in unison, replaced the pancake hats on battered heads and started the march through the city to the starting point. The Greens led the white ox proudly, while the Whites followed with their standard furled.

"Air Policemen"

A new innovation in traffic control is now being tried in Great Britain.

The "sky patrol" have several advantages over the policemen in cars or on point duty. They can soon see, for instance, the threat of a traffic block. At the first sign of one they will signal the news to the men on the roads—with the result that a stream of cars is diverted and a hold-up avoided.

They can also report cases of dangerous driving or "hugging" below them—and an offender is likely to receive the surprise of his life when he learns, on being brought to book, that his downfall has been caused by the innocent-looking plane which has lately been hovering over his head.

FASHION HINT

"How to make my old short skirts conform to the new length was a problem to me until I hit on this plan. I dropped the hems; and as the part that had been turned under was darker than the rest, I redyed the entire dress, after having bleached the goods, following directions in the Diamond Dyes package.

"I used Diamond Dyes for the redyeing, of course. I have dyed many things with these wonderful colors. They have saved me many dollars and have never failed to give perfect results—smooth, even colors—fast to wear and washing. Friends think my things are new when I redye or tint them with Diamond Dyes. They do give the most gorgeous colors!"

CHILD need REGULATING?

CASTORIA WILL DO IT!

When your child needs regulating, remember this: the organs of babies and children are delicate. Little bowels must be gently purged—never forced. That's why Castoria is used by so many doctors and mothers. It is specially made for children's ailments; contains no harsh, harmful drugs, no narcotics. You can safely give it to young infants for colic pains. Yet it is an equally effective regulator for older children. The next time your child has a little cold or fever, or a digestive upset, give him the help of Castoria, the children's own remedy. Genuine Castoria always has the name:

Ling Production Shows Increase

Many Valuable Uses Found for Fish of Ugly Appearance

The value of production of the fisheries of Canada last year was $47,798,920, this total being made up of $41,451,977 from sea fisheries and $6,346,943 from inland fisheries. In this connection, and with a view to augmenting the variety of edible fish caught in Canada, the possibility of establishing a market for the large quantity of ling or burbot found in the Dominion has been engaging the attention of the Game and Fisheries Department of the Ontario Government.

The ling (Lota Maculosa Le Sueur) is the only member of the cod family found in fresh water. It is widely distributed throughout the Great Lakes and is also found in the other large lakes of Canada. Its average weight is somewhere in the neighborhood of from two to five pounds, but specimens weighing 10 pounds are not uncommon. It may be caught in the same manner as whitefish, herring and lake trout, viz., with gill nets, hooks and pound nets.

As a result of careful experiments ling has been found to be a palatable fish, and if a market can be secured after an educational campaign pointing out its value and suitability as food, this would doubtless be the best way of ridding Canada's lakes of excessive numbers of the species, to the advantage of lake trout, with which it competes directly, and of more desirable species, such as pike, pike-perch, herring and whitefish, upon which it preys.

A Food and Fertilizer

During the past few years the University of Toronto and other centres have been making a thorough study of the possibilities of ling as a food, as fish meal or fertilizer and as a source of liver oil. From an economic viewpoint, of course, the use of ling as food is the most important, and until recently the consensus of opinion on the North American continent has been against it, possibly on account of the fish's forbidding appearance. The fact remains, however, that in Europe the ling is considered to be a "delicately flavored fish" with an excellent market, and the liver and roe have always been looked upon as delicacies. In the United States, through a campaign conducted by the Bureau of Fisheries, a market has been established, and during the war it was obtainable in Canada, but as soon as the scarcity of meat came to an end no further attempt to continue the market was made.

In 1928 some interesting experiments in the cooking of ling were made by the Department of Household Science of the University of Toronto, and the outcome was that fried ling was found to be "palatable, tender, juicy, and had a delicate flavor." Fish loaf made from boiled ling was "just as edible as that made from cod." Fish cakes had "a fresh, delicate flavor and were as good as, or superior to those made from cod."

From the commercial viewpoint there appears to be a possibility of creating a market for ling livers. They are of large size, being about 10 per cent. of the round weight of the fish, and some excellent recipes for canning and cooking have been prepared. These show how the livers may be prepared as soups, toasts, liver loaf, and as fillings for tomatoes. Investigations into the effect of ling livers in dietaries, with particular regard to anaemia, are being carried on in the Toronto General Hospital.

Ling Liver Oil

Since ling is a relative of cod, it was considered that the liver oil might serve medicinally as cod liver oil. Oil was, therefore, extracted, and the yield, color and taste were found to compare favorably with cod liver oil.

"The prospect for future marketing of ling looks bright, and without doubt this fish can be turned into a source of profit to the fisherman. Its edible qualities can no longer be disputed, and as an added source of profit the liver oil might be manufactured while the liver itself may find a profitable market. The Cinderella of the fish world, disguised because of its homely appearance, should take its proper place among the recognized profitable commercial fish."

In the above words, Mr. Hugh D. Branion, M.A., of the University of Toronto, sums up the result of his investigations into the profitable use of ling or burbot.

Tom—"Well, I've decided to pin my faith to that girl."

Dick—"Charitable resolve. No woman I know needs something pinned to her more than she."

Passerby (running into house after hearing screams)—"If you don's quit beating your child I'll call the police."

Passerby—"Oh, pardon me. I'm so sorry I intruded."

A little girl who had been left to watch the soup was presently heard to sing out: "Oh, mother, come quick, the soup is getting bigger than the pot."

Hostess—"Are you really a bank examiner, Mr. Tomkins?"

Mr. Tompkins—"Yes, madam, I happen to be."

Hostess—"Then I hope you will have time to examine baby's bank. No matter how much we shake it, nothing will come out of it."

The lack of money also is the root of a good bit of evil. Rival suitors for the hand of a modern girl often run neck and neck. There must be some difference in pills; every now and then someone gets hold of the wrong box and the undertaker is called in. Prosperity may be just around the corner, but nobody has as yet succeeded in locating the particular corner. We have no quarrel with those who can't, but we have unlimited contempt for those who won't.

Bride—"You mustn't expect me to give my girlhood ways up all at once."

Groom—"Certainly not, my dear. Go on taking allowance from your father just as if nothing had happened."

Nurse—"Are you going to give my patient something to slow down his heart action?"

Doctor—"Yes, an elderly nurse."

Mother—"Mabel's young man has taken offense at something. Have you said anything to him?"

Father—"Not a word. I haven't seen him since I mailed him last month's light bill."

To-day. I believe in to-day. It is all that I possess. The past is of value only as it makes the life of to-day fuller and freer. To-morrow depends upon the present—I must make good to-day. It is no distinction merely to possess money. The tribute of respect which cannot be measured in dollars is paid by our friends and neighbors to the man who honestly serves.

Tom (gloomily)—"On the rocks."

One scantily-clad flapper asked a football player if the team didn't get cold trotting around the field without any stockings on. People who carry glass bottles never should sit on stones. It must take a lot of thought to pick a party leader that all factions of the party can't be mad at.

Reduce the Acid

SICK stomachs, sour stomachs and indigestion usually mean excess acid. The stomach nerves are over-stimulated.

Too much acid makes the stomach and intestines sour. Alkali kills acid instantly. The best form is Phillips' Milk of Magnesia, because one harmless dose neutralizes many times its volume in acid. For 50 years the standard with physicians everywhere.

Take a spoonful in water and your unhappy condition will probably end in five minutes. Then you will always know what to do. Crude and harmful methods will never appeal to you. Go, prove this for your own sake. It may save a great many disagreeable hours.

Be sure to get the genuine Phillips' Milk of Magnesia prescribed by physicians in correcting excess acids.

MINARD'S "KING OF PAIN" LINIMENT

IN BED WITH BACKACHE

"Two years ago I suffered with severe pains in the small of my back, and could with difficulty hold myself upright. At times I had to go to bed for a week at a time. I went to and from hospital for 3 months, and they certainly did me good, but they told me they could not keep giving me medicine, but that I needed complete rest for 6 months, away from the children. I could not bring myself to be parted from the children, so I did not go to hospital any more. I started using Kruschen Salts and have had no trouble with my back since."—Mrs. W.

Kruschen contains vital salts that go right down to the root cause of backache. Soon after you start on Kruschen, the sharpest pains of backache cease. As you persevere with the "little daily dose" the twinges become less and less frequent, until finally you hardly know what an ache or pain is. Then, if you're wise, you'll prevent the possibility of a relapse by continuing the tiny, tasteless pinch of Kruschen every morning.

Mr. McKinney Compares Fertilizers in Corn Growing

Mr. A. McKinney, Snelgrove, has recently completed a test of two fertilizers in producing ensilage corn in co-operation with the Dept. of Chemistry, O.A.C. Guelph.

He tested 2-12-6 against 16 per cent. Acid Phosphate. Practical farmers agree that fairly well ripened corn makes the best ensilage. They also know that ripening to a large extent depends upon the amount of phosphoric acid available during the growing season of the corn. Some have concluded that all that is necessary for largest returns from corn is to add superphosphate, but Mr. McKinney's results do not bear out this finding.

His 2-16-6 fertilizer at the rate of 3 bags pe acre gave a net return of 24 tons of ensilage corn of which 7.3 tons were ears. The 16 per cent. Acid Phosphate gave a yield of 21.6 tons per acre of which 6.7 tons were ears. The unfertilized yield gave 20.8 tons of which 6.5 tons were ears. Hence the 2-16-6 fertilizer gave a gain of 3.2 tons per acre and the 16 per cent. Acid Phosphate .8 tons per acre.

Figuring the cost of the fertilizer at $6.00 per acre and the value of the ensilage at $3.00 per ton, there is a gross return of $9.60 where 2-16-6 was used. Of course not all of the effect of the fertilizer has been used up in the corn. It will appear next year in whatever crop follows the corn. It is well to keep in mind that Mr. McKinney's corn is grown under particularly favorable conditions. It followed sweet clover, to which 10 tons per acre of good manure were added. Still he found it profitable to balance up the fertility of the soil with his additional application of fertilizer.

BRAMPTON

When Lex Schragg, son of the late Mrs. Lina Schragg, recent victim of a level-crossing accident at Hollywood, pulled a revolver from under his pillow at his home Monday morning, the weapon was accidentally discharged and Schragg was wounded above the left knee. He was taken to St. Joseph's Hospital, Toronto, where his condition is reported to be not serious.

The annual competition of the Peel County Plowman's Association was held on the farms of Nelson Carter and James Bovaird and Son under the most favourable conditions of past years. An unusual entry was made in all classes, plowmen coming from Stouffville and Milliken to wrest several of the prizes from Peel farmers. A feature of the match was the presence of Guy Bell, who took part in a plowing match in Peel 72 years ago, and who still shows a strong interest in the work. The match was in charge of D. H. McCaughterty, Streetsville, president of the association, and James C. Shearer, representative of the Department of Agriculture. An interesting exhibition of plowing with four, five and six horses hitched tandem was given, contrasting the new mode with the old style of driving horses four abreast to a plow.

Concluding the match was a banquet given in the Orange Hall, Brampton, at which Mr. McCaugherty was chairman. Speakers at the banquet were Mr. Shearer, W. J. Lowe, James Laidlaw, treasurer of the association, Warden Willis of Caledon and Alex McKenzie of the Canadian Packers Association, Toronto.

ISLINGTON

Now that the town bowling season is over the entire male population of Islington and Community have fully organized for the winter's five pin indoor bowling activities. There are twelve teams of six men each, and every Thursday night finds them getting "head pins" at Runnymede Recreation Alley, Bloor St., Toronto. A regular schedule of games will be played till the middle of March, when at the closing banquet prizes will be awarded the winning teams, high singles, and high total for one night's play.

About eight o'clock last Monday evening the O'Brien large bank barn on Bloor Street was destroyed by fire The Islington fire brigade responded promptly but the fire had gained such headway that it was impossible to save the building. One horse and a number of hens were burnt, and also an automobile. The cause of the fire is unknown.

Six of this year's graduates of Etobicoke High School are now attending Toronto University. They are Wilson Moorehouse, Audrey Ide, Gordon Jack, Blanche Oram, Gladys Lechance, and Edith Mainland. James Mck Beamish is taking the teachers course at Toronto Normal.

About 200 children were in attendance at the Mission Band Rally held last Saturday afternoon in the Islington Presbyterian Church.

Bands came from Swansea, Mimico and Port Credit to join with the 40 members of the Islington Presbyterian Mission Band in an excellent program. Mrs. Urguhart of Port Credit, who is district Vice-President of the Women's Missionary Society presided A charming little five-year-old girl belonging to the Port Credit contingent delighted the audience by singing "Open the Gates of the Temple." Rev. Mr. Foreman, of Morningside and Rev. Samuel Lundie, of Port Credit, gave brief addresses.

GEORGETOWN

Before Magistrate J. R. Elliott, Jack Norton, accused of breaking and entering by night, pleaded guilty, and was sentenced to one month in the Ontario Reformatory. A brother, Thomas Norton, was given one year suspended sentence. A juvenile connected with the same case was reprimanded by Judge W. E. McIlveen, of Oakville. The trio, with another brother, broke into a storehouse in Glen Williams, broke open a pump and were taking out gasoline when the building took fire from a cigarette lighter, lit by one of the party.

PORT CREDIT

Possibility of opening a junior section was discussed at a meeting of the Port Credit Badminton Club. Plans were made for the coming season and officers were elected as follows: President, Harold A. Clarke (re-elected for third term); Vice-President, W. M. Campbell; Secretary I. N. Thompkins; Treasurer, R. Burgess; Captain H. C. Patchett.

Officers elected for the ensuing year by the High School Literary Society are as follows: President, Steve Knott; Vice-President, Madelyn Graigie; Secretary, Alice De Winter; Treasurer, Cecil Foreman; Entertainment Committee, Gordon Smith, Joe Cardy and Alan Ridley.

Boy Scouts of Port Credit, Lakeview, Lorne Park and Cooksville, with a detachment from the Third Toronto Troop, paraded to Trinity Church Sunday evening, about 80 strong. The boys presented a fine appearance as they marched in, under their respective scout masters. Rev. H. Earle preached a special sermon for their benefit, dwelling particularly on boys' work.

This is the second year that the district troops have united for a church parade and it has been decided to make the event an annual one.

DO YOU KNOW?

Do you know that there is a disease which, because it is of such common occurrence, is regarded by many as being inescapable and of but little importance?

Do you know that this disease is serious in that it causes the death of several hundreds in this country each year?

Do you know that this disease takes its toll chiefly from among little children, and that the younger the child is, the less resistance he seems to have?

It is about measles that we are asking these questions—a disease which is of common occurrence because we are all susceptable to it, and which, as a result of our susceptibility, we almost surely contract when first exposed to someone who is suffering from it.

Measles is serious. In the year 1929, this disease was the direct cause of 619 deaths, a number exceeding the number of those due to typhoid fever or scarlet fever in the same year. A recent publication shows that seventy per cent. of the measles deaths in Ontario for a period of years were of children in the first three years of life.

These are the facts which we want parents to understand so that they will realize that measles is a serious disease and that they should know how to protect their children from its dangers.

Children should be safeguarded from infection. The younger the child, the more serious is the danger and hence the greater the need for care. No child should be carelessly or thoughtlessly exposed to disease. If one child in the home is ill or is not feeling well, the other children should be kept away from him. Unfortunately, the most infectious period of measles is before the rash appears, and so in many cases before measles has been thought of. The result is that most children are likely to be exposed to infection.

Until recently, the best advice which could be given was to watch the exposed child and put him to bed on the first appearance of watery eyes. Even better would it be to put the child to bed eight days after his exposure, because the child who develops his attack of measles when he is in bed is likely to escape complications.

Nowadays we are able to do more than this. If the exposed child is given a dose of serum drawn from persons recently recovered from measles, he will either be protected from the attack, or else the attack will be so mild that danger will be practically eliminated.

If blood serum from recent convalescants is not available, then the blood from the parents may be used. As nearly every adult has had measles at some time, blood from an adult will likely contain sufficient power to prevent or modify the attack.

Measles is a serious and not infrequently fatal disease. It should be known for what it is and dealt with accordingly.

Questions concerning Health, addressed to the Canadian Medical Association, 184 College Street, Toronto, will be answered personally by letter.

Laymen's Banquet and Church Notes

Fifteen of our men attended the Laymen's banquet held under the auspices of the Deanery of Peel, which comprises about tweve Parishes. About one hundred men sat down to a very sumptuous repast prepared by the ladies of Bolton. After they had enjoyed themselves to the full with the delicious supper, the chairman and toastmaster, C. H. Burgess, Port Credit, called up Rev. Mr. Herman, of Bolton, who heartily welcomed the men. Mr. S. Charters, M. P., filled in on short notice and gave a very practical and encouraging address from the layman's point of view.

The chief address was given by the Rev. Dr. Dyson Hague, of the Church of the Epiphany, Toronto, and will remain as an inspiration to all who heard him .He has always been at his best in speaking to men and this night he led all to look into the deepest things effecting their spiritual life. He spoke on "Sincerity, Loyalty and Tenacity," all of which go to develop deep character and promote the Kingdom of God in the world. His address was a great inspiration.

The next gathering is to be held in Streetsville in October next.

The morning service on "All Saints Day," Nov 1st, was a helpful one when we were led to hold fellowship and Communion with the great host triumphant and with those who are militant here below in the battle of life. On that day we remember with gratitude the lives and examples of those in our nearest circle who are now received into eternal glory, as well as those working with us, known and unknown in the greater fellowship of this Church. The whole services of Psalm and Hymn and prayer and His Holy Word bears upon that thought. The choir rendered very beautifully the anthem "And God Shall Wipe Away All Tears."

Fire at Miss Blaine's

Provincial Constable Joseph Allen, after a thorough investigation could find no evidence to support the wild rumors of incendiarism which started following the second fire in three days on the farm of Miss Mary Blain. Neither fire did any particular damage, owing to the good work of the Streetsville brigade.

On Thursday last the corner of Miss Blain's barn was found ablaze, and was saved through the efforts of a bucket brigade. On Saturday the drive shed was noticed in flames, but no serious damage resulted.

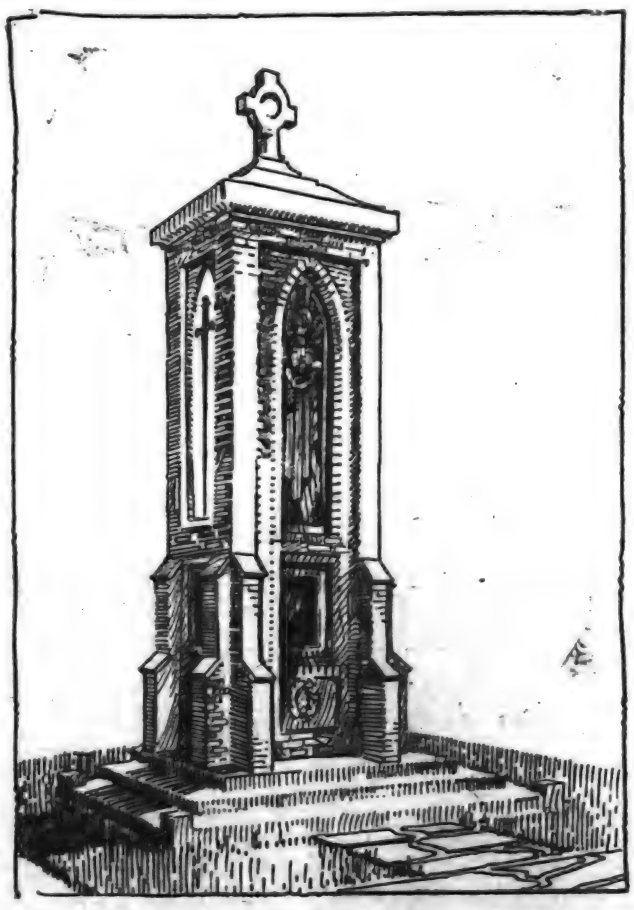
MARRIAGES



Parkinson—Moore

A pretty wedding took place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Y. Moore, Brampton, when their daughter, Bessie, was married to William Everett Parkinson, son of Mr. and Mrs. E. Parkinson, Malton. Rev. R. G. Davidson officiated. The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, was gowned in blue georgette and carried butterfly roses. She entered the living-room to the strains of Loghengrin's wedding march played by Mrs H. R. Cunningham, sister of the groom. Miss Florence Moore, sister of the bride, was bridesmaid, and wore orchid georgette and carried Briarcliff roses. The groom was attended by his brother, Mr Harold Parkinson. A unique feature was that the day also marked the sixtieth birthday of the bride's mother as well as the birthday of her pastor, and also that of a small nephew of the groom. A birthday cake with sixty candles, in addition to the wedding cake, adorned the bride's table which was decorated in pink and white streamers and carnations and roses. Mr. and Mrs. Parkinson left on a motor trip north. On their return they will reside on "Oak Grove Farm," Elmbank Community, Malton.

Soldiers' War Memorial

Where a Memorial Service will be held this Sunday afternoon by Streetsville Overseas Veterans

Local Veterans Hold Poppy Day

The Streetsville Branch of the Canadian Legion has completed its plans for the annual observance of the Poppy Day Campaign, which is undertaken throughout Canada to provide Legion Branches with funds to take care of special cases of distress among war veterans. The needs of the Legion for such funds are greater than ever this year, and the local branch is therefore making arrangements for an intensive campaign to have every citizen wear a poppy on Remembrance Day, which has now been set aside, on November 11th, as a national holiday in honour of the signing of the Armistice in 1918.

Poppy Day was founded in England by the late Earl Haig, who saw in it a means of helping the disabled veterans who make the poppies in the Vetcraft shop, and of raising funds to take care of distressed veterans. In Canada, the poppies and wreaths offered to the public by the Legion are wholly manufactured in the Vetcraft shops operated for handicapped veterans by the Department of Pensions and National Health, from Empire products and these veterans are able, by this means to earn a livelihood. In addition, the proceeds of the Poppy Day Campaign will be used entirely by the Streetsville Branch of the Legion for relief purposes locally, and as the needs of this fund are expected to be great this winter, the officers of the branch are hoping for loyal support from the citizens of the community in their effort to raise money for this laudable purpose.

COMMUNITY CLUB

The last meeting of the clubs was held at the home of Mrs. H. Lee. The members met to sew for the children in the Milton home, and a fine lot of garments were completed. When the sewing was all done the hostess served the "Club's lunch," assisted by Mrs. Cordingly and Mrs. May.

The next meeting will be held at the home of Mrs. C. May, Tuesday, Nov. 10th, at 2 o'clock sharp. We are disappointed in not having Miss Hattie Graydon with us to speak on First Aid Work, but a good program is being prepared and Miss Graydon will be with us later in the winter.

Our Social evening, Oct. 29th, at Mrs. H. Beattie's, was a great success. Mrs. C. Hall won the ladies' Euchre prize. Mr Nixon won the gent's

The hard time costume prize went to Mrs. C. May and Mr. M. Williamson and the children's prize to Loraine Beattie. Everybody looked so tough the judges were not envied their task.

DECISIONS RESPECTING NEWSPAPERS

Court decisions respecting newspaper subscriptions are very clear. Any person who takes a paper regularly from the post office, whether in his name or another's or whether he has subscribed or not, is responsible for payment. If a person orders his paper discontinued he must pay all arrears or the publisher may continue to send it until payment is made, and then collect the whole amount, whether the paper is taken or not. The courts have decided that refusing to take newspapers or periodicals from the post office or removing and leaving them unpaid, is prima facie evidence of intention of fraud.

LET US SMILE

The neighbour was surprised. "I didn't know you had a hen."

"We haven't. Jimmy has gone to borrow the hen from Mrs. Brown."

"My friend," began the man with the bag full of religious tracts persuasively, "have you ever reflected on the shortness of life and the fact that death is inevitable?"

WITH THE LONE SCOUTS

On October 11th, Thanksgiving Sunday, the Silver Fox Patrol at Pickering held a Church Parade at the local Anglican Church, attending the evening service.

Their numbers were swelled very considerably by the members of the Sea Scout Troop from Oshawa, under the command of Captain Rigg, and by the members of the 5th Oshawa Troop, who journeyed in by automobile to assist and encourage these Lonies.

Scoutmaster Don Hutchinson of the 2nd Ontario Lone Scout Troop also attended, and brought with him the Lone Scout Flag, and he was accompanied by Commissioner John Furminger and Lone Scout Bruce Johnson from Toronto.

The service was conducted by the Rev. Mr. Robinson, father of the Patrol Leader of the Silver Foxes, and the sermon was preached by Mr. Terett, Scoutmaster of the 5th Oshawa Troop, whose remarks centred on the story of Shadrach, Meshach and Abednego, whom he likened to the first Lone Scout Patrol in history, with Daniel as their Patrol Leader.

After the service the Scouts were entertained at the Rectory, and all voted the occasion a great success and a most enjoyable and instructive time.

Lone Scout Ronald Sage of Ingersol is very keen indeed. Recently he attended a banquet given by the members of the Ingersol Troop, where he met other Scouts from Embro, Woodstock, Tillsonburg and London. He tells us that the 1st London Troop turned out in full force to visit their friends at Ingersoll, and they had a great time, which Ron fully enjoyed.

We are sorry to hear that Patrol Leader Douglas Macdonald of the Bear Patrol at Lakefield has been forced to relinquish the leadership of his Patrol, and thus both the Patrols at "The Grove" School have lost their old Leaders. However, before leaving, Doug. passed on the leadership of the Bear Patrol to Lone Scout John Frewer, in whose hands we know that the Patrol will continue to progress. The appointment of a Leader to the Lion Patrol has not yet been made, but is expected shortly, and we are looking forward to big things from Lakefield under this new reorganization.

Lone Scout W. Brown of Sunderland R.R. 1 has written us a very cheerful letter, in which he says that he has been out in this country from England for eighteen months, and he has been working on a farm, which life he very much enjoys. His chief ambition at the moment is to be a King's Scout, and he is working hard to this end. We sure wish him lots of good luck and good scouting too.

Don't forget about that Christmas Good Turn Scheme which we mentioned last week!

Lone Scout Question Box

Are there any Lone Rovers in Canada?—(B.T., Oil City.)

There is no organization which caters to Lone Rovers, such as the Lone Scout Department does to the Lone Scouts. We do not think, however, that there is any objection to a Rover Scout who is isolated from others, working as a Lone Rover. Full information on this subject can be obtained from the Commissioner for Rover Scouts, Boy Scouts Association, 330 Bay Street, Toronto 2.

Lone Scouts and others are invited to send in questions on scouting subjects, which "Lone E" will endeavor to answer week by week in these columns.

Full information concerning the Lone Scout Movement may be obtained from the Lone Scout Department, Boy Scouts Association, at the address given above. All boys between 12 and 18 years of age who cannot join a regular Scout Troop are eligible to become Lone Scouts.

Boston Jump Won By British Team

Canada Takes 9 Ribbons—Places Third in Feature

Boston.—The British army team won the international military trophy, feature event of the closing performance of the Boston Horse Show held here with a three-horse total of four faults over a difficult nine jump course at the Boston Garden.

The United States army riders placed second with a total of six and a half faults, the Canadian army team was third with seven faults, the French army trio placed fourth with nine faults and the Irish Free State army jumpers were fifth and last with nine and a half faults.

The British victory was regarded as the most unexpected upset of the entire show.

Canada emerged from the show with nine ribbons. Sunday night in the $500 touch-and-out stakes, Lieutenant Donald Hunter, on Rajah, jumped off with Captain Bradford of the U.S. army and finished second. In the $1,000 hunter stake the mare Margot, ridden by Lieut. Marshall Cleland, came second.

The Canadian army team in the international military event included Lieut. Churchill Mann on Sundart; Lieut. Hunter on Rajah, and Lieut. Cleland on Roxana.

Canada Sends Aid To Honduras

Building and Roofing Supplies for Hurricane-Ravaged Area

Ottawa.—Canada is sending a consignment of supplies to hurricane-stricken British Honduras. Consisting of building and roofing supplies and builders' hardware, the goods are of Canadian manufacture. The consignment, it was officially announced, will be despatched by an early boat in the rehabilitation of Belize.

Following the hurricane disaster several months ago which brought death and enormous damage in British Hondurus, the Dominion Government wired the sympathy of the Canadian people and enquired of the government of British Honduras if any assistance were necessary. British Hondurus indicated in its message of reply that building supplies for re-building were necessary; and under arrangements made the consignment of Canadian-made goods is consequently to be shipped.

Damage Caused By Mexican Quake

Houses Collapse in Oaxaca, But No Casualties Are Reported

Mexico City.—Despatches from Oaxaca, Mexico's earthquake centre, indicated severe damage may have resulted from a shock that was felt in Mexico City at 5.37 p.m. Sunday.

Excelsior's correspondent said the earthquake was very strong, causing the populace to flee into the streets, and many fell to their knees praying. The electrical power failed and some houses collapsed, but there were no reports of casualties.

Oaxaca City, capital of the State and with about 40,000 population, was nearly half destroyed last Jan. 14 by an earthquake that killed approximately 100 persons.

Peace Garden Site is Finally Approved

Brandon.—Plans of master gardeners and flower lovers of Canada and the United States to create a floral memorial to the more than a century of unbroken peace between the two nations, were advanced to another stage recently. The land for the proposed garden is half in the United States and half in Canada and is being donated by the State of North Dakota and the Province of Manitoba.

Automobile Tourists Increase in Quebec

Quebec, Que.—An increase of 35 per cent. is noted in the number of automobile tourists who entered the Province of Quebec last summer, as compared with figures for 1930, according to statistics compiled by J. E. Renaud, prominent official of the Quebec Automobile Club.

Automobile tourists who sought 30-day permits numbered 430,842 last summer, as compared with 329,521 in 1930. Twenty-four-hour permits were granted to 313,375 tourists; similar permits were granted to 215,436 autoists last year.

The amount of money spent by tourists in the province last summer has not yet been ascertained, stated Mr. Renaud.

$1 Wheat Predicted

Chicago.—As grains of all kinds advanced on the world's markets Saturday, the prediction that wheat would soon sell above $1 a bushel was freely voiced in the pits of the Chicago Board of Trade. From all over Europe came a chorus of buying, and at Rotterdam, Europe's largest cash grain market, where much of Russia's wheat had been stored waiting disposal, an advance of 5¼ to 6½ cents was recorded.

Month of September Shows Business Rise

Newsprint and Building Permits Included in Increased Volume

Ottawa. — Well maintained during the month of September, Canadian business continued to strengthen and, with seasonal adjustments made, it showed marked improvement over August, according to the monthly review of business issued by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics.

A gain of 12.5 per cent. was registered in the production of newsprint over August, with 178,412 tons manufactured, while importations of raw cotton increased in volume in preparation for operations in the textile industry. After seasonal adjustment was made the increase was about 30 per cent.

"Owing mainly to the placing of a large contract for a hydro-electric development," says the review, "the total construction contracts awarded show a marked gain in September. The assigned values amounted to $33,653,000, compared with $26,163,000 in August. The value of building permits issued by 61 cities stood at $10,322,000; this was an increase of $2,100,000, or 25.5 per cent., as compared with the total of $8,224,000 in August."

The review indicates greater activity in the mining industry, the production index showing a gain of 10.6 per cent.

Empress of Britain Sets New Record

Two-Hour Cut by Canadian Pacific Liner in Cherbourg-Quebec Voyage

Quebec.—A new record was established recently by the Canadian Pacific Empress of Britain in steaming from Cherbourg, France, to Father Point, Que., the pilotage station where mails are discharged, in 4 days 9 hours 17 minutes, beating her former record by six minutes.

Her time from Cherbourg to Quebec was 4 days 17 hours 5 minutes, which is 59 minutes longer than the transatlantic record established on the New York run by the North German Lloyd liner Europa between Cherbourg and Ambrose Light. The Europa arrived at the New York pilotage station on March 25 last year in 4 days 17 hours 6 minutes, after clearing from Cherbourg, but several more hours elapsed before she ws enabled to dock and discharge.

The Empress' elapsed time between Cherbourg and Quebec was 2 hours 20 minutes better than her former record between the two points.

Ontario Still Holds Egg-Laying Honors

Britannia Bay Pen First—St. Williams' Birds Take Second

Ottawa.—J. A. Dawson, Britannia Bay, won first place in the twelfth Canadian national egg-laying contest, scoring 1,983.2 points with his pen of Barred Plymouth Rocks for 2,135 eggs. The competition was close, the winner being only 2.8 points over the second-place pen, that of the Northern-Specialty Farm, St. Williams, with 1,980.4 points for a pen of the same breed, laying 2,053 eggs. The White Leghorns of C. P. Calder of Cowansville, Que., took third place with 1,943.1 points for 1,873 eggs.

First place individual honors went to a Barred Plymouth Rock from the Pratt Experimental Station, Morden, Pa., which laid 258 eggs to score 279 points. Second place was won by a Barred Rock entered by J. M. Scott, Seaforth, with 276 points for 280 eggs; and third place by the Ontario Agricultural College entry with 264.4 points for 253 eggs.

Unlike the record of previous contests, the Western-bred birds failed to make a showing among the leaders. It was the first time in the history of the contest that a breeder in the Ottawa district has won, and the second time that first place has been taken by Barred Plymouth Rocks. In this contest the size was taken into consideration as well as the number of eggs laid.

The pen of White Leghorns entered by G. H. Clark, Caledonia, won first place in the eleventh Ontario egg-laying contest, scoring a total of 2,281.4 points, for a total of 2,408 eggs. Mr. Clark led by 183.3 points over the nearest pen, that of G. G. Burton, of Highland Creek, whose White Leghorns scored 2,100.2 points with 2,149 eggs. Third place went to the Dunning Poultry Farm, Navan, with 2,084.7 points for 1,965 eggs.

Boys Rescue Woman Then Dash to School

New York.—An impatient subway crowd surged forward in response to a train's distant roar.

Miss Frieda Fasserstein, aged 28, stumbled, fell on to the steel rails. Spectators stood horrified.

A slight stir. Two youths, aged about 15, squirmed to the platform's edge, jumped down, pushed Miss Wasserstein into a small clear space beneath, climbed in beside her.

Brakes shrieked. The motorman backed, fearing one, perhaps all three had been struck.

The boys calmly lifted Miss Wasserstein to the platform, mindful not to hurt her fractured leg.

"We're late for school as it is," they mumbled, then edged away.

1,000 Ton Dredge Shipped by 'Plane

San Francisco.—A 1,000-ton dredge, which was shipped from San Francisco recently, is taking an airplane ride.

It is being flown in sections over the jungles and mountains of New Guinea from the port of Lae to the gold fields at Buloville, 40 miles in the interior. Here it is being assembled. Already the hull has been transported, piece by piece, and the largest part, the upper tumbler shaft, weighing 7,000 pounds, has made the trip by air.

The dredge was designed by Mr. Frank W. Griffin of San Francisco, director of the Bulolo Gold Dredging Company, which will use it in its mines in New Guinea. Special attention had to be made to limit all parts to less than 8,000 pounds in weight. This is the maximum load that the huge Junker planes can safely lift over the mountain range which reaches an elevation of 5,500 feet. The dredge was built by the Yuba Construction Company.

1932 Apple Crop Declared a Record

Toronto.—This year Ontario will produce 750,000 barrels of apples for commercial purposes not including apples sold in boxes, hampers, and other forms. Of this amount 250,000 barrels will be shipped to the English market as compared with only 87,000 barrels last year. Ontario's apple crop this year is the finest in the history of the province.

According to T. L. Kennedy, Minister of Agriculture, cold storage, grading, and careful packing have resulted in Ontario apples selling for from 2s to 4s a barrel more than the Virginia apples, and from 4s to 8s a barrel more than the product of Nova Scotia.

Race With Death Proves Futile

1,200-mile Race by Train, Car, Plane to Save Life of Baby Unsuccessful

Philadelphia.—A frenzied 1,200-mile race to save the life of a three-year-old child ended in failure Sunday.

Marjorie Cohen, Orlando, Florida, died in Jefferson Hospital after her father had brought her here by train, automobile, and airplane.

Late Saturday Marjorie swallowed a kidney bean. It lodged in her bronchial tube. By almost imperceptible degrees, the baby began to choke to death. The family doctor could do nothing. There was one hope, he said—the bronchioscope, developed by Dr. Chevalier X. Jackson, Philadelphia, and the nearest one was in Philadelphia.

Cohen carried his gasping baby to the railroad station. All Saturday night they rode. Minute by minute it was becoming harder for Marjorie to breathe. At Richmond a doctor went aboard the train.

"She has about an hour to live," he said.

In Washington Pilot V. J. Lucas warmed up his plane. A motorcycle policeman and an automobile waited at the station. Sirens shrieking, the cavalcade raced through Washington to the airport. Lucas gave his big ship every bit of speed she had and arrived at Camden, N.J., airport in 62 minutes, almost a record. To save seconds he negotiated a dangerous landing with the wind.

An ambulance waited with another police escort to clear a path for the last six miles to the hospital.

With the magical bronchioscope, doctors removed the bean. But the strain of breathing during her long trip had been too much for the baby. One lung had collapsed and she died a short time after the bean was removed.

Late Strawberries Picked in North

"Queer Fall" Declare White River Residents

White River.—"The coldest spot in Canada," as this town of the North is often called, is reporting warm weather records this season.

An average high temperature of about 65 degrees is recorded for October of this year, compared with 40 a year ago, while the lowest mark to date is well above 40, with 10 degrees shown as the low at this time last year.

Plant life has flourished under the mild weather, with tame strawberries being plucked during the month, blueberry blossoms found in many places and dandelions numerous. The fourth crop of clover is being grown in farm fields.

Hunters report the woods full of insects, blackflies and mosquitoes being nearly as numerous as in midsummer.

Records of J. E. Depew, local Ontario Government meteorologist, show a maximum of 101 degrees in the shade on the last day of June this year, a figure never before marked on local records, and beyond the memory of the oldest inhabitant.

Eldest Son Contests Edison's Will

Charges Undue Influence by Stepmother and Stepson

Wilmington, Del.—A fight over the division of the Thomas A. Edison millions loomed Friday, when William L. (Billy) Edison, a son of the famous inventor, announced he would contest his father's will, which leaves the major portion of his estate to the children of his second wife, Charles and Theodore.

In a statement given out to the press, the son, one of the inventor's three children by his first marriage, said he would charge undue influence on the part of his stepmother and his half-brother, Charles Edison.

William characterized the will as "unfair," and said he would not be alone in the attempt to break the instrument. He declined to say who would join him.

Births-Deaths-Marriages On Decrease in Canada

MOURNING WARDROBE

"A death occurred in our family and I had to go in mourning. I could hardly afford to buy all black clothes, so decided to dye what I had. I consulted our druggist and he advised using Diamond Dyes. Everything came out beautifully; coats, wool dresses, stockings and all. I have since learned to appreciate the excellence of the black Diamond Dyes. I tried another black dye and the results were impossible. I had to get Diamond Dyes and do the work over. Recently I have tinted my curtains a beautiful raspberry shade and dyed a rug a lovely garnet with Diamond Dyes. They are real money savers—the finest dyes money can buy—I truly believe."

He Thinks of Her

By Susanne Valentine Mitchell in Harpers.

Ten years have gone since last I saw her enter
Into the room she had made hers and mine,
And since then time has flowed with tidal measure,
Obliterating what was so divine,
Covering with its pale and heavy sands
The moving and motions of her hands.

Days come and go, and often I forget her.
She is not my most constant memory.
And yet, deep down, beneath sunrise and sunset,
She is the very heart of life to me,
And that still face that could so dance and flame
Comes back to me, a lost, a lovely shame.

It was as still as is a summer twilight,
Oval and molded to serenity
And brooding calm. The lips that closed so firmly,
And were so red, so full of mystery,
Closed over speech like nothing man has heard
Since the first wind in the first branches stirred.

Stirred, and then spoke, and then became a power,
The face became a triumph, and the eyes
A bannered army in a molten sunset,
An army that defies
Time in my heart, or time upon the evening.
When the still twilights visit me again,
Again that passion and that calm pass through me,
And I am shaken with an ancient pain
Which grows not old, since she and and pain are one,
And grows not less. And so my life runs on.

Scientists Give Recipe For Perfect Coffee

Another scientific investigation of the best way to make coffee so that the beverage will preserve the maximum of flavor and healthfulness has been made by the Imperial Economic Committee of Great Britain as a part of the effort to popularize the kinds of coffee grown in the British Empire The method recommended in the committee's report, published recently as a British official document, is the "steeping method" said to be used by professional coffee tasters to determine the relative flavors of different samples of coffee beans. The first essential, the report states, is that the coffee be freshly ground. Any convenient pot or jug made of earthenware or thick china then is warmed and a supply of boiling water is provided in another vessel. Two ounces of the freshly ground coffee then are placed in the warmed jug for each pint of water that is to be used. The boiling water then is poured over the coffee and the mixture is stirred vigorously with a wooden spoon, metal spoons being condemned as likely to give the liquid undesirable flavors. Some froth will rise to the surface of the mixture of ground coffee and boiling water. This is to be skimmed off immediately with the wooden spoon. The coffee, still in the earthenware jug, then is allowed to stand in a warm place for six minutes to allow the grounds to settle. A dash of cold water will assist this settling. The beverage then is ready to drink, although the Committee states that a small pinch of salt will still further improve the flavor.

One Name Village

Northamptonshire can boast of a village in which one-third of the inhabitants possess the same surname. This is Bozeat, which has a population of just over a thousand. Nearly three hundred of them have the surname of Drage.

Many villages and small towns can show surprising numbers of a few surnames amongst their inhabitants, but nowhere else is such a large percentage of people with the same name to be found. It is difficult to discover how it all happened. Surnames are a comparatively modern institution, for in the old days there were none. To distinguish between two Williams, one might be referred to as William, Robert's son, and the other William from Handley. In course of time this was shortened to William Robertson and William Handley, or, again, a man might be known by his trade, John the smith becoming John Smith.

Where the Drages came from is a mystery, for there is no mention of them in the old records.

Joan of Arc was a pheasant. She was brought by fowl play and burned at the stake.

The "Little Horse" That Couldn't Be Forgotten

All the big people who had seen him or heard about him called him the "big, little horse." That was because, standing fourteen hands high and weighing about nine hundred and fifty pounds, Justin Morgan could out-pull, out-walk, and out-step any of the larger and much heavier horses whom he ever met.

There are a great many stories about Justin Morgan told in Randolph, Vermont, where he first became known as an unusual horse. They still tell how the "little horse" pulled a heavy pine log ten rods, when horses weighing 1,200 pounds and over had failed to move it even a short distance.

But these stories that tell about the things he did by virtue of his tremendous strength and courage, fail to tell the best story of all: how the "little horse" earned for himself and gave to his family a name that is known and venerated among horse-lovers the world over.

Justin Morgan was named after his owner, who had lived on a farm in the "Brush Hill" district of West Springfield, Massachusetts, and later, selling the farm, moved with his family to Randolph, Vermont. It was on this "Brush Hill" farm that Justin Morgan, the "little horse," was born in 1793, foaled by "True Briton" or Beautiful Bay, an English thoroughbred who had changed owners during the Revolutionary War, and changed names as well.

His life is touched with irony when we consider that even though a champion of all horses in his neighborhood, he was not considered of any great value because of his small size.

Mr. Morgan, who had first taken him to his Vermont farm, died when the colt was but five years old. After that, his namesake changed hands frequently, sometimes in payment of debts, and at other times being purchased at a good price because of his reputation, which had continued to spread through the surrounding country.

For seven years he lived on a stock farm in Vermont. It was here that he left the several sons who were destined to become even more famous than their hard-working sire. Thus he gave to the country the first of the great "Morgan" family, renowned for those four qualities of the perfect horse: speed, endurance, beauty and gentleness.

He died in the winter of 1821 at the age of twenty-nine, his strength unimpaired by his years. His death was by no means due to old age, but rather to exposure and the lack of proper care following an injury received while being pastured with other horses.

To-day, the Government considers Morgan horses so valuable for Government work that it maintains an extensive breeding farm in Middlebury, Vermont, known as the Morgan Horse Farm," where the Morgan Horse Club has erected a fine bronze statue to the famous progeny of the "big, little horse," the first Morgan.

And on the little "Brush Hill" farm in West Springfield, Massachusetts, there has been placed a tablet that tells all who stop to read:

"From this farm came the Stallion, 'Justin Morgan,' progenitor of that useful breed known as Morgan Horses."

Wherever a Morgan horse is found, it is sure to be recognized; true to type in every particular; the "little horse" that couldn't be forgotten.—Rowland Everett Baird, in "Our Dumb Animals."

COMFORT for COLICKY BABIES

. . . THROUGH CASTORIA'S GENTLE REGULATION

The best way to prevent colic, doctors say, is to avoid gas in stomach and bowels by keeping the entire intestinal tract open, free from waste. But remember this: a tiny baby's tender little organs cannot stand harsh treatment. They must be gently urged. This is just the time Castoria can help most. Castoria, you know, is made specially for babies and children. It is a pure vegetable preparation, perfectly harmless. It contains no harsh drugs, no narcotics. For years it has helped mothers through trying times with colicky babies and children suffering with digestive upsets, colds and fever. Keep genuine Castoria on hand, with the name:

Ear-Muffs May Be Worn To Shut Out Noise

Ear-muffs to shut out noise will be the fashion if the din of American cities keeps increasing according to Dr. Donald A. Laird, psychologist of Colgate University.

"Preventable noises cost employers 5 per cent. of their payrolls annually, through the decreased efficiency of workers," he declares, "and the harmful effects of street and other rackets continue even when persons are asleep. Quieter offices, quieter bedrooms and other interiors in which noises are deadened by sound-absorbing upholsteries like mohair velvet and other materials are urgently needed to counteract the effect of city noises.

"Repeated tests have shown that noise lowers efficiency," said Dr. Laird. "High-pitched sounds are especially disturbing and harmful, but these can be curbed to a marked degree by placing absorbent materials like mohair upholsteries and drapes in an office or other interior. Bedrooms in which sound-absorbent fabrics are employed are likely to be quieter than comparatively barren rooms and are more suited to purposes of rest. Even when we are asleep loud noises get in their harmful effects. They cause contraction of the muscles, thereby leading to impairment of the digestive functions. It is literally true that loud sounds may cause that 'dark brown taste' in the mouth after a night of uneasy slumber in a noisy environment."

The Old Farmhouse

The bobbing shadow of a leaf along
The whitewashed wall is such a friendly thing;
And warm across the deep old kitchen sill
There comes the sweet and spicy, comforting
Fragrance of peaches, by some chemistry
Known only in that shining scented place
Being distilled to gold translucency,
Precarious on this hill, small flowers grace
The dooryard, as though loving the dirt path,
The worn old steps of deeply dented wood.
The roof slopes close against a giant oak,
And finds the wide-branched towering shelter good.
How dear this place to us who know it best!
A peace is here past clumsy words to tell.—
A dignity and sweetness and content,
Because it has been loved so long and well.

Big Demand For Books In British Isles

A boon in the sale of books is raging in England at present along similar lines as in Canada, according to Mrs. Elinor Mordaunt, British author, who wrote "Gin and Bitters" and several other books on travel and adventure.

"People are buying books in England and the publishers are eager to get them," she said. "There is a great demand in England for popular books on science, also for the old classics like Dickens and Thackeray. Many of the magazines have dropped out and the people are now reading more books. Two of the most popular periodicals deal with women's subjects, including dress, of course.

A man took a clock to a pawn-broker in an effort to "raise the wind." "Is it an eight-day clock?" asked the pawnbroker. "I don't know," replied the man. "I've never had it out more than four days at a time!"

TWO OPERATIONS AT 71

A Splendid Recovery

BECAUSE KRUSCHEN HAD KEPT HER BLOOD CLEAN

Within 16 days of being operated on for appendicitis and tonsilitis, this woman was back in her own home. And she is over 71 years of age! When they told her the reason for her remarkable recovery—clean blood—she knew what it was that had helped her. She remembered the daily dose of Kruschen which she had taken for many years. And she knew that one of the things that Kruschen did with absolute thoroughness, was to keep the bloodstream free from impurities. She wrote this soon after her return home:—"I am an old woman over 71. I have taken Kruschen Salts for a number of years, and find they keep me fit and well. I had operations last May for tonsilitis and appendicitis. I was only away a fortnight and two days—which is a very quick recovery for an old woman, I reckon. Clean blood was the reason for it, they told me—and I give Kruschen Salts the credit for that. I recommend them wherever I go."—E. R.

The six salts in Kruschen persuade the organs of elimination—liver, kidneys and bowels—to function as they should—often for the first time in their lives. Instead of being clogged, the intestines are clean and clear. Instead of liver and kidneys being sluggish, they are active and efficient. New, healthy blood goes coursing through the veins—carrying health and strength and energy to every part of the body.

And Kruschen's gentle but positive action is more than merely purifying—it has a direct tonic effect upon your blood, too, and through your bloodstream upon every fibre of your body—fills you with a bracing sense of energetic fitness.

Kruschen Salts is obtainable at all Drug Stores at 45c. and 75c. per bottle.

Can't PLAY
Can't REST
—child needs Castoria

WHEN a child is fretful and irritable, seems distressed and uncomfortable, can't play, can't sleep, it is a pretty sure sign that something is wrong. Right here is where Castoria fits into a child's scheme—the very purpose for which it was formulated years ago! A few drops and the condition which caused the trouble is righted; comfort quickly brings restful sleep.

Nothing can take the place of Castoria for children; it's perfectly harmless, yet always effective. For the protection of your wee one—for your own peace of mind—keep this old reliable preparation always on hand. But don't keep it just for emergencies; let it be an every-day aid. Its gentle action will ease and soothe the infant who cannot sleep. In more liberal doses it will effectively help to regulate sluggish bowels in an older child.

All druggists have Castoria; it's genuine if you see Chas. H. Fletcher's signature and this name-plate:

BRAMPTON

Five University students were greatly surprised and shocked when the steering wheel of the car driven by H. G. Hillard, Classic Avenue, Toronto, left the steering column and lifted off in his hands. The car travelling west on Dundas highway, east of Erindale, went into the ditch and broke off a telephone pole, four of the occupants going through the roof. Hillard was taken to Dr. Harold Sutton, Cooksville, by H. T. O. J. Lewis, where his facial lacerations were attended.

Morris Tobias, Huron Street, Toronto, attempted to pass a car on the turn near Erindale, and drove his car into the ditch and back on the highway again, where it turned over. He and three girl companions, Dorothy and Lottie Cohen, and Cora Scheeter, all of Hamilton, escaped serious injury, the driver suffering only slight injury to his leg. No charge was laid.

Mother of Five Looks for Early Release

When one is only 27 the strain of raising five children on limited financial resources is a burden which would tax any woman's strength and vitality. In the case of slender Mrs. N., none too strong from early years at factory work, the burden pressed her lower and lower to the point where tuberculosis gripped her in all its power.

Fortunately, however, she was sent to the Muskoka Hospital for Consumptives, where the experienced doctors and nurses took her in hand with kindly care. Since then, like a rain-freshened flower, Mrs. has responded to the carefully planned treatment and has made splendid progress towards recovery, and is eagerly looking forward to the time when she may return to her little ones.

There are many such cases, but without financial assistance the Muskoka Hospital cannot aid them. A gift from you will be gratefully received if sent to Mr. A. E. Ames, 223 College St., Toronto.

Mr. J. H. Newman, of Meadowvale, is now night operator at Streetsville Junction, C.P.R.

Next Wednesday, Nov 11, is Armistice Day and will be a public holiday the same as Christmas Day, Dominion Day or any other public holiday.

We are pleased to learn that the health of Hon T. L. Kennedy, Minister of Agriculture, is improving nicely and that he expects to be out again in a couple of weeks.

Mr. Hugh O'Neil, son of Mrs. John T. O'Neil, Streetsville Road, brought to The Review office this week, a mammoth mangold. It weighed 29 lbs., was 26 inches long and 26 inches in circumference. Who can beat this mangold?

Owing to a printer's error, the name of Mrs. Omar Turney was omitted from the list of officers of the Streetsville Ladies' Bowling Club in last week's Review. Mrs. Turney is Treasurer and Mrs. Alvey, Assistant Treasurer.

Hallowe'en in Streetsville passed off very quietly, and as one man said, you wouldn't know it was Hallowe'en, it was so quiet. We are glad to see that the bigger boys are getting more sense and cutting out the crazy tricks of former years. Perhaps the appearance of two Provincial Police in town Saturday night was a deterrent. The younger people contented themselves with dressing up in various kinds of costumes and calling at houses "anything you have to give" and as a rule they were well supplied with candy, nuts, fruit, etc. A few implements were hauled out and left on the front street, but no damage done.

BRAMPTON

At the Peel Rural School Fairs this year, Mr. M. R. Fydell, Public School Inspector, offered a $5.00 special prize in books, for the best Note Book in Agriculture in the County. Following are the pupils whose books received first prize in their School Fair: Bolton School Fair—Hope Jeffery, S. S. No. 5, Albion; Ebenezer School Fair—Evelyn Byrne, S.S. No. 6, Toronto Gore; Inglewood School Fair—Kathleen McGrath, S.S. No. 4, Caledon; Cooksville School Fair—Ray Morrison, S.S. No. 8 Toronto; Caledon School Fair—Elwood Speers, S.S. No. 10, Caledon.

These books were judged at Brampton by Mr. Fydell, and Ray Morrison, of S.S. No. 8, Toronto, wins the special prize. Ray is a pupil of Miss Frances Bovaird.

What is re-fluffing ?

When blankets come off the looms in woollen mills they are put through a machine that raises the surface so that it becomes soft and cozy to the touch. This adds materially to the warming properties. In this laundry blankets, after their soft water washing are put through the same kind of machine, with the result that they are given exactly the same soft surface they had when purchased. This applies also to motor rugs. There is no other cleaning method as thorough as laundry washing by the soft water method, and in this laundry every drop of water used is rain soft. What New York Is Wearing

BY ANNEBELLE WORTHINGTON

Illustrated Dressmaking Lesson Furnished With Every Pattern

2930

Little daughter will love this model with such a grown-up air.

It is fashioned of brick red sheer woolen with white pique trim.

It buttons down the back—quite the newest idea of Paris in the elder mode. The pointed outline through the hips is modish.

And you'll be startled to learn how easily it is made. Merely a two-piece circular skirt to be seamed and joined to the bodice.

Style No. 2930 may be had in sizes 8, 10, 12 and 14 years. The 8-year size requires 2 yards of 39-inch material with ¼ yard of 39-inch contrasting.

It adapts itself beautifully to wool jersey, wool crepe, woolen tweed mixtures, tweed-like cottons and challis type cottons, that will give excellent service for school wear.

HOW TO ORDER PATTERNS.

Write your name and address plainly, giving number and size of such patterns as you want. Enclose 20c in stamps or coin (coin preferred; wrap it carefully) for each number, and address your order to Wilson Pattern Service, 73 West Adelaide St., Toronto.

A commercial traveller called on a new customer and handed him a small snapshot of his fiancee in mistake for his business card. "That' sir," he said, "is the firm I represent." The customer examined the determined looking features of the girl and returned the snapshot. "You'll never be the manager of that firm," he said.

Consolation for Secretaries

If a secretary writes a letter, it is too long.

If he sends a postcard, it's too short.

If he issues a bulletin, he's a spendthrift.

If he attends a committee meeting, he's butting in.

If he stays away, he's a shirker.

If he offers a suggestion, he's a "know-all."

If he says nothing, he's useless.

If the attendance at the meeting is slack, he should have called the members up.

If he calls them up, he's a pest.

If he asks a member for his subscription, he is insulting.

If he doesn't, he is lazy.

If the meeting is a big success, the committee gets the praise.

If it is a failure, the secretary is to blame.

If he asks for advice, he is incompetent.

If he does not, he is swollen-headed.

Ashes to ashes, dust to dust,
If the others won't do it, the secretary must.

Silk Industry in Brazil Grows; Imports Barred

Sao Paulo, Brazil.—The silk industry is growing in Brazil, especially in the Amazon country, Kunisaburo Hirai, director of Japanese plantations in this country, reports.

The state of Sao Paulo has been the leader in the Brazilian silk industry, but Dr. Hirai expects to have strong rivals soon in the states of Amazonas and Para, in the Amazon valley. Already there are 2,000 Japanese engaged in silkworm culture there, he said.

Fifty-one factories in the state of Sao Paulo employ 3,500 operators in silk weaving on 761 looms and 2,399 spindles. Nine factories make silk cords, ribbons and braids, while three spin $760,000 worth of natural silk yarns yearly.

The revolutionary government early in its existence prohibited the importation of such luxuries as silk, and the silk production of Brazil is all consumed wthin the country.

"I understand your friend is artistic."

"Yes, he is a sculptor's modiste."

"What's that?"

"He drapes nude statues in fussy neighborhoods."

Poverty is a great enemy to human happiness; it certainly destroys liberty, and it makes some virtues impracticable, and others extremely difficult.—Dr. Johnston.

THE

TULE MARSH MURDER

STORY OF A MISSING ACTRESS AND THE TAXING OF WITS TO EXPLAIN HER FATE.

BY NANCY BARR MAVITY.

SYNOPSIS

Don Ellsworth's wife, formerly actress Sheila O'Shay, disappears. Dr. Cavanaugh, criminal psychologist, learns that their married life has been unhappy.

Peter Piper, Herald reporter, while trying to interview Dr. Cavanaugh, meets his attractive daughter, Barbara, and finds she was engaged to Ellsworth before his marriage.

Dr. Cavanaugh identifies the charred remains of a body found in the tule marsh outside the city as that of Sheila O'Shay. Barbara faints when she hears this. Mrs. Kane, Sheila's maid is arrested and, Peter learns that Sheila forced Don to marry her by threat of breach of promise. Peter and Dr. Cavanaugh enter the Ellsworth house and find the breach of promise papers are not in the safe; but they find a threatening letter signed "David Orme." Later Peter disguised as a detective questions Ethel, a servant of the Ellsworth household.

"Never mind. This will do." Peter unpinned the police badge from his sweater and held it, his thumb concealing the embossed word, "Press," in the palm of his hand. "This is a symbol of the majesty of the law," he announced sonorously. "Now then—'the-truth-the-whole-truth-and-nothing but-the-truth-so-help-you God'." He rattled off the formula as he had heard the bailiff deliver it a hundred times in court.

"I do," Ethel responded fervently.

"Well then, let's get down to cases. Did a man, probably a fairly young man and not very well dressed, ever come around to see Mrs. Ellsworth?"

"No, sir; not that I remember."

Peter's face fell. Was it going to be no good, after all?

"Not a small dark man, who insisted on seeing Mrs. Ellsworth personally?"

Ethel sat a moment in silent concentration.

"Oh!" Her face lighted with sudden recollection. "He wasn't very dark, though—"

"Never mind that. It was just a guess, to get you to thinking."

"But he didn't get to see Mrs. Ellsworth—"

"That's all right too. Tell me everything you can remember about it. Take your time."

"I'd forgotten all about him. I thought he was just trying to sell something. Those canvassers will move heaven and earth to see the lady of the house. But come to think, he didn't have a bag or anything like that with him."

"How long ago was this?"

"It was—let me think—I remember I hated to stop to answer the door because it was the middle of the afternoon and I was trying to slip some time in to sew the flower on my dress for a dance I was going to with my sweetie. And the dance was on the sixteenth, because my boy friend gets paid twice a month and he said he'd have plenty of money to show me a real swell time—"

"The sixteenth. That was just two days before Mrs. Ellsworth disappeared."

"Why, so it was! I never thought of it from that moment to this."

"All right. Now think hard, and tell me exactly what happened. You're doing fine."

"Well, this man was at the door and asked for Mrs. Ellsworth and said 'What name, please?' and he said, 'You may take her this,' and he handed me an envelope. I didn't think much about it, because they have all sorts of advertising dodges these days—sometimes it's charity, or magazine subscriptions or buying tickets to draw an automobile or things like that. But I took it up to her and she read it and threw it down on the desk without saying a word. Then she picked it up again and handed it to Mrs. Kane and said, 'I'll be damned if I do'—excuse the language."

"Mrs. Ellsworth's language isn't your fault. Go right ahead."

"So then I thought it was tickets or something she was turning down. She told me to tell him there was no answer and for him not to call again. But I wasn't more than half way down the stairs when Mrs. Kane came down after me and said she'd attend to it herself. Gracious, how it all comes back, now that I think of it."

"Yes," Peter prodded. "And then?"

"Let me see. I didn't want Mrs. Kane to see me going right back to my room, because I never did like that woman, and it would be just like her to tell me I wasn't minding my duties. So I stood back in the hall waiting for her to get through at the door and go back upstairs. I couldn't hear what they said."

"Not a thing?" Peter's voice was a groan of disappointment.

"Well, now, let me think. He had on kind of a dark suit, blue it was, and it was all wrinkled and pretty dusty. Dust shows up a lot on blue, you know. I noticed the dust because he said, 'I'm staying at the auto camp grounds for the present, and I'm not going away till I see her.' And I thought he must be traveling about the country, but he'd better brush up a little, even if he was camping out if he expected to sell anything."

"You heard him say that?" Peter leaped to his feet so suddenly that Ethel shrank back startled.

"Oh, sir, I—"

"Now don't get scared. You're doing splendidly. I couldn't do better myself. What sort of looking man was he?"

"He was just an ordinary kind of man. Not very big—not as tall as Mrs. Kane. He was kind of thin-looking, as if he'd been sick or something."

Peter thought this over, chewing the stem of his pipe and longing with all his soul for one of his familiar cigarettes. So far he had got exactly nowhere.

He knew that David Orme had called at the Ellsworth house—which he had known already—with the additional information that he had stopped at the automobile camp grounds. But David Orme, so far as the description went, might be any one of thousands. Peter might pass him a dozen times, meet him face to face on the streets, without a chance of recognizing him.

"That's all there was to it," Ethel said with finality. "He went away then."

"And he never came back?"

"Not that I know of—not when I was on duty. I never saw him but the once—Why, yes I did, too, the very night after the dance! It went clean out of my head, because that was the night my boy friend and I we fixed it up to get married." A very pretty rose-colored flush swept across Ethel's round face; her eyes suffused and tender, stared into romantic distances.

"That's very nice," Peter said kindly. "I congratulate the young man."

"Oh, it's me that's to be congratulated," Ethel said earnestly. "He's the grandest fellow. He—"

"I'm sure he is." Peter reached forward and gave her hand a friendly pat. "Some day I want to hear all about him, but we'll have to put that off a bit. So you saw Orme—this auto camp person—that night? Are you absolutely sure it was he?"

"Oh, yes, I'm quite positive. You see my friend—Dan, his name is, but I call him Danny; it's sort of a pet name. He's awfully cute. He said he was going to call me 'Gas' because my name's Ethel—Ethel gas, you know. But he doesn't, really; he just says things like that to be funny. He said—"

"I'm sure he's witty as Oscar Wilde," Peter interrupted. "But you saw—"

"I never saw Oscar Wilde. But I think Harold Lloyd's just killing."

"Yes," Peter agreed hastily. "And you saw this man——"

"Oh, yes. Danny came around for me to the back entrance, in his Ford. When we turned out of the driveway—it's a sharp curve, you know—this same man was standing close under a tree at the corner of the lawn. The headlights were on him only a minute, but I know it was him, because his hand was resting against a tree trunk, and the last two fingers were off at the first knuckle, just the way they were when he had his hand up against the jamb of the door the day he asked for Mrs. Ellsworth."

"Suffering cats!" breathed Peter. And again: "Suffering cats! Why in the name of all that's holy didn't you give me that description before?"

"It never entered my head. You see, Danny and I—"

Peter bounded across the intervening space, seized Ethel by the shoulders, and planted a resounding kiss on her astonished cheek.

"You and Danny are going to have the finest wedding present the little old pay envelope can afford!" he shouted. "Keep it under your hat, Ethel darling. And watch young Peter do some grand and lofty sleuthing!"

His long legs were twinkling in full retreat down the driveway before Ethel recovered her breath.

"Well, if that ain't the limit!" she exclaimed to the empty air. "Detectives sure are funny!"

CHAPTER XXX.

"If he has any sense, he'll have beat it away from here into other spots and left no forwarding address," Peter informed "Bossy" severely as he swung into the boulevard leading to the camp grounds.

But despite his efforts to batten down his enthusiasm with stern common sense, excitement prickled up and down his spine and tightened his hands on the wheel. It did not so much as occur to him that he had set out, unarmed and alone, to pursue a possible murderer. He did not even wonder how he would induce Orme to give himself up, if he found him.

Peter was a profound believer in the futility of crossing bridges before he came to them—the bridges were so very likely not to be where you expected them, or be missing altogether.

Despite his lack of sleep, he was buoyed up beyond the reach of fatigue; his head felt a little light, but uncommonly clear. "Bossy" seemed to dip and skim along the highway like a gull coasting down the lanes of air. Speed gave him the illusion of pressing on in an obscure race with fate.

Death of War Debts

The Globe, Toronto:—When President Hoover suggested to the world a one-year moratorium he signed the death-warrant of war debts. The net effect of the visit to Washington of Premier Laval of France is that the whole war debt system is now to be formally pronounced dead, and decently interred. There will be few mourners.

The fact that France has won her point, in that the emergency provisions of the Young Plan are to be invoked for the purpose of ending formally the debt-exaction system, does not affect the essential truth. The world economic system has come perilously close to breaking down completely. Some of the causes of the nearbreakdown are imperfectly understood. But there is no doubt as to one factor. The attempt of the United States to extract from Europe vast quantities of gold in payment for munitions and other goods sold in wartime was a chief cause of the depression.

It is idle for politicians in the united States to pretend to their people that war-debt payments may be resumed at some future date. Europe is not going to go through the agony of making ends meet to correct depression—for the mere purpose of starting in again on the same vicious process that created the present distress.

The Laval-Hoover conversations mean, in brief, good-bye to war debts.

Autumn

Autumn is not just leaves turning red,
It is our stroll before going to bed;
It is your pipe giving smoke to the night,
Autumn is not just corn getting ripe.

Fall is not only leaves in the walk,
It is your mood and the way that you talk;
It is that vague thing which saddens your eyes,
Fall is much more than colorful skies.
—P. S. McDonald in Chicago Tribune.

Little Summer

Musical is the rustling of the leaves falling, falling . . .
Minute by minute;
And joy, in the fountain of my heart upspringing.
Wells, crystal clear, at the sweet and delicate calling
Of a linnet
As if in spring time, in the autumn stillness singing . . .
Born of this little summer so sweetly delaying
Winter's grey weather.
Songs out of season, with color in motion are stealing
From the shrine of my heart, and the tree where the linnet is swaying;
Fleeting together.
Fugitive words set to music, dulcet appealing.
—Brenda Murray Draper, in the Herald.

Jerry: "You used to boast that your love for pretty girls was just a passing fancy. And yet you got married." Jim: "Yes, I lingered too long in passing the last one."

"As a practicing reviewer, I have got so used to lewd and lascivious books that I no longer notice them."
—H. L. Mencken.

"I'M going, anyway"

THE modern Miss needs no "time out" for the time of month.

If you've ever taken Aspirin for a headache, you know how soon the pain subsides. It is just as effective in the relief of those pains peculiar to women!

Don't dedicate certain days of every month to suffering. It's old-fashioned. It's unnecessary. Aspirin will always enable you to carry-on in comfort. Take enough to assure your complete comfort. If it is genuine Aspirin it cannot possibly hurt you. Aspirin tablets do not depress the heart. They do not upset the stomach. They do nothing but stop the pain.

Headaches come at inconvenient times. So do colds. But a little Aspirin will always save the day. A throat so sore that you can hardly swallow is made comfortable with one good gargle made from these tablets. Neuralgia. Neuritis. Rheumatism. Pains that once kept people home are forgotten half an hour after taking a few of these remarkable tablets. So are the little nagging aches that bring fatigue and "nerves" by day, or a sleepless night.

Genuine Aspirin tablets cost so very little after all, that it doesn't pay to experiment with imitations!

Open Window

By Saki

"Out through that window, three years ago, they went off for a day's shooting... They never came back."

"My aunt will be down presently, Mr. Nuttel," said a very self-possessed young lady of fifteen; "in the meantime, you must try and put up with me."

Framton Nuttel endeavored to say the correct something which should duly flatter the niece of the moment without unduly discounting the aunt that was to come. Privately he doubted more than ever whether these formal visits on a succession of total strangers would do much to help the nerve cure he was supposed to be undergoing.

"I know how it will be," his sister had said when he was preparing to migrate to this rural retreat; "you will bury yourself down there and not speak to a living soul, and your nerves will be worse than ever from moping. I shall just give you letters of introduction to all the people I know there. Some of them, as far as I can remember, were quite nice."

Framton wondered whether Mrs. Sappleton, the lady to whom he was presenting one of the letters of introduction, came into the nice division.

"Do you know many of the people round here?" asked the niece, when she judged that they had had sufficient silent communion.

"Hardly a soul," said Framton. "My sister was staying here, at the rectory, you know, some four years ago, and she gave me letters of introduction to some of the people here."

He made the last statement in a tone of distinct regret.

"Then you know practically nothing about my aunt?" pursued the self-possessed young lady.

"Only her name and address," admitted the caller. He was wondering whether Mrs. Sappleton was in the married or widowed state. An indefinable something about the room seemed to suggest masculine habitations.

"Her great tragedy happened just three years ago," said the child; "that would be since your sister's time."

"Her tragedy?" asked Framton; somehow in this restful country spot tragedies seemed out of place.

"You may wonder why we keep that window wide open on an October afternoon," said the niece; indicating a large French window that opened on to a lawn.

"It is quite warm for the time of year,' said Framton; "but has that window got anything to do with the tragedy?"

"Out through that window, three years ago to a day, her husband and her two young brothers went off for their day's shooting. They never came back. In crossing the moor to their favorite snipe-shooting ground, they were all three engulfed in a treacherous piece of bog. It had been that dreadful wet summer, you know, and places that were safe in other years gave way suddenly without warning. Their bodies were never recovered. That was the dreadful part of it."

Here the child's voice lost its self-possessed note and became falteringly human.

"Poor aunt always thinks that they will come back some day, they and the little brown spaniel that was lost with them, and walk in at that window just as they used to do. That is why the window is kept open every evening until it is quite dusk.

"Poor dear aunt, she has often told me how they went out, her husband with his white waterproof coat over his arm, and Ronnie, her youngest brother, singing 'Bertie, why do you bound?' as he always did to tease her, because she said it got on her nerves. Do you know, sometimes on stiff, quiet evenings like this, I almost get a creepy feeling that they will all walk in through that window——"

She broke off with a little shudder. It was a relief to Framton when the aunt bustled into the room with a whirl of apologies for being late in making her appearance.

"I hope Vera has been amusing you?" she said.

"She has been very interesting," said Framton.

"I hope you don't mind the open window,' said Mrs. Sappleton briskly; "my husband and brothers will be home directly from shooting, and they always come in that way. They've been out for snipe in the marshes today, so they'll make a fine mess over my poor carpets. So like you menfolk, isn't it?"

She rattled on cheerfully about the shooting and the scarcity of birds, and the prospects for duck in the winter. He made a desperate but only partially successful effort to turn the talk on to a less ghastly topic; he was conscious that his hostess was giving him only a fragment of her attention, and her eyes were constantly straying past him to the open window and the lawn beyond. It was certainly an unfortunate coincidence that he should have paid his visit on that tragic anniversary.

"The doctors agree in ordering me complete rest, an absence of mental excitement, and avoidance of anything in the nature of violent physical exercise," announced Framton, who labored under the tolerably widespread delusion that total strangers and chance acquaintances are hungry for the least detail of one's ailments and infirmities, their cause and cure. "On the matter of diet they are not so much in agreement," he continued.

"No?" said Mrs. Sappleton, in a voice which only replaced a yawn at the last moment. Then she suddenly brightened into alert attention—but not to what Framton was saying.

"Here they are at last!" she cried. "Just in time for tea, and don't they look as if they were muddy up to their eyes!"

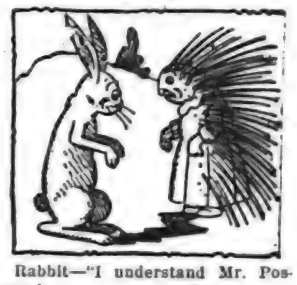
Framton shivered slightly and turned towards the niece with a look intended to convey sympathetic comprehension. The child was staring out through the open window with dazed horror in her eyes. In a chill of nameless fear Framton swung round in his seat and looked in the same direction.

In the deepening twilight three figures were walking across the lawn towards the window; they all carried guns under their arms, and one of them was additionally burdened with a white coat hung over his shoulders. A tired, brown spaniel kept close at their heels. Noiselessly they neared the house, and then a hoarse young voice chanted out of the dusk: "I said, 'Bertie, why do you bound'?"



Framton grabbed wildly at his stick and hat; the hall door, the gravel drive, and the front gate were dimly-noted stages in his headlong retreat. A cyclist coming along the road had to run into the hedge to avoid imminent collision.

"Here we are, my dear," said the bearer of the white mackintosh, coming in through the window; fairly muddy, but most of it's dry. Who was that who bolted out as we came up?"

"A most extraordinary man, a Mr. Nuttel," said Mrs. Sappleton; "could only talk about his illness, and dashed off without a word of good-bye or apology when you arrived. One would think he had seen a ghost."

"I expect it was the spaniel," said the niece calmly; "he told me he had a horror of dogs. He was once hunted into a cemetery somewhere on the banks of the Ganges by a pack of pariah dogs, and had to spend the night in a newly-dug grave with the creatures snarling and grinning and foaming just above him. Enough to make anyone lose their nerve."

Sunday School Lesson

November 8. Lesson VI—Paul In Ephesus—Acts 19: 8-20. Golden Text—Have no fellowship with the unfruithful works of darkness, but rather reprove them.—Ephesians 5: 11.

I. THE FULL GOSPEL, Acts 19: 1-7.

II. SUPERSTITION IN RELIGION, Acts 19: 8-20.

III. THE BEGINNING OF THE END, Acts 19: 21-41.

IV. PAGAN VICES AND CHRISTIANITY, Eph. 5: 5-11.

INTRODUCTION—Paul was permitted to leave Corinth in peace and quiet. After a visit to Jerusalem, Anitoch and the Galatian churches, he came to Ephesus, Acts 18: 18-23.

Ephesus, a more populous, wealthy and important city than Corinth, was capital of the province of "Asia." "Asia" means not the modern continent of Asia, but that western part of it with which the Romans first came into contact. Ephesus also had a great religious attraction in its famous Temple of Diana. Paul, according to his custom, settled in this strategic situation and began to teach the new religion.

I. THE FULL GOSPEL, Acts 19: 1-7.

Among the believers whom Paul found in Ephesus, one group was specially interesting, v. . Finding these men in that fringe of partial converts which surrounded every synagogue, and knowing nothing about them except their evident sincerity, Paul accepted them as disciples. Soon, however, he discovered ha' they lacked that peculiar enthusiasm which marked the "Spirit filled" believers. "Did you receive the Holy Spirit when you believed?" he asked.

Coming into a modern church, would he see a similar dullness and absence of Christian joy? The "joy" in believing is too often absent. Such joy as the average Christian possesses is frequently attributed to a dutiful family, good health, or a satisfactory income.

II. SUPERSTITION IN RELIGION, Acts 19: 8-20.

After three months' preaching in the synagogue, Paul found it necessary, as in other places, to withdraw. He secured the lecture room of Tyrannus—vacant daily from 11 to 4 and there preached for two years. So deep was the impression which Paul made that his superstitious converts believed that even an article of clothing which touched him had healing power. Unknown to Paul, who certainly would have discouraged such magical practices, zealous admirers would bring to the sick various articles which had been in contact with his person. Certain physical and mental conditions were cured. It was "faith healing." Not the articles of course, no more than the relics of St. Anne de Beaupre, wrought the cures—but the faith in them.

The sons of Sceva, pagan magicians, saw in these cures possibilities for themselves. They would use this name "Jesus" which they thought Paul used as a sort of charm. The demented fellow on whom they tried it saw the deception and assaulted them with such fury that they barely escaped with their lives, v. 16. The incident resulted in many converts. Christians who had been practising the magic arts in secret, confessed and brought their books—very valuable—and burned them publicly, vs. 17-19. They not only removed temptation from their own way; they removed it from others also. When the church members purified their own lives "that word of God grew mightily, and prevailed, v. 20.

III. THE BEGINNING OF THE END, Acts 19: 21-41.

Verse 21 marks the beginning of the end of Acts. The keynote is struck in "I must also see Rome." Rome had long been Paul's goal. Now we are to read how he attained it. His desire for Rome was God's will, but he learned like others that:

'Twas he who taught me thus to pray,
And he I know has answered prayer,
But it has been in such a way
As almost drove me to despair.

He was not to have a quiet exit, as from Corinth. One of "the many adversaries" (1 Cor. 16: 9) suddenly emerged in the person of Demetrius, v. 24. Christianity was ruining his business. The turning from idolatry and magic in v. 18 was evidently real. He saw a serious falling-off in trade. The preaching that interfered with profits had to be stopped.

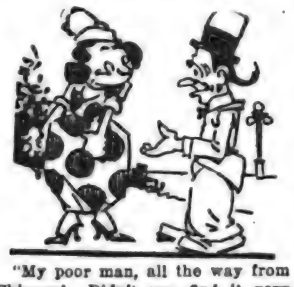
IV. PAGAN VICES AND CHRISTIANITY, Eph. 5: 5-11.

Not only against superstition had Paul to wage war, but against sin, personal and social. The letter "to the Ephesians," which was probably meant for more than one church, deals among other matters, with the temptations which surround Christians in a pagan society. In the "kingdom of God and of Christ," v. 15, that is, the Christian Brotherhood, there is no room for the "covetous" man. "Covetousness," as used here, means more than mere avarice. It stands for that attitude of life which makes one's own advantage and pleasure the sole object. The impulse which leads one man to covet another's share of this world's goods drives another man into impurity. This motive of self-gratification, wherever it may lead one, is so alien to the Christian spirit that it is not even to be mentioned, v. 3.

The way to "reprove" these "works of darkness" is to live a life so unquestionably pure and right that it will reveal the heathen vices as they are. It is still the "Royal Way."

A Rising Scale

The deaf man stepped down from the dentist's chair after the operation.



"How much do I owe you for that?" he asked.

The dentist looked thoughtful.

"Three guineas," he replied.

"Five guineas?" asked the deaf man uncertainly.

"No," put in the dentist quickly; "nine guineas."

"My poor man, all the way from Chicago! Didn't you find it very hot traveling?"

"Not at all, madam. I always take a refrigerator car in the summer."

Hope for the best, prepare for the worst, and take what comes.

At the Top of Mount Fuji

Who has not heard of Mount Fuji and longed for a glimpse of its snowcrowned summit? This majestic heaven-kissing peak is everything a mountain should be. It is shaped even as little children expect a mountain to be shaped, it is beautiful to look upon from near and far, it is surrounded by the halo of legend and tradition as Japan's highest and most sacred mountain. Best of all, it is accessible.

So when I learned that the climb could be made between the time the Siberia Maru arrived at Yokohama and sailed from Kobe I resolved that Fuji's summit would be my first destination after presenting some letters of introduction at Tokyo. Within twenty-four hours of landing I would be on my way to get a bird's-eye view of Japan from its very top.

"Americans are certainly energetic," remarked the Foreign Office official in Tokyo upon whom I called that afternoon. "I have been planning to climb Fjui myself for the past twenty years. Somehow I have never got around to doing it. Yet here you come along from America and within a few hours are on your way. Well, I hope you enjoy the climb and get a clear view. Our rainy season has been lasting a little longer than usual. . . ."

A youthful member of a Tokyo hiking club who spoke some English and better German was soon on his way with the American editor to Gotemba, the little town lying at the foot of Fuji. As the train wound its way through the foothills, sheets of rain dashed against the windows while clouds and mist obscured all view of the snow-clad peak towering twelve thousand three hundred and eighty-seven feet above the plain.

The ascent began. It was very gradual, recalling in its early stages the journey up Mount Rainier in the State of Washington, or the slowly mounting slope of Mauna Loa on the Island of Hawaii. As in the Hawaiian Island, there was semitropical vegetation and red volcanic soil. After a little distance had been traversed wild flowers and anemones abounded on the mosses under the fragrant fir trees. In the open spaces we heard the distant song of larks and in the wood nightingales chanted melodiously and even responded when my young companion whistled the notes of their song. . .

When our eyes turned in the direction from which we had come they beheld one of the world's loveliest mountain views. Fog and mists were fleeing in every direction before the piercing rays of the late afternoon sun. As their gray curtains swept away, one low mountain range after another came into the line of vision. Between the slopes were beautiful lakes surrounded by sloping green fields.—From "We Look at the Wold," by H. V. Kaltenborn.

Amusing Anecdotes

Some racy anecdotes of John W. ("Betcha-a-Million") Gates, capitalist and gambler, are told by Albert Stevens Crockett (in "Peacocks on Parade," a chronicle of New York in the "Naughty Nineties.") Gates acquired his nickname, "Betcha-a-Million," from his habit of using that form of wager upon the slightest provocation. He would bet on anything. One afternoon a heavy rainstorm came up. The pelting of raindrops on the window-panes made Gates's eyes brighten.

"Say, John," he suddenly remarked to John Drake, "see them two raindrops? I'll bet that fellow on this side reaches the bottom before that one over there."

• • • •

Ten dollars was the first stake, and then this jumped to one hundred. It was a new sport and it became lively. For some minutes, at least, they staked hundred-dollar bills on the course and speed of raindrops chasing down a window-pane, just as if they were at some race track, playing the ponies, says Crockett.

• • • •

Often what to an ordinary man would represent a huge fortune would change hands among Gates's "crowd" during a few hours' play at poker or bridge. At one of these games a prominent New York politician was invited to "make a fourth" at bridge. By no means wealthy, caution made him inquire as he sat down: "By the way, what are we playing for?"

"One a point,' Gates answered tersely.

The game began and ended. The New Yorker finished 330 points ahead.

"You'll get your cheque tomorrow," Gates's secretary—who attended to such matters—told the winner.

• • • •

When it arrived, the New Yorker fell back in astonishment. It was for $33,000! From Gates's secretary he learned that the game was for $100 a point, not $1, as he had imagined. So he sought out Gates.

"Mr. Gates," he protested, "I don't feel right in taking this money because, in a sense, I got it under false pretences." He went on to explain the situation, when Gates broke in with:

'Cut it out. We had the game, didn't we? You won didn't you? You got the cheque, didn't you? Well, let's forget about it.

• • • •

Writing to Austin Dobson just after he had finished his Life of the poet Gray (of Elegy fame), Sir Edmund Gosse said—the letter is quoted in Evan Charteris' Life of Gosse:

"I am in a state of agitation; I have just written the death of Gray, with inexpressible excitement: I have been crying so that my tears blinded the page—how ridiculous—tears for a little man who died more than a hundred years ago—how ridiculous!"

• • • •

Which reminds me that some authors do suffer horribly when a work on a story with tragedy stalking through it. I recall, for instance, that when A. S. M. Hutchinson was writing "This Freedom"—which followed "If Winter Comes" he became a wreck while working on the chapter dealing with the suicide of a young girl. He was haggard and "all in" and you could see in his face that it was taking hold of him terribly. He would stay up all night with his characters and suffer excruciating agony in their company.

Curious, isn't it?

• • • •

Hamlin Garland—in his new book, "Companions on the Trail"—quotes Edward W. Bok as telling him this story about Rudyard Kipling with whom Bok once crossed the ocean. Said Bok:

"One day as I was lying in my steamer chair reading 'The Brushwood Boy,' Rudyard came up behind me with a roll of wet newspaper and gave me a fearful swat. 'Put that book down,' he said. I was hurt and disgusted. 'That was a bad boy's trick,' I remarked.

• • • •

"I was hot, and when he saw that I meant it he sat down beside me and tried to make me forget it. He apologized and then explained the genesis of the book. 'I was seven years writing that story,' he said, 'and it represents my own life—in a way.' He offered to read it aloud to me as compensation for his cruel swat, and in the end I forgave him. I loved him."

Another of Mr. Garland's stories is about Bret Harte. Garland heard it from the lips of William Dean Howells.

"Bret was a careless vagabond," said Howells "improvident but highly amusing, and we all liked him. He was always in debt. It fell to me on one occasion to present him as a lecturer to an audience in Tremont Temple (Boston), and when I called at his house to escort him to the hall, I found him in the custody of a constable.

• • • •

"Harte explained, without apparent concern, that his tailor had sent the officer to collect payment for a suit of clothes and the constable, said to me: 'This man shall not give his lecture without handing over his fee.' Thereupon Harte invited him to ride with us to the hall and sit on the platform.

"This he did," continued Howells, "and so, as I rose to present the speaker, I had on my right hand a distinguished novelist, and on my left the constable—Harte being the least perturbed of the trio."

PASSING OF A PEEL COUNTY VILLAGE

Cataract, Oct. 31st.—The C.P.R. will close its Cataract station here on Nov. 1st. Thus the curtain is rung down on the business career of one of the busiest centres in the north end of Peel County during the latter half of the last century.

In the early sixties Albert Church, the pioneer business man of this place established a brewery here. Attracted by the available water power, he was followed by Wheeler Brothers, who operated a flour mill and by William Ward with a woollen mill. The products of these industries were all teamed to their various markets and the population grew to about 350.

So busy was this thriving borough that the Credit Valley Railroad decided to establish a station at the foot of the hill on which the village stood. Two blacksmiths' shops started, also a wagon shop and two stores. Later, when the Elora branch was built a junction was made at this point.

Guided by the keen business sense for which he was noted, Frank McEnaney built a second hotel known as the Junction House across the road from the station. Here he was in a position to cater to the needs of the travelling public, and it was his boast that a hungry man never left his house, whether he had money or not.

Until the nineties prosperity reigned, but the depression of that period left its mark plainly on this village. Church's Brewery failed, Ward moved his mill to Alton, Wheeler Brothers sold out to John M. Deagle, who operated the flour mill, until it was burned. Then he established a power plant, which is still in operation, being now owned by the Cataract Power Co. With these industries gone the population dwindled and soon all that was the store, station and McEnaney's Hotel.

Here over their social drinks the citizens of the surrounding country would discuss local news and events of world-wide importance and many heated political arguments took place in this house, which continued to operate until the temperance policy of Jas. Pliny Whitney decreed that a hotel was not necessary in such a small place. McEnaney moved with his family to Toronto, where he died some six years ago.

The population now is about thirty-five, and as one looks around this one-time busy place, he needs must think that all it can boast of is its picturesque scenery and its glorious past.

OUR MANITOBA LETTER

Oct. 23rd, 1931.
348 Colony St. Winnipeg, Man

Dear Editor:—

We have been out to Empire three times during the summer and the last time it was threshing time. The wheat on summer fallow did very well, average about twenty bushels per acre. And the late rains helped the pastures greatly. There was very little hay and most of the oats were cut for feed; very little grain in the heads; no one seemed to know why. We found the road excellent, the last time, early in September, before that, so many places were wash-boardy, and men were oiling the road from Gladstone to Neepawa. Now they are finished and it sure is a great improvement, to drive miles and not be smothered in dust. Farmers around Empire and other districts, were working on highway, going into the Nationalist Park, on the riding mountain. The one from Norgate into the Park, is a government relief work, and farmers were earning enough to pay their taxes, but that has quit for the present.

The death of Mr. George Grierson, of Minnedosa took place last Sunday. A burial service was held in Minnedosa United church. Afterward the body was sent to Winnipeg, to Clark Leatherdale burial home, where a service was held. Mr. J. S. Watson, one time minister at Minnedosa, gave a review of Mr. Grierson's life. Mr. Grierson came to Minnedosa in 1887 as a school teacher. He retired from teaching 1896 and studied law. He also was a member of Manitoba government for the constituency of Minnedosa, he entered the cabinet as Minister of public works.

He was a very fine man, young men and women who attended school while he was teaching—say, he was always their idea of a perfect man. He is buried in Elmwood Cemetery, beside his wife, who died four years ago. They had no children, but was always the children's friend.

Winnipeg is still trying to solve unemployment, but seems to make very little headway. A few men in St. Vital went on a hunger strike. After three days work was promised, they had started to eat again. Everybody seems to be working hard to find a way out. Now the civic elections are on, everybody is more than busy. Mayor Webb is trying once more to fill the mayor's chair.

It has been raining the last three days. I hear the newboys calling their papers as lustily as ever. There is one who sure should be trained for a loud speaker.

I attended the graduation of thirty nurses from Grace Hospital. It was held in Young United Church, and was carried on by the Salvation Army. It was very wonderful, so many nurses and so many speakers. The Archbishop of Rupert's Land was the chief speaker. He told of some of his experiences in the north while a missionary on Herchell Island, and in Dawson. The music was something to be remembered. The singing by the boys' choir was fine. The church was crowded to capacity. Miss Moad, of Clanwilliam, was one of the graduating nurses. There were nurses from many places in Canada, England and United States.

This afternoon, three hundred unemployed marched up to parliament to demand clothes, they were promised to be looked after; there was no disturbance. I was talking to an English lady this week. She has been a visitor in Manitoba since July and intends sailing for home next month. She said she was amazed at a country like Canada, with so much work to be done, and will have to be done in a year or two, why work could not be found for everyone needing it. She said she hoped Canada never would come down to the dole. She knew hundreds of young people in England, 22 years of age, that have never done a hard day's work, just live on the dole.

PRAIRIE ROSE

Sportsman Is Recovering

Philip had a pleasant life at college, playing football, tennis, and all the sports that youth loves. Then his father died—and Philip had to get a job. His work was hard and confining—there was little time for play in the fresh air. A cold and a bad cough resulted in a long spell of illness, which finally sent him to the Muskoka Hospital for Consumptives.

It has been an uphill journey, but the experienced medical attention, kindly nursing, rest and good food are remaking this young Canadian into a sturdy self-supporting man once more. "I have gained 25 pounds," Philip says proudly, "and I am just about right again. I will be glad to get back to work and help mother and the kids at home." There is high hope that his wishes will be fulfilled.

For this splendid work, money is urgently needed. Would you not like to make a gift? Mr. A. E. Ames, 228 College St., Toronto, will gladly receive it.

LOVE LAUGHS AT TELEPHONE TOLLS

Evening rates (7.00 p.m. to 8.30 p.m. local time) are considerably lower than day rates on "anyone" calls. Night rates (8.30 p.m. to 4.30 a.m.) are lower still.

THE BELL TELEPHONE COMPANY OF CANADA

Hospital days were lonely. Of course, her friends did all they could to keep her cheerful — her room was a bower of roses — but how she looked forward to evening when Jack could sit by her and talk of his day at the office.

Then came the news that he must leave town on business. She wondered how she could stand the wait until he came home. But Jack, wise fellow, knew how to bridge the gap. Promptly each evening at nine he called her over Long Distance and told her all the things she wished to hear.

Extravagant? . . . not a bit . . . for night rates are always inexpensive! What could be worth more for what it cost?

This rule is important at all times, but especially so at dusk and at night.

At such times, no matter how careful the driver of a car is, he may not see you until he is very near to you and it may be impossible for him to stop in time to avoid inflicting serious injury.

Should he swerve to avoid hitting you, though you may escape injury others may be hurt.

Of the 524 fatalities on the highways of Ontario last year a large number were caused by persons walking with rather than against traffic.

Why take a chance?

ASTHMA

For reasons which are not understood, some persons become hypersensitive to one or more kinds of protein. Proteins are complex chemical substances of which the white of egg is a familiar example. Proteins are found in animal and plant tissues, and are also present, in varying amounts, in a large number and variety of substances, such as cereals, legumes and milk, the pollens of grasses and flowers, emanations from horses and other animals, in dust and in disease germs.

Two conditions arising as a result of this sensitiveness are known as Hay Fever and Asthma. They are similar conditions. When it is the nose that is affected, we call the condition Hay Fever; when the bronchial tubes are involved, we say it is asthma.

The mucous membrane lining the nose or bronchial tubes becomes swollen; there is an increase of secretions, and, in asthma, there is shortness of breath which may go on to produce extreme distress. The word "asthma" means "panting", and describes the outstanding symptom of the attack which may last for a few minutes or several hours.

The majority of those who are suffering from asthma are found to be hypersensitive to some protein. The remainder are mostly older persons, and their asthma is frequently associated with chronic bronchitis, and with heart and kidney disease.

The protein may be breathed in. This happens with the pollens, and it explains why some subjects of asthma have an attack if they approach a horse; they breathe in the emanations from the horse, which contains the protein to which they are sensitive. In other cases, an attack follows the use of a feather pillow or a horse-hair mattress.

The protein may be one that is found in milk, eggs or some other food. That is why, in some asthmatics, attacks may follow the eating of such foods. The protein of a disease germ which is harboured in some part of the body is not infrequently responsible.

Knowing these facts, the logical procedure is to find out the one or more proteins to which the sufferer is sensitive. This can be done satisfactorily, in most cases, by certain skin tests which reveal the responsible protein.

Once the protein is known, steps can be taken to help the case. It may be practicable to remove the responsible germs or to have the patient avoid food such as eggs if it is eggs which are responsible. It is possible to de-sensitize—to remove the hypersensitive condition in many cases. This is accomplished by a series of injections, which overcomes the condition and frees the individual from distress.

There is real hope for the relief of the asthmatic patient whose condition is due to his being sensitive to some protein.

Wreaths Placed on the War Memorial Last Sunday

Streetsville paid tribute to the memory of the men from this district who paid the supreme sacrifice in the great war, by a beautiful memorial service, on Sunday afternoon. The parade formed up at Church's Hall and marched to the memorial in the following order, standard bearer, guard of honour, members of the militia, members of Streetsville Post of the Canadian Legion, Reeve and Council, and Representatives from the various fraternal organizations of the village. On arrival at the memorial a sentry was posted on each corner, resting on arms reversed, the members of the legion lined up on the sides facing the memorial and across the front the guard of honour, formed by a detachment of The Peel and Dufferin regiment commanded by Lieut. Drennan, was drawn up. The ceremony opened with the singing of "O Valiant Hearts," W. H. Davis, secretary of the legion, then read the names of the fallen and Capt. Rev. Frank Vipond dedicated a wreath from the local branch of the legion and the other wreaths were then placed on. As the last wreath was deposited, the flag was lowered to half mast, the guard presented arms and the bugler sounded the Last Post, followed by two minutes silence which was broken by Reveille. Following the benediction the parade again formed up under Capt. D. V. Reed, as marshal, and proceeded to the United Church, where a joint service of all the churches was held, Rev. Geo. H. Purchase reading the lessons and Rev. W. T. McCree delivering a very inspiring address. Capt. Vipond expressed the thanks of the veterans for the kind invitation to hold their services in the United Church and also to the choir for the splendid way in which they co-operated to make the service such a success.

BRAMPTON

Killed by Auto

Harvey Horner, engaged with Angus Moddison, an East Chinguacousy farmer, was fatally injured early Saturday evening when struck by an automobile driven by Arnold Manes, aged 19, of West Chinguacousy. Horner was rushed to Peel Memorial Hospital by a passing motorist, where he died in a few minutes. The victim, aged 30, was returning to his home, and the accident happened two miles east of Brampton on No. 7 Highway.

According to police, Manes was driving in the same direction, and declares that he was not conscious that anything had occurred until the effect of striking Horner made him temporarily lose control of the wheel and the car went into the ditch. Horner's body was taken to the Brampton Funeral Service Parlors, where a jury was empanelled under Coroner Dr. J. A. Lawson. An inquest will be held next Friday. Manes was arrested later on a charge of manslaughter by Traffic Officer Hefferon, and was given his freedom on furnishing bail of $4,000, provided by his father.

GIVE THE HOME MERCHANTS YOUR BUSINESS

Christmas is less than two months away, but the out of town concerns who are in the habit of sending out peddlers to drum up business have not lost sight of the fact that there are many people who do their Christmas shopping long before the actual holiday shopping season. If there was ever a time that the people of this town and surrounding country should support their home merchants that time is the present. Business has not been any too good for many months, but the merchant carries on just the same. He must have the stock on his shelves and he must pay his taxes. The out of town peddler comes in, his expenses are light, he goes from house to house and persuades the housewife that he is giving her exceptional bargains for the money, takes her order and thus this money goes out of the town to benefit those who have no interest whatever in this town or community. The stamp of disapproval of this sort of thing can be placed upon it by refusal to do business with these out of town peddlers. They should not even be permitted to gain entrance in the homes. Householders should decline to listen to his arguments or look at his goods. In the great majority of cases better value for the money can be secured in the local store and there is the added advantage of being able to see and examine the goods one is purchasing. It is both patriotic and good business to buy at home instead of from the outsider.

THE

TULE MARSH MURDER

STORY OF A MISSING ACTRESS AND THE TAXING OF WITS TO EXPLAIN HER FATE.

BY NANCY BARR MAVITY.

SYNOPSIS

Don Ellsworth's wife, the actress Sheila O'Shay, disappears. Dr. Cavanaugh, criminal psychologist, learns that their married life has been very unhappy. Peter Piper, a Herald reporter, tries to see the doctor. Instead he meets Barbara Cavanaugh, the attractive daughter, and finds she was engaged to Don Ellsworth before his marriage.

An unidentified body found in the tule marsh outside the city, is identified by Dr. Cavanaugh as the body of Sheila. Barbara faints when she hears this, and Peter is convinced she knows something.

Mrs. Kane, Sheila's maid, is arrested and admits that her mistress forced Don Ellsworth to marry her by threatening breach of promise.

Peter and Dr. Cavanaugh search the boudoir of the murdered woman. The breach of promise papers have been taken, but they find a threatening letter signed "David Orme. Peter goes on the trail of Orme.

"Gee, if the luck only holds!" he murmured once, and for a moment his long face took on the look of one who has uttered a prayer.

"If this man Orme was mixed up in it, Barbara wasn't. Perhaps she was trying to shield Ellsworth—loyalty, the impractical, incorruptible virtues."

There were things about Ellsworth that certainly weren't clear; but Orme was another line altogether. There was no connection between the two men that Peter could see. It looked as if the mystery of Sheila O'Shay's death might be further complicated by the mystery of her life. If there were things that she herself had wanted to conceal, digging them out would not be so simple.

Peter's eyes darkened as his mind veered from Sheila's picturesque and polychromatic career to Barbara, fighting her way so gallantly, so foolishly, through shadows.

"Gosh, I'll bet that woman had a past as checkered as a Scotch plaid," he told the wheeling landscape with a half grin. Then his wide mouth set in a grim line. "If I'd had the chance to marry a girl like Barbara, I'd have bumped off the old girl myself before I'd have let her bulldoze me into marrying her. Ellsworth is the fool of the world—unless it's Peter Piper."

For Peter was coldly, dismally conscious that if he got Orme, and if Orme cleared Ellsworth, he himself might be clearing the way for Ellsworth to marry Barbara.

"Well, it can't be helped," he muttered through clenched teeth. Barbara, in the numbing chill of her orphan asylum childhood, had found the glory of life in the vision of another world, where honor gleamed above peril, where loyalty fluttered like a pointed banner at a spearhead, where men rode into death with the scarves of their ladies bound to the sleeves of their coats of mail.

There was nothing very knightly about the battered "Bossy" careening along an asphalt highway guided by a reporter in a torn sweater. And yet, in that world of Barbara's, if a knight set out to rescue a lady, he tied no strings to it. He did not barter for a reward, even in his mind. He simply did it. And whatever the nature of Barbara's folly, Peter knew that he must save her from it.

For one split second, Peter saw Barbara in that barred room smelling of whitewash in the city jail. Never! If it came to the worst, he would drive her himself to the Mexican border. He didn't know what he would do. But they should not get Barbara—never—no matter what she had done.

With a squeal of brakes and a dragging of wheels on the pavement, Peter brought "Bossy" to an abrupt halt. He had almost driven past the entrance to the automobile camp.

"Bossy" looked by no means out of place in the scattered company of derelict cars parked in a field worn to dusty smoothness by innumerable tires.

A hot dog stand on wheels filled one corner, and a strip of unpainted cabins at the rear offered shelter at twenty-five cents a night. But most of the campers were content with tent-like roofs stretched from the frames of their cars to stakes thrust into the ground. A number had only rolls of tattered bedding spread beside the running board. Thin lines of gray smoke wavered upward from rusted camp stoves squatting here and there about the enclosure.

Peter stretched his cramped legs and, tossing his pipe into a corner of the seat, lighted a cigarette.

"And the romance of gypsying has come to this!" he mused, his gaze drifting from a man stretched in stertorous slumber to a woman with draggled gray hair cutting thick slices of bread with a clasp knife, to a girl in grease-spattered khaki army breeches and high-heeled patent leather pumps, to a group of quarreling, dirt-smeared children.

Gypsying! Green dells and wandering tinkers, the singing freedom of the countryside. Perhaps it had always been like this, really, just as Barbara's knights had ridden out of castles unblessed by plumbing. These were the modern vagabonds, the unemployed, the drifters, the petty thieves, the incompetents, who bundled their families and scant possessions into ramshackle Fords and roosted, rent free, at public camp grounds until they were periodically weeded out, to rattle on again as far as their gas would take them—without hope, without plan, without beauty, without even the clean crash of real disaster.

Like most buoyant persons, Peter drowned periodically in depths of motiveless depression. He was sure that he would not find Orme. He was sure that Jimmy would fire him, that he would slide step by step down hill until he and the last fragments of the chugging "Bossy" would come to roost somewhere in a public camp-ground. He was sure that in some crazy, heroic, inexplicable moment Barbara had herself killed Sheila O'Shay and that he would have to stand by, helpless, and watch that shining head betrayed to the gray turreted walls—not unlike a mediæval castle, in their way—of the state's prison.

That thought roused him to action. "Not till I'm dead, anyway," he said aloud, and dragged his steps drearily, hopelessly across the field to a corner where a young man sat on the running board of a mud-spattered runabout munching a hamburger sandwich.

Peter held out his package of cigarettes and forced his stiff lips to a companionable grin.

"What's the luck up this way, buddy?" he asked, as a conversational opening.

"Rotten," the young man answered laconically. "There ain't no work for nobody no more, seems like I gotta get something before I can move on. And the next place it'll be just the same."

This pessimistic view of the economic situation chimed with Peter's discouraged mood; but after all, he had not come to discuss generalities of unemployment.

"I'd sort of arranged to meet a pal of mine somewhere around here," he remarked. "You been here long?"

"'Bout a month. I got a week's work picking strawberries. But hell, it's enough to break your back in two. I quit before my week was up, and been hanging around ever since, looking for something to turn up."

"Maybe he ain't showed up yet. A kind of sickly looking chap—"

The man on the running board shook his head.

"With part of the last two fingers gone off his hand."

"Oh, that feller! Sure, I seen him. He ought to be 'round somewheres now—he's been sticking pretty close to camp. Ain't that him, over in the middle with the woman and the bunch of kids?"

But Peter, having tossed the remainder of the cigarettes into the lap of his astonished companion, was already crossing the field in long-loping strides.

Peter slowed his rapid steps to an indifferent stroll, and paused behind the group to which the man had pointed. Several persons were gathered about a table formed of unpainted planks laid trestle-wise across supporting end-boards. A fat middle-aged woman in a torn bungalow apron was making a futile pass at two children who were squabbling noisily over a slice of bread and butter. The man, whose back was turned towards Peter, finished buttering a second slice and, reaching across the table, thrust it into the grimy hand of one of the contestants.

Peter's lips pursed in an inaudible whistle. He had met too many criminals to be surprised that a man might commit murder and yet take a sympathetic interest in the feeding of two strange and by no means attractive children.

There flashed across his mind the memory of a holdup man who had lost his job in a meat market because he could not bring himself to kill a chicken and who, six months later, had shot down in the street a newsboy whom he suspected of recognizing him as a fugitive from justice. The man who reached the bread and butter across the table had the ends of two fingers missing from his hand.

"I'd like a word with you, Orme," Peter said quietly.

The man's shoulders quivered, but he did not turn. Peter rather wished that he would lay down the bread knife. He pondered the advantage of getting the table between them against the disadvantage of giving Orme that much of a start in case he turned and ran. Then, with a lift of the eyebrow as his sole tribute to what he designated as "the bread knife angle," he stepped forward and touched the man on the arm.

"Your name is David Orme, I believe," he remarked conversationally. "Mine's Piper."

His voice was carefully unemphatic, but his eyes were warily fixed on the long, keen blade of the knife. There was butter on it, and crumbs. His surface attention was all for the man at the table, but with an irrelevant, darting side-thought he wondered whether anyone had even been stabbed with a knife that had crumbs and butter on it.

Slowly the man turned and faced Peter. The hand holding the knife trembled, but his voice was quite steady.

"Glad to know you," he said, "but you're mistaken. My name's Osgood—Daniel Osgood."

Present Wage Rate Maintained in Italy

Rome.—Premier Musolini recently assured Italy that there will be no further general reduction in wages.

Under his presidency, the Central Committee of Corporations rejected suggestions it had been studying for nation-wide cuts in industrial salaries. The committee declared decreases inadvisable despite the tendency of other nations to meet the depression in that manner.

Opening the committee session, the Premier said he thought wages already had been reduced to the lowest tolerable level. A year ago he ordered a horizontal cut of 10 to 12 per cent. in all wages, governmental and industrial, with greater reductions in high salaries.

November 15. Lesson VII—Paul In Jerusalem—Acts 21: 27-30. Golden Text—Thou shalt be his witness unto all men of what thou hast seen and heard.—Acts 22:15.

ANALYSIS

I. A COMPROMISE, Acts 21: 17-26.
II. THE RESULT, Acts 21: 27 to 22: 29.
III. BEFORE THE SANHEDRIN, Acts 22: 30 to 23: 11.
IV. ANOTHER PLOT, Acts 23: 12-30.

INTRODUCTION—After the riot, Paul began to set his face toward Jerusalem and Rome. This section of Acts (19: 21 on) forms a striking parallel to Luke's record of Jesus facing Jerusalem—and death. Everywhere is emphasized Paul's farewell to his followers (20: 1, 36-38; 21: 5), everywhere premonitions of impending disaster.

But Paul, brave soldier of Jesus Christ, determined to bring to the Jerusalem poor the collection he had been gathering throughout the churches, still held to his purpose. His pathetic words to the Cæsarean Christians are misunderstood if we take "break my heart" (12: 13) in the modern sense of that phrase. It really means "melt away my resolution." He felt that the passionate grief of his friends might do what all fear of consequences had failed to do—weaken his resolution to go on. Then he uttered that great word, "I am ready, not to be bound only, but also to die at Jerusalem for the name of the Lord Jesus." His friends, recognizing that this was no human obstinacy, but "the will of the Lord," ceased their protests. Packing up their luggage, "taking up our carriages," Paul's company set off toward Jerusalem and what might befall them there.

I. A COMPROMISE, Acts 21: 17-26.

Arriving in Jerusalem, Paul's apprehensions were relieved by the cordial welcome which he and his companions received from the church leaders. The latter were doubtless glad to get the present, although we have no record of their thanks for it. Next day, before James and the others, Paul told of all the works which God had wrought through him. It was a great story, but meanly received. Paul's hearers, above all else, were zealous for the old law. He was once more confronted with Judaistic Christianity.

II. THE RESULT, Acts 21: 27 to 22: 29.

The result was quite unexpected. Toward the end of the week, some Jews from the province of Asia recognized Paul in the Temple and immediately raised a hue and cry, "Men of Israel, help! Here is the fellow who has been teaching men to ignore the law and temple!" Luther celebrating the Mass in St. Peter's would not have caused a greater sensation.

The mob dragged Paul out. The priests quickly shut the Temple doors lest the sacred precincts should be defiled with his blood. Rescued by Roman soldiers and given permission to speak, he told in simple, straight-forward style the story of his life and his call to preach the gospel to the Gentiles. The racial prejudice of the crowd could not tolerate the thought of a mission to foreigners, and the riot broke out afresh. He was saved from a scourging only by asserting his Roman citizenship. Not a little perturbed at this discovery, the officer arranged for a trial before the Sanhedrin.

III. BEFORE THE SANHEDRIN, Acts 22: 30 to 23: 11.

The trial before the Sanhedrin ended in another riot. He had scarcely begun his defence when Ananias, the high priest, angered at something Paul had said, had the prisoner smitten on the mouth. This was illegal, and Paul, casting diplomacy to the winds, rebuked him unsparingly. This was contempt of court. Paul apologized.

Seeing that no justice could be expected there, he resorted to a clever ruse to divide his enemies. Some were Sadducees, denying a resurrection; some were Pharisees, believing in it. Paul suddenly threw a bomb among them by saying, "I am a Pharisee. It is on account of the hope and resurrection of the dead that I am called to account." This threw the crowd into a tumult. Some of the Pharisees sided with Paul, 23: 9. Once more the Roman power had to rescue and safeguard the Christian missionary.

That night, in prison, what must have been Paul's thoughts! Was his day's work for his Master done?—"And the Lord stood by him and said, 'Be of good cheer, Paul, You have testified for me in Jerusalem. You must testify for me also in Rome,'" 23: 11. Paul was immortal until his work was done.

IV. ANOTHER PLOT, Acts 23: 12-30.

Next day, a plot was discovered and reported to Paul's nephew. Under a strong guard, Paul and his companions were sent off to Felix at Cæsarea. The story is told so vividly—even to noting that Lysias took the young man by the hand (23: 19)—that it must be the work of one who was there, most probably Luke himself. So, by means which must have been far from Paul's intending, God was answering his prayer (19: 21) by hurrying him on his way to Rome.

Beyond the Sun

Behold this vast incalculable ray,
Brighter than stars, more luminous than suns,
More distant than all pace beyond all space
In its beginning, if indeed there be
Birth or beginning to that principle
Man's mind hath never conjured, nay, nor will Perchance, with all his weighty conjuring
This side the glimmering secretive Veil.

Behold this ray, ineffable, informed
Beyond the sun, beyond these measurements
Of skies and firmaments and fashioned voids;
This uncreated, all-creating volt,
This unthought word, this might without a name,
That shook Old Chaos into rhyme and rhythm,
No single atom looted or laid waste
Unto this hour.
What hath God wrought, indeed—
Himself, and light and law and life and love,
These from the mist that moves beyond the sun.
—Barbara Young, in The N.Y. Times.

Seas That Are Salter

Would you be able to answer correctly if someone asked you which contained more salt—a quantity of water from the Atlantic Ocean or an equal quantity from the North Sea?

You would probably venture the suggestion that they were both the same, and you would be wrong. For the Atlantic is more salt than the North Sea. This is one of the interesting points that emerge from the report of the Government chemist which has been issued recently. The work of his department is very varied—it may be asked to determine whether water from a certain source of supply is suitable for use in pithead baths, or if a suspected article of food contains poison.

Another question put to the department was why certain films of national importance were deteriorating, and how they could be restored and preserved. This problem was tackled in a very thoroughgoing way, with results that may make historic films a much more permanent record.—"Answers."

His Turn

Two taxi-drivers stopped for a chat. "How's business, Bill?" asked one, who was seated in a smart-looking taxi.

"Terrible," replied Bill, sadly. "All this week I've hardly picked up a shilling.

The other looked his taxi over. "Well, Bill," he said, "I don't see as how you can expect to get fares with an old crock like that. Why don't you do what I do, and go round to ——. He'll fit you up with a nice turn-out like this, and then you'll get all the fares you want."

Bill took the advice, and started next day in a brand-new taxi. After a week, however, the proprietor of the vehicle sent for him. "Look here, Bill," he said, "you've had this taxi a week and done nothing with it. What's the matter—why don't you get fares? Don't people signal to you?"

"Oh, yes, they do," replied Bill; "I see 'em waving all right. But they wouldn't wave when I had an old cab, and I'm not taking any notice of 'em waving just because I've got a new one!"

"If a man smashed a clock, could he be accused of killing time?" "Not if he could prove that the clock struck first."

The Hand of Science In Crime Detection

Condensed from Progressive Era

An elderly man was discovered by a policeman. His face was downward as he lay crumpled in blood-stained drifts. In his inner pocket were papers that identified him. Word was flashed to headquarters, and Robert Paessler, chemist and scientific detective, took up the trail of the unknown slayer.

He learned that the murdered man had been alone the night of his death. His daughter and her husband had spent the time with relatives in a neighboring town. During the evening the son-in-law had left the house, and had not returned until two in the morning. He declared he had attended a movie, and produced witnesses to substantiate the story. His alibi was perfect.

Paessler searched the home of the murdered man. By means of a special 1000-watt, nitrogen filled lamp, with twenty times the power of an ordinary lamp, he found a stain, faint and overlooked.

After studying the brownish, rounded imprint on the linolenm of the kitchen floor, he identified it as the reproduction of a rubber heel, which tallied in every respect with that of a shoe worn by the son-in-law. About the nails was some dark matter that proved upon chemical test to be human blood. A conviction followed.

In France not long ago, some boys found a body, stabbed in a score of places, and showing an odd series of wavy, parallel lines in the clotted blood near a wound on the shoulder.

At first the detective was deeply mystified, but finally a possible explanation occurred to him. The murderer had evidently leaped on his victim as he fell, and kneeling on his shoulder had plunged his stiletto again and again into the body. The parallel lines had the imprint of the weave of the killer's trousers in his victim's blood. Among the suspects rounded up by the police was one whose trousers, though carefully washed, had a peculiar weave which matched the lines on the victim's shoulder.

In these cases, the clues were clearly legible. Often, there are only single drops or tiny stains, dried particles in dirt, or faint blood traces in garments that have been washed over and over again.

Here is where the amazing discoveries and apparatus of the laboratory come into play. Astonishing feats have been accomplished in the detection of crime by both American and European investigators. It was at the Scientific Crime Detection Laboratory at Chicago that I learned something of their methods and of the instruments they use. There they search for stains with special electric-lighted magnifying glasses; utilize testing reagents of a dozen kinds; carry on researches in the mysterious realm of colloid chemistry. They work with rare, colorless serums, reacting strangely to the microscopic red discs that contain the hemoglobin, or red coloring matter, of the blood.

With super-power microscopes, they study infinitesimal crystals within red corpuscles only three-thousandths of an inch in diameter. With blood-testing spectroscopes, they note the gases a life-stream carries. In a case where a murder had been made to appear like a suicide, the veins of the woman proved that she had been dead before the gas fumes with which the room was filled, had had time to act.

Most people think of bloodstains as always red or brown. Heat, moisture, cold, and chemicals affect them so that they are found in every imaginable hue. Light olive green, light rose, practically colorless, or assuming the color of the material upon which it rests, in any case, it furnishes a foundation upon which the scientific detective may establish the identity of the murderer.

Stains on polished furniture, often a reddish brown, are particularly difficult to see, and often only a photograph will reveal the differences that are not visible to the human eye. In one case a photograph made by magnesium light revealed some spots on the mud-crusted rung of a ladder, spots which were otherwise invisible.

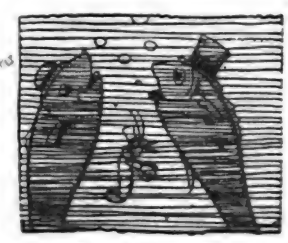
Various means have been adopted by criminals to outwit these blood-trailing detectives. One man stripped himself naked before committing the crime, so that his clothes would bear no tell-tale stains. Another wore a large overcoat over his other garments, and then destroyed the coat. The minute traces of blood under his fingernails betrayed him.

A murderer's first impulse is to wipe his hands clear of blood. This he usually does on his handkerchief, which he later destroys. He invariably forgets the lining of the pocket in which the bloody handkerchief was carried. Other overlooked places are the materials scraped from around and under the fingernails, in the hems and seams of garments, and around the nails and seams of shoes.

The first question the detective must answer is: Is it blood? Suspects will often declare that suspicious stains were made by paint, coffee, tobacco juice, medicine, or some other dark liquid. In such cases the first resort is to the microscope, which may reveal the structure of the red corpuscles. In more difficult cases chemical reagents, such as benzidine and sodium perborate, are added to solutions containing blood. So accurately do these chemicals react to the presence of blood that a particle no larger than a grain of sand may be identified, and blood taken from an Egyptian mummy showed the reaction almost immediately.

The second question to be answered is: Is it human blood? In deciding this problem, rabbits come to the scientist's aid.

First, freshly-drawn human blood is allowed to coagulate. The watery, straw-colored serum is then drawn away from the clots. Small quantities of this serum are injected, at intervals of one or two days, into the veins of rabbits. The rabbit is killed, and its blood allowed to coagulate. The serum is then drained away and preserved. It is called "anti-human" serum, and is carried in stock by biological supply houses. Suspicious stains are soaked in a very weak solution of common salt. A few drops of serum are added. If the stains are human blood, white precipitate forms a ring within the tube. But if any other type of blood caused the stains, the tiny halo fails to form.



Anti-chicken, anti-cat, anti-deer, and other serums are prepared in a similar way. To prepare anti-rabbit serum, however, rabbit blood is injected into chickens, since no animal's blood will cause irritation in its own body.

Another method of distinguishing between types of blood has been evolved through a series of researches at the Carnegie Institution of Washington, D.C. Dr. Edward T Reichert and his associate, Dr. [illegible]s P. Brown, have found that they can tell the blood of different creatures apart and distinguish human blood from that of other animals by the shape and angle of crystals in the red corpuscles.

Nor can a murderer safely claim that suspicious stains were made by his own blood. Scientists have known for twenty-five years that all human blood falls into one of four groups. In one instance, where a suspect claimed a nosebleed had caused the stains, the blood was found to belong to Group Four, while his own blood fell into Group Two.

Not only does the blood itself tell a dramatic story, but a number of crimes have been solved through materials found in dry stains. A tiny thread matched a murdered man's pyjamas, a torn finger-nail led to a murder, a minute bone proved that a murder had been committed, and a single drop of blood set the sleuths on the track of a slayer.

The expert to-day can tell by the shape of the blood-drop whether or not the victim was moving; he can read whole stories into a single splotch. Clever indeed is the criminal who overlooks no possible precaution against these man-hunting, blood-trailing sleuths.—Magazine Digest.

The Moon

Thy beauty haunts me heart and soul,
Oh thou fair Moon, so close and bringh;
Thy beauty makes me like a child,
That cries aloud to own thy light:
The little child that lifts each arm,
To press thee to her bosom warm.

Though there are birds that sing this night
With thy white beams across their throats,
Let my deep silence speak for me
More than for them their sweetest notes:
Who worships thee till music fails,
Is greater than thy nightingales.

Old Frescoes Discovered

Prague.—In a 700-year-old church in the village of Drautz, Slovakia, three frescoes have been found under an old wall which are believed to be the oldest existing pictures of the life of St. Anthony.

The pictures, which are in Byzantine style, represent St. Anthony's meeting with Paul, his martyrdom and death. The pictures are about 12 feet wide and 4½ feet high. The frescoes have been restored by a Hungarian artist.

The village of Drautz was the seat of the Order of St. Anthony in the thirteenth century.

From a Train

Sunquick and gloom,
The engine's windy wake,
Hillsweep unfreckled as a frosty peach,
Rock-torrid ploughland river's lace,
Rich grass pollened with buttercup,
Elm-terraces
Broidering purl on purl,
A station jagged and flown
Like a leaf torn from a book,
The stretch of plain, on, on —So many things pass by—
All a landscape spinning on a wheel
Below a tranquil sky.
—G. W. Stonier, in the New Statesman and Nation.

An international convention of all the aviators who have flown the Atlantic is being projected by the International Federation of Aeronautics. It is hoped that this meeting can be held in Rome next Spring.

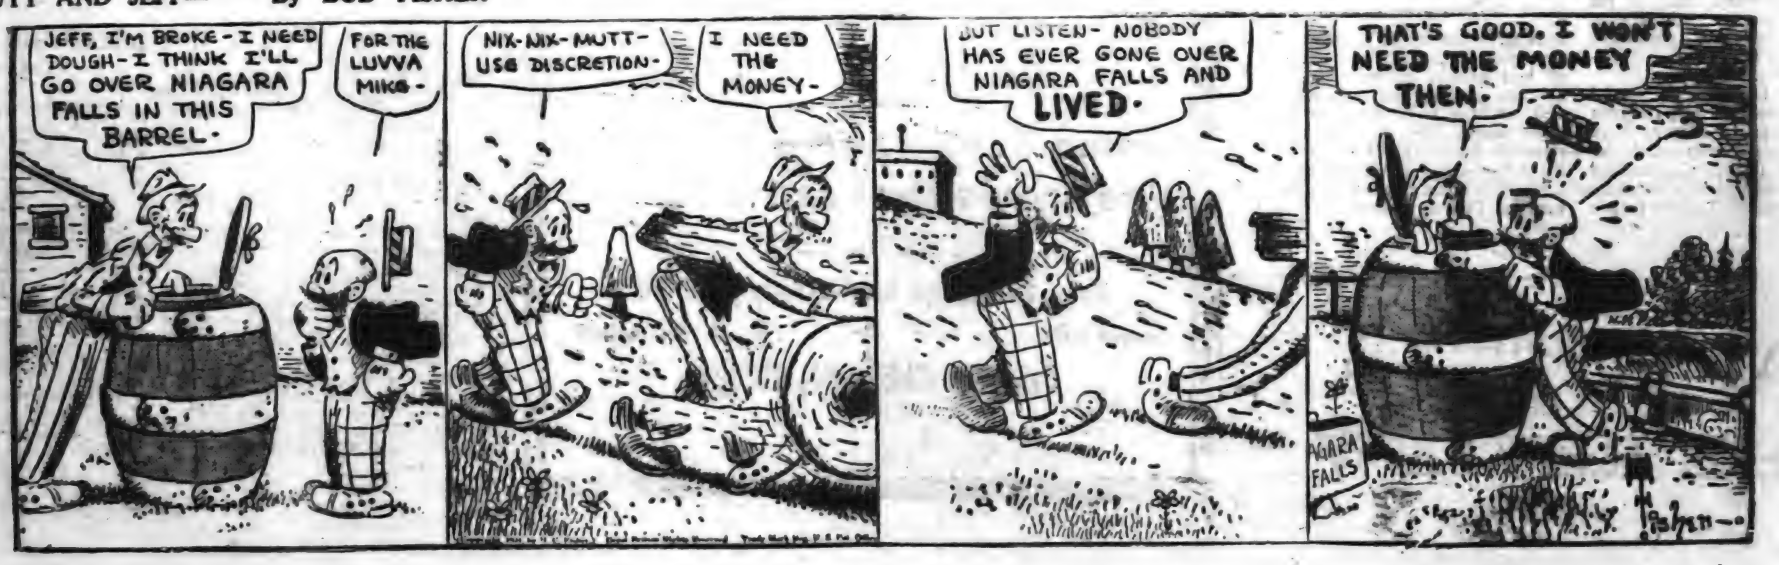
Harvest

Now, in the waning of the harvest moon,
The year draws richly on toward afternoon,
With golden airs that swoon,
And in deep orchards the late cuckoo's croon.



The grass waves like a surf upon the hill
There is a plaintive murmur from the rill;
The katydid is shrill,
While Maestro Cricket, strums, and then is still.

For TEETHING troubles

FUSSY, fretful . . . . of course babies are uncomfortable at teething time! And mothers are worried because of the little upsets which come so suddenly then. But there's one sure way to comfort a restless, teething child. Castoria — made especially for babies and children! It's perfectly harmless, as the formula on the wrapper tells you. It's mild in taste and action. Yet it rights little upsets with a never-failing effectiveness.

That's the beauty of this special children's remedy! It may be given to tiny infants—as often as there is need. In cases of colic and similar disturbances, it is invaluable. But it has every-day uses all mothers should understand. A coated tongue calls for a few drops to ward off constipation; so does any suggestion of bad breath. Whenever older children don't eat well, don't rest well, or have any little upset, a more liberal dose of this pure vegetable preparation is usually all that's needed. Genuine Castoria has Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the wrapper. Doctors prescribe it.

S.H.S. NOTES

At a special meeting of the executive of the Literary Society held on Tuesday, Nov. 10, Arnott Charlton, Hilda Haddon, Roy Hollingshead and Iola Hope were appointed as delegates to the editors' convention. This convention is held annually in Toronto to discuss problems met with in publishing a school paper and to compare publications.

Commencement

We are planning to hold our annual commencement exercises on December 18. Those interested are advised to hold this date open.

The following pupils were appointed to act as a commencement committee: Iola Hope, John McGill, Hilda Haddon, Margaret Falconer, Margaret McClintock, Lanra Plum, Erna Bailey, Mildred Quennell, Roy Hollingshead and Arnott Charlton.

Rugby

The Senior's first home game on Oct. 30 resulted in a defeat. Long Branch, the opposing team, had the advantage of greater weight. Streetsville scored the first point on a long kick, but Long Branch succeeded in getting two touchdowns and two converts. The score at half time was Streetsville 1, Long Branch 12.

In the third period the local boys succeeded in scoring two touchdowns and a convert, thus tieing the score. The score remainded even until the closing moments of the last period, when Long Branch scored a touchdown to win the game. Final score, Streetsville 12, Long Branch 17. Referee, Dr. Montemurro.

On November 6, Etobicoke Junior team accepted our invitation to play a rugby game. The result was that the rugby fans witnessed one of the best games of the season. Streetsville began the scoring by making a touchdown in the first period. However, they did not hold the lead long. A Streetsville man fumbled the ball on his own five-yard line and an Etobicoke man ran it through for a touchdown. A little later Etobicoke scored with another touchdown. Up until the last few seconds of play Etobicoke led 11-7.

With the ball on Etobicoke's ten-yard line and 30 seconds to go Streetsville had to work fast. The ball was snapped to Bailey, after a little delay it was handed to Pope who made a beautiful end run, dodged all the opposing team and saved the game for Streetsville by making a touchdown. Final score, Streetsville 12, Etobicoke 11.

In this game "Mel" Steggall was unfortunate enough to have his knee twisted, but he is back to school again and will probably play in our next game.

Aubrey Pope is coaching a team of the smaller boys in rugby. This junior team has played two games against the public school, winning the first 10-0, and the second 11-5. Many more games are expected in this junior series.

ERINDALE

Saturday night the Erindale Women's Institute held their annual Hallowe'en party for the children of the community. It was quite a success, their being forty-three children in costume who took part in the parade.

Much credit is due the parents for the success of this annual party, and may the Women's Institute take this opportunity of thanking them.

The winners of the prizes in the twelve to fifteen class were:

Girls—1st, Agnas Lamphier; 2nd, Ileene Robinson.

Boys—1st, Frank Wilson; 2nd, Allan Cutts.

Eight to twelve class:

Girls—1st, Doris Hyde; 2nd, Betty Adamson.

Boys—1st, Charles Lamphier; 2nd, Tom Good.

Every child in the hall up to eight years old received a small gift.

May the ladies of the Institute extend their thanks and appreciation to Mr. Dyer and Miss Maxwell, for their time and trouble in getting up such a splendid program; and to Miss Dorothy Adamson who kindly assisted; also to the judges, Mrs. H. H. Adamson, Mrs. Charles Peck, Mrs. Robert Armstrong and Mrs. Walter Royal.

TRINITY NOTES

Services on Sunday next will be as follows: 10 a.m.—Sunday School; 11 a.m.—Morning Prayer; 3 p.m.—Bible Society Service and address; 7 p.m.—Evening Prayer.

At 3 o'clock Rev. F. B. Allun B.D., will address the annual meeting of the Bible Society. The ministers and choirs in town are asked to be present. The work of the Bible Society—the providing of copies of God's Word for the use of the missionary work of all denominations is surely a subject of vital importance to all who are interested in the extension of Christianity. All are cordially asked to be present.

The Bible Society—throughout the world has circulated the Scriptures in 644 languages. (14 new translations added last year). Distributed last year 11,900,000 copies. (almost a million a month.) Assists the Missionaries of every Christian Communion. (Scriptures supplied at cost or less, and often free). Sends the Scriptures to practically every land. (Over 900 colporteurs distribute its translations).

The Bible Society—in Canada has supplied 110 translations. (46 languages required for Ontario.) Distributed last year 430,000 copies. (Below cost and sometimes free to the needy.) Employs 40 colporteurs. (Among both English and foreign speaking peoples). Meets every immigrant ship. (First gift a newcomer receives is a portion of Scripture.)

The Bible Society faces unprecedented demands, and immense opportunities. Will you help to circulate this Book?

For Such a Time as This

It is singularly interesting to recall the conditions under which, in 1804, the British and Foreign Bible Society had its beginning. A less propitious time could hardly be imagined. On the dayof its foundation, a contemporary account tells us, the weather was "fair without frost," but lowering clouds of national, political and economic unrest darkened the sky. "The insurrection in Ireland" was the subject of a heated and bitter debate in the House of Commons. Napoleon's army for the invasion of England lay encamped at Boulogne, almost within sight of the Kentish coast. Three per cent. Consols stood at 56¼. The country seemed on the brink of ruin, and its trade half paralyzed. Yet in the climax of such perils and amid wars and rumors of wars the Bible Society was launched, and from its inception has been evidently used and blessed of God.

To-day we are again confronted with conditions which might well be urged as a reason for concentrating every resource on the pressing problems of the times. And yet the Bible Society believes to-day, as did its founders in 1804, that it is for such a time as this that such an instrument is forged and formed by God. Great leaders of our times have declared again and again that it is not lack of material resources from which the world to-day suffers. Our material resources were never greater. What we need is to strengthen and clarify our conception of the great moral and spiritual values of life. The Bible Society exists to put into man's hands that Book which in the darkest days will strengthen and stay men's hearts on the verities of life and the Eternal God. The Bible Society ministers through good times and bad, but it has a special message for such a time as this.

Mother Forced to Leave Fatherless Children

Annette looks at you gratefully as you pause at her bedside to admire her needle work. So expert has she become that she feels sure a table runner she has made will win a prize at the fair back home. "Back home"—words that bring tears as she tells you how she longs to be there to look after her family once more.

Annette's husband died of tuberculosis, leaving her to care for the children as best she could.

It was not long, however, before she too was claimed by this disease, when she was sent to the Toronto Hospital for Consumptives with no great prospect of recovery. Here, the careful regimen, the quiet, the fresh air and patient nursing are greatly helping Annette to climb the steep road back to health.

Such work can only be continued with the aid of many generous friends. Will you please send a gift to Mr. A. E. Ames, 223 College St., Toronto.

A lesson from a squirrel

Look Them Over First

The merchant and manufrcturer who advertises actually are placing their merchandise before you for your inspection. They invite your most critical attention and an uncompromising comparison And their advertisements, so to speak, say to their products "We have introduced you to the public—now stand on your own merits."

If the manufacturer and merchant did not have confidence in their wares they would hesitate to call attention to them. For advertising rigidly tests the maker, the seller and the merchandise Business so tested, and found not wanting, is prosperous.

It is through advertising that the excellent things of the world are brought to the attention of those who are seeking for the best and most economical way to spend their money

Giant B.C. Skeleton Believed Relic of Vanished Race

Bones of Two Men, Three Boys and Woman, Unearthed by Road Gang, Cause Speculation Among Ethnologists and Archeologists of Dominion

Montreal.—Ethnologists and archaeologists in British Columbia are intensely interested in the discovery by a road gang of a group of human skeletons near Vernon. It is believed the bones may prove to be those of a race that preceded the natives found in the region by the first white men to enter the interior valleys 120 years ago.

Among modern Indians there are legends of a race of giants who inhabited the country before the coming of the peoples of Mongolian extraction. The skeleton that is attracting special attention measures six and a half feet. The skull formation is much larger than those discovered in other excavations in the district and the shape is different. The find was made by a gang at work on the Vernon-Kamloops highway, about four miles from Vernon. Six skeletons were uncovered. One was that of a woman, three of boys in their teens and a fifth of a young man. Near by was found the frame of the man.

In close association with the human remains were found stone implements, differing little from the type of implements used by natives on the arrival of the white man. This, however, does not give any indication as to the period at which the aborigines lived, as there is virtually no difference known to exist that definitely marks phases of the stone age west of the Rockies.

Dominion Revenue Exceeds Expense

Flight Lieut. Stainforth attained an average speed of 408.3 miles an hour.

Revival of Shipbuilding Foreseen In Glasgow

Glasgow.—Although the Clyde shipyards have not received much fresh work recently, there is considerable activity at present in the drawing offices of the various shipbuilding firms.

There have also been numerous inquiries for new tonnage, which is held to justify the slowly returning optimism on Clydeside.

Attempt To Assassinate Former Boy Emperor

London. — An attempted assassination of Henry Pu-Yi, former "Boy Emperor" of China, failed when the ex-ruler discovered bombs at his hotel in Tientsin, according to a Mukden despatch to the Daily Express Sunday. Pu-Yi was reported as discovering the bombs concealed in two baskets of fruit which had been sent to the rooms he has occupied during his exile in Tientsin.

Britain Plans Huge Flying Boat

Will be Nearly Twice Size of DO-X — Other Aerial Giants Contemplated

London, Eng.—Designed to carry 120 passengers on a transatlantic service to Canada, the world's largest flying boat is being planned by the British Air Ministry. The new liner will be nearly twice the size of the German DO-X, and with a full load of fuel will weigh about 60 tons. It will have a flying range of 2,500 miles and a speed of 120 miles an hour.

The Air Ministry, it is understood, is planning other giant machines to bring the whole Empire into direct aerial communication with London. A 35-ton supermarine Napier flying boat, similar in size and power to the DO-X, is already on the stocks.

Accommodation for passengers on the Great Britain-to-Canada ship will be provided on a generous scale. The chief pilot, navigator and other officers will be housed on a super-structure above the main cabin, similar to the bridge of a ship. The number of engines has not been decided, but a craft of this size would need at least 60,000 horsepower. The liner will be illuminated throughout by electricity and electric kitchens will be installed behind the hull.

Britain to Erect Broadcasting Stn.

Whole Empire May Listen to Short Wave Station at Daventry

London, Eng.—Without further delay, the British Broadcasting Corporation will begin plans for the erection of a short-wave broadcasting station at Daventry, to which the whole Empire may listen, it was announced over the week-end.

Plans for the station were discussed at the last Imperial Conference, but difficulties of financing the project on a permanent basis postponed the development. Now, however, need from an Imperial point of view, coupled with a strong desire expressed throughout the Empire, especially from the crown colonies, determined the corporation to proceed without further delay.

The object will be to secure as many listeners as possible throughout the Empire at a convenient time. Details of the time arrangements will depend on experiments. Several wave lengths will be used in order to provide the best reception under varying conditions.

Britain Favors Canadian Salmon

Dominion Doubles Exports of Canned Product, Displacing U.S.

Ottawa.—Canada is replacing the United States in the British market for canned salmon and for the first nine months of the present calendar year the Dominion more than doubled its exports over the corresponding period a year ago.

Up to the end of September, according to the current issue of the Commercial Intelligence Journal, the United Kingdom imported from Canada 102,000 cwt. of canned salmon, while importations from the United States totalled 96,000 cwt. During the same period last year Canada's share was only 47,000 cwt. while that of the United States was considerably over 100,000 cwt.

Britain imported 262,000 cwt. of canned salmon during 1930.

Canadian Apples Win First Prizes

Dominion Honey Also Makes Excellent Showing at Manchester, Eng.

Ottawa.—Canadian apples and honey made an excellent record at the Imperial Fruit Show, which opened recently in Manchester, England.

Word has been received by Hon. Robert Weir, Minister of Agriculture, that in the class open to the British Empire, British Columbia won two second awards, one for dessert and the other for culinary apples. The entries included fruit grown in England as well as in Australia, New Zealand and South Africa. The southern Dominion's fruit had been scored in London early in June and these scorings were used in the present competition. The British Columbia winner was Mr. Jas. Lowe, of Oyama.

In the section open to Canadian-grown fruit, British Columbia and Nova Scotia divided the honors. British Columbia won first on McIntosh, Jonothan, Delicious and Newton, while Nova Scotia won on Cox's Orange, King, Golden Russet, Spy, Greening, Gravenstein and Baldwin.

The Agent General's cup for the exhibition gaining the highest number of points was won by Mr. Jas. Lowe, of Oyama.

For the first time in the history of the Imperial Fruit Show honey was included. In the three sections open to the Dominions and Colonies, Ontario exhibitors won two first awards, while exhibits from British Columbia won one first, two seconds and three third prizes

Progress depends on breaking away from what has been done before.

Children Killed Walking on Trestle

Three Run Down as Leap to Safety Impossible — Were Carrying Toys

Cincinnati.—Three children, trapped on a trestle of the Big Four Railroad, were run down and killed by a train here late Sunday. The victims were: Hazel Prater, 7; her sister, Gladys, 10, and Maxine Vance, 8.

The children were crossing the trestle hand in hand, had reached a point about half way when a passenger train rounded a curve and bore down on them. When the engineer sounded his whistle Gladys looked around and drew her companions to the edge of the track. A moment later the train struck them. The train was stopped after it had travelled across the elevation.

Dolls and other toys which the children carried were found scattered along the tracks.

Gladys, in a desperate effort to save her two companions, led them to the guard rail of the trestle and prepared to leap with them to another track on the bridge. The space between the two tracks is four feet and she hesitated. The moment's hesitation cost them their lives.

One of the victims was hurled off the trestle and the other two were caught beneath the train. Of the dozen toys the children carried only the doll was damaged.

Food For Zoo Animals

San Francisco.—The Supervisors' Finance Committee received a shock recently when they were asked to approve claims for bottle flies, horse meat and dog milk.

However, it seems the horse meat was for lions, dog milk for lion cubs, and bottle flies for lizards, all in the city zoo.

Five hundred animals are fed there at a monthly cost of $2,000 or $4 each, considered an economical figure.

WITH THE LONE SCOUTS

Have you ever stopped to think how numerous are the privileges enjoyed by the Lone Scouts of Canada?

In the first place a Lone Scout enjoys membership in the greatest Boy-Man organization in the world, and is a Brother Scout to over 2,000,000 Scouts and Scouters in the world.

He has the service of the Dominion Council and the Provincial Council of the Boy Scouts Association to call upon.

He has the right to participate in Scout Camps and Jamborees.

As soon as a Lone Scout has passed his Tenderfoot Test he receives an attractive membership certificate, and may then wear the Lone Scout Uniform and Insignia.

He also receives, monthly, free of charge, the Lone Scout paper "On Lone Scout Trails," giving news of his brother Lonies in different parts of the Province, and Scouting news in general.

He has the privilege of earning and achieving all ranks, titles, badges and honors as offered to any other Scout on the same basis of a Scout's interesting programme of fun, adventure and achievement.

He has the opportunity to participate in all local, Provincial or Dominion events, activities, and programmes on the same basis as any other Scout.

He has the chance, under Scout authority, to select the best man in his community to be his counsellor and friend. This adult friend is responsible for the advancement tests for the Lone Scout.

And all these privileges he receives for an annual subscription of only 50c.

No boy in Ontario can afford to be without the Scout programme of pleasure, training and opportunity. Parents will want to do their part to make possible their son's participation in this great boys' game of Scouting and training, which should lead to a life of happiness and achievement.

The Handbook for Canada, issued by the Boy Scouts Association, which is in the possession of Lone Scouts, together with the help from Leaders, Provincial or Dominion Councils and Counsellors and Friends, some of the more important methods by which a Lone Scout can achieve the highest possible standards in Scouting and in citizenship.

It is a game any boy will love to play, and is a "team" game, emphasizing the "we" in preference to the "I," and fostering the spirit of service and helpfulness to others.

If, therefore, you are a boy between the ages of 12 and 18, and live near a Troop Headquarters, go and see the Scoutmaster, and link up with the Scouts. But if you live in the country where there is no Scout Troop, become a Lone Scout, and write for information to "The Lone Scout Department," Boy Scouts' Association, 330 Bay Street, Toronto 2.

"Lone E" hopes that his brother Lonies are not forgetting to write to him on the subject of the proposed Ontario Lone Scout Winter Camp, and also hopes that all Ontario Lonies are giving their very serious attention to the great Xmas "Good Turn," the Lone Scout Toy Shop.

Lone Scout Question Box

What are the wooden beads on a boot-lace that I see around the necks of some Scoutmasters?—(R. T., Lindsay).

These are the insignia of the "Gilwell Training Course and signify that the wearer has taken the course of training for Scoutmastership, both practical and theoretical, and has graduated successfully. The practical part of this course is held annually in Ontario at a Leaders Camp at Ebor Park, near Brantford, and is limited to a class of 32 leaders, each year.

Pays More Than 100,000 For Copy of Famous Bible

London.—News that a private collector had purchased at auction for considerably more than $100,000 a paper copy of the prized Gutenberg Bible, of which only 41 copies are known to exist, astounded London's book world recently.

The volume was understood to have reposed in the Continental Library for more than a century and to be in splendid condition. A paper edition of the Bible sold in New York a short time ago for $10,000 and a real vellum copy for $50,000.

The Gutenberg Bible was the first book produced from movable type and required five years to complete. It is praised for the beauty and strength of its paper, the luster of its ink, the boldness of its Gothic type and its superb binding.

Wages and Trade

London Daily Herald (Lab.): An attack on wages is an attack on purchasing power. And an attack on purchasing power is an attack on trade. Nothing could be worse for trade, for industry, for the country as a whole, than a reduction of the purchasing power of the masses. The bankers have by their passionate clinging to the gold standard done incalculable harm to our external trade. If they go on to attack wages they will do equal harm to our internal trade.

When TEETHING makes HIM FUSSY

One of the most important things you can do to make a teething baby comfortable is to see that little bowels do their work of carrying off waste matter promptly and regularly. For this nothing is better than Castoria, a pure vegetable preparation specially made for babies and children. Castoria acts so gently you can give it to young infants to relieve colic. Yet it is always effective, for older children, too. Remember, Castoria contains no harsh drugs, no narcotics—is absolutely harmless. When your baby is fretful with teething or a food upset, give a cleansing dose of Castoria. Be sure you get genuine Castoria with the name: nor harsh, hormless

Refrigeration on An Ocean Liner

To many passengers making an ocean voyage it has been a constant source of wonder how the fresh flowers which appear on the dining room tables every day are kept: how the milk can be kept perfectly fresh for a period often extending over a week: how it is possible to produce ice at any hour of the day or night.

This is managed through a system of electrical refrigeration that to the layman is a maze of machinery seemingly extending all over the ship. In every hold thermometers are to be found, as well as in various cold storage rooms that abound in the ship.

The refrigeration plant consists of two separate and distinct units that work in shifts, and control of the temperature is managed through a massive control board, by which it is possible to maintain different temperatures, not only in the cold storage rooms but also in some of the holds.

It has been found necessary in the carrying of cargoes to keep the refrigerator at certain temperatures and it will often be found that the temperature of these vary as much as twenty degrees. In this way it is possible to carry a wide variety of perishable cargoes with complete assurance of their arriving at their destination in first class condition.

As an added protection to shippers of perishable goods the Cunard-Anchor-Donaldson Line have two inspectors from the Department of Agriculture place sealed thermographs in the holds of the various liners carrying these goods, prior to the liner leaving. Upon the arrival of the ship at its destination another representative of the department meets the ship and removes the graphs, forwarding them to Ottawa, where they are filed.

Trade By Barter Revived in States

Tulsa, Okla. — Old-fashioned flour and grist mills are grinding again in Oklahama and Arkansas, and farmers, hard-pressed for cash, are finding that grandfather's way of doing business by barter and trade was not such a bad one after all.

Running day and night, the grist mills are booming because they offer farmers and millers the old-time basis of trading wheat for flour. Farmers are driving as far as fifty miles to have their grain ground into flour, and at Altus and Cordell, Okla., grist-mill owners are milling wheat hauled up from the Texas line.

In many places the exchange rate is three bushels, 180 pounds, of wheat for 100 pounds of flour. Sometimes the mills retain the bran and shorts as payment for milling. If the farmer needs the shorts for feed for his live stock he is privileged to pay the milling cost in cash or wheat.

Bartering has extended to other crops: corn, oats, garden crops, fruits—everything that is needed to sustain life. A man has a surfeit of one, his neighbor has an over-supply of the other; ergo, they swap.

In Arkansas organizations are forming to assist the hill farmers in making their trades. Three elements are present that promise success for the undertaking: raw products are abundant; there are many grist mills scattered through the region waiting only for the grain in order to begin work; and the home market is large. In other words, there is a product and a market. All that is needed is co-operation, and the farmers, after struggling through last Winter's depression, are glad enough to "git together."

Perhaps the hill and prairie folk will not have much money in their pockets this Winter, but they are going to have plenty of side pork and canned beans in their cellars.

Poland Solves Question of Surplus Farm Products

Warsaw.—Poland, with 67 per cent. of its population on the land, has suffered far less from the world economic crisis than Germany and other heavily industrialized countries.

Prices of farm products have declined to such a degree that the income of farmers has been greatly reduced, but instead of selling their foodstuffs at low prices the farmers send them to unemployed relatives or friends in industrial centres, or invite their jobless relatives and friends to return to the land.

The government figures for unemployment vary from 250,000 to 300,000, or about 1 per cent. of the population. But the actual number of unemployed is probably greater, as thousands have gone back to the farms yet never registered for the dole.

The Poles blame business shrinkage upon the unsatisfactory trade relations with Germany rather than upon the general economic status.

Friend—"Why do you always ask what your patients eat? Does it help you in your diagnosis?"

Doctor—"No, but it helps my charges for professional services."

Pretty Movie Star Arrives

Jeannette Macdonald, whose role in the "talkies" was that of a queen in "The Love Parade" with Maurice Chevalier, reached Canada on the Canadian Pacific liner Empress of Britain recently. Hurrying back to start production on a new picture with the popular Frenchman Miss Macdonald chose the sheltered St. Lawrence waterway because it would save her 24 hours over the fastest vessel going to New York. At Quebec when the Empress of Britain docked the star was mobbed by a crowd of enthusiastic movie-fans. Much regret was expressed that her visit, like the title of her new picture, was just "One Hour With You."

Owl Laffs

Two business men who were partners discovered an office boy tampering with the petty cash. One of them wanted to send for the police, but the other took a more humane view.

"No," he said, "let us always remember that we began in a small way ourselves."

Girl—"How bashful you are."

Boy—"Yes, I take after father in that respect."

Girl—"Was your father bashful?"

Boy—Was he? Why, mother says if father hadn't been so darn bashful I'd be four years older."

Sue—"What made you quarrel with Claude?"

May—"Well, he proposed to me again last night."

Sue—"Where was the harm in that?"

May—"My dear, I had accepted him the night before."

Josie—"A boy friend of mine has several cups for golf, tennis, also medals for rowing."

Carrie—"Well, he must be quite an athlete."

Josie—"No, he's a pawn broker."

The railroads say they must have increased income. But it can be safely said that they have no monopoly on such a desire. That's what we all want.

The fellow with a deep coat of tan nowadays is in the height of fashion. In the old days the fellow who was sunburned was just a "hick." A lot of people can always be found who will dance provided some one can be found who will pay the fiddler. I would rather be able to enjoy things that I cannot have, than to have things that I cannot enjoy. The three R's of the modern youth's education have changed to rantin', ravin', and rarin'. Wicked movies won't hurt the morals of those who haven't any. No man's opinions are entirely worthless. Even a watch that won't run is right twice a day. Too many people seem to expect the bread they cast upon the waters to return in the shape of a frosted cake. Those who send vacation postcards don't care two cents for you. No woman is ever satisfied with the way another woman arranges the furniture. The poor we have always with us, especially the poor golfers.

"This letter from John is very short," said a mother recently. "So is John," said the father, "or he wouldn't be writing."

Mother—"Does Mamma's itsy baby want a drink?"

Infant—"Sure, wadjer got?"

The imperative colonel, while inspecting the army kitchen, stopped two soldiers who were carrying a soup kettle.

Colonel—"Here, you, give me a taste of that."

The colonel was used to being obeyed, so he received the desired taste without question or explanation. Then he spat and sputtered.

"Colonel—"Good heavens, man! You don't call that stuff soup, do you?"

Soldier (meekly)—"No, sir, it's dish water we are emptyin', sir."

A teacher was trying to develop the word "sleigh." "Now, Jamesie," she said, "what is it that comes along on runners?"

"Rum," answered the five-year-old New Yorker sapiently.

Jones—"Ever buy anything at a rummage sale?"

Rayles—"Huh! I always have to buy my Sunday pants back every time our church gives one."

She—"Oh, I simply adore that funny step. Where did you pick it up?"

He—"Funny step, hell. I'm losing my garter."

Edith (sighing) — "How grand it would be to go to Spain and meet some big, handsome, dark Spaniard."

Fred—"Why not go to Africa?—they are bigger and darker there."

DRAPERIES MADE NEW

"When we resumed housekeeping a month ago I found my draperies had become creased from packing. I hung them out on the line, hoping to remove the creases. Then I forgot them. The result was they become badly faded and sun-spotted.

"I was heartsick until the happy thought struck me to dye them. I just dyed them a deeper green, and as I used Diamond Dyes they look gorgeous and new. I have never seen easier dyes to use than Diamond Dyes. They give the most beautiful colors—when used either for tinting or dyeing—and never take the life out of cloth as other dyes do."—Mrs. J. F. Pedestrians Urged To Use Reflector

Hartford, Conn.—A strong interest in the reflectors which are now coming into use for pedestrians is manifested here by Mr. Robbins B. Stoeckel, Connecticut Commissioner of Motor Vehicles, according to the Christian Science Monitor.

"Many intelligent people who walk on highways after dark recognize and make preparations for situations where they may not be readily seen by an oncoming car operator," Commissioner Stoeckel continued. "A recent instance is known where a lady dressed in black, knowing that she might be invisible to an oncoming car on that account, carried her handkerchief in her hand and fluttered it each time a car came along.

"Whether pedestrians will ever arrive at the point where they can be induced to wear reflector buttons or whether such discussion is even advisable and proper is a question, but everything which can be done by a pedestrian to show the motor vehicle operator that he is there ought to be done."

University of Manitoba Will Have $600,000 Science Hall

Winnipeg, Man.—The Manitoba government has announced the awarding of a contract for the new Science Building of the University of Manitoba. A Winnipeg firm of contractors is to erect the building at a tendered price of $536,197 for all stone construction. Tyndall limestone, a famous Manitoba decorative stone known throughout Canada, is to be used for the building to go up immediately on the joint University-Manitoba Agricultural College campus.

The new Science Building is the second of two important building projects in establishing the University of Manitoba on its new site adjoining Assiniboine Park, southwest of the city. The new Arts Building is now completed with the exception of a small amount of interior work.

London Fog

It was so very strange a thing
To hear Paul's sending down
From his lost tower, nine choking sounds,
To the lost town

The men went by in silver coats,
Here one, another there,
To go break in pieces on the blur
Of the vast air.

Years, years. Then in the dripping road,
A quick and yellow pane;
Then, strutting up and down Paul's steps,
His doves again

—Lizette Woodsworth Reese, in "White April."

"You are engaged to Victor. Did he say I once refused him?"

"He intimated—he said he had been very lucky lately."

AS SLIM AS AT 20

Still Fit and Active at 55

"I have been taking the small dose of Kruschen Salts every morning for the last three years. I wouldn't be without them in the house. I used to suffer with constipation and piles, but am never troubled in that way now. I am 55 years, and as slim as when I was 20. I have to work very hard, as I have my family and an invalid father to attend to, and I always say it's the Kruschen that keeps me fit."—M. S.

There's nothing like hard work and activity for keeping superfluous fat away. The trouble with most folks is finding the necessary energy. That is where Kruschen comes in.

After you have had your daily supply of Kruschen every morning for a couple of weeks you'll get what is known the world over as "That Kruschen Feeling."

The urge for activity will fill your entire being—you'll not be content to sit in the old arm chair after your day's work is done.

You'll feel the spirit of youth within you—what a joyous feeling—you'll want to take long walks, play games and your work will cease to be a hardship—it will become a pleasure.

Passing of George E. Brown

George Edwin Brown, a well-known and respected resident of Port Nelson, died very suddenly at his home on Tuesday evening. Mr. Brown had been around as usual, and when his daughter went to call him to supper she found him dead sitting up in a chair. She immediately summoned aid, but life was extinct. The deceased was 71 years of age. He was born at Streetsville where he resided for many years. While a resident there he served on the School Board and the Board of Health. He came to the Port over 22 years ago, and ran the store and Post Office until April 1st, 1930 when he discontinued business. He was a member of River Park Lodge A.F.&A.M, Streetsville, and in religion an Anglican. Arrange to make this personal test of the 1932 Rogers Superheterodyne Radio today —there will be no obligation.

With volume about one-half "on," move station-finder slowly across the entire dial. Then—
1. Count the stations.
2. Notice how "sharply" each one comes in; no interference of one station with another; no "cross talk."
3. Listen to the quality of the tone, a weakness in some superheterodyne receivers.

If reception conditions are at all normal, you will be amazed at Rogers sharper selectivity; finer tone fidelity.

ONTARIO

A Message from the Premier on the subject of Highways and Highway Safety

Probably no single development in the history of our province has had more widespread influence upon the lives and habits of our citizens than the automobile.

Ontario was one of the first provinces to recognize the importance of this modern means of transportation, and first, also to adopt a progressive policy of road building and road maintenance.

Today, of Ontario's 72,000 miles of roads, more than 38,000 miles are improved gravel, 7,000 miles are paved, and 69 per cent of all roads are surfaced.

These roads are not only a remarkable convenience, but, as well, they are a responsibility. The seriousness of the responsibility is evidenced by the fact that in Ontario last year, 524 persons lost their lives through automobile accidents. All available statistics would seem to indicate that most of these accidents were avoidable—and were caused by either thoughtlessness or wilful violations of the common-sense rules of the road.

The Ontario Department of Highways is about to publish in the press of Ontario, a series of educational advertisements, in which an effort will be made to keep drivers and pedestrians alike, alive to the necessity for the continuous exercise of care, courtesy and common-sense in the use of our highways. Suggestions made in these announcements will be, in effect, a digest of all the information gathered from every section of the world which has been found to be of assistance to drivers and pedestrians in avoiding highway accidents and making these same highways of inestimably greater value and benefit to every citizen.

The first of the announcements referred to will be published at an early date. Your attention is invited thereto, and your co-operation in making our streets and highways safe is earnestly solicited.

HEADACHES

Headache is not an uncommon condition and it is responsible for a great deal of misery and discomfort. Because headaches are felt so frequently, it is very often overlooked that they do not occur in the normally-functioning healthy body. A headache always means that something is wrong which, in turn, is an indication that some abnormal condition has arisen which requires attention.

Headache occurs as a symptom in almost every illness. When the body is subjected to poisoning as the result of the activity of disease germs, or when body waste is not eliminated promptly and regularly, headache is often one of the first warnings of the condition.

Over-indulgence in food, beverages or tobacco will cause headaches in many cases. Emotional upsets, or lack of fresh air are not infrequently responsible for the same symptom.

A very common cause of headache is eye-strain. This is not due to an inability to see well, but it is the result of strain due to some abnormal condition of the eyes, or to their over-use.

Enough has been said to show that headaches may be due to any one of several causes, and that, in all cases, they are the result of some abnormal condition. The sufferer will know the cause in some cases, for example, the headache has followed upon some over-indulgence, when the means of avoiding a recurrence is also clear as it depends upon avoiding the excess which is responsible.

Headaches should be regarded as a warning, Frequent headaches or unusually severe ones should not be neglected. The sufferer wants relief, but it is a serious mistake to relieve the headache by the use of a drug and then to imagine that the real trouble has been removed. Such is not the case. The distressing headache has been got rid of, but the cause of the headache has not been dealt with, and that is the more important matter.

It is not difficult to remove pain, but such relief is often only temporary, and it is not a reasonable or a safe procedure to remove the pain which is the danger signal and leave the abnormal condition uncorrected.

The cause of the headaches should be sought and, when found, it should be treated. It is by prompt attention to such conditions as headaches that disease and abnormal body conditions will be brought under treatment early, and their correction made possible by proper treatment.

Neglect of pain, failure to realize that pain is a danger signal, leads to continuing and repeated discomfort, sometimes serious damage, and occasionally disaster.

Questions concerning Health, addressed to the Canadian Medical Association, 184 College Street, Toronto, will be answered personally by letter.

City Deaconesses Visit Streetsville

Provide Programme in Presbyterian Church

At the missionary meeting held in the Sunday School room of St. Andrew's Church on Friday night, Nov. 13, an interesting program was given by a number of Deaconesses from Toronto. A reading was given by one of their number, Miss McLeod, "A House by the Side of the Road." As Miss McLeod made us feel by the way she gave the reading we could see the house by the side of the road, but did not explain what suggested the poem to the great author, Floss, and it met with such approval that night, I thought the history and poem might be of interest to some of the readers of The Review.

How the Poem was Written

Admirers of Sam Wallers Floss' poem, "The House by the Side of the Road," are many. The story of his writing it is known to few. He was an enthusiastic traveller, and on one of his trips through England he came at the top of a long hill to a little unpainted house, set almost on the road, so near it was. Near one side was a queerly constructed signpost finger pointnig to a well-worn path and a sign, "Come in and have a cool drink." Following the path he found in the side of the bank, some distance from the house, a spring of ice-cold water, into which a barrel had been sunk and above which hung an old-fashioned gourd dipper. And on a bank near by, a wonder, a basket of fragrant apples with another sign, "Help yourself."

Scenting a story, he went back to the house where he found a childless old couple in straightened circumstances with the rocky farm as their only source of livelihood. But it was rich in delicious spring water and abundance of fruit, so the sign was placed guiding to the water and from the time of the first purple plum to the harvesting of the last red apple, a basket of watever fruit might be in season was placed near, that everyone passing might rest upon the long hill and refresh himself. The old gentleman explained they were too poor to give money so took this way to add their mite to the world's well-doing.

The beautiful thought and its real helpfulness so impressed Floss that he immortalized with his pen the spirit of the "Ideal Home."

The House by the Side of the Road

There are hermit souls that live withdrawn
In the peace of their self content;
There are souls, like stars that dwell apart
In the fellowless firmament;
There are pioneer souls that blaze the path
Where highways never ran;
But let me live by the side of the road
And be a friend to man.

Let me live in a house by the side of the road
Where the race of men go by—
The men who are good and the men who are bad,
As good and as bad as I.
I would not sit in the scorner's seat,
Or hurl the cynic's ban;
Let me live in a house by the side of the road
And be a friend to man.

I know there are broad, gladdened meadows ahead
And mountains of wearisome height,
That the road passes on through a long afternoon
And passes into the night;
But still I rejoice when the travellers rejoice.
And weep with the strangers that moan,
Nor live in my house by the side of the road
Like a man who dwells alone.

Let me live in my house by the side of the road
Where the race of men go by;
They are good, they are bad; they are weak, they are strong,
Wise, foolish, and so am I.
Then why should I sit in the scorner's seat
Or hurl the cynic's ban?
Let me live in my house by the side of the road
And be a friend to man.

BRAMPTON

Arnold Leslie Manes was relieved of all responsibility for the accident in which Henry C. Horner met his death on Nov. 7. A verdict of purely accidental death was brought in by a Brampton jury at the inquest held in the Municipal Chambers, Brampton, on Friday last night. Coroner J. A. Lawson, presiding officer of the inquest, refused to ask Leslie Manes to testify. The boy, who is only nineteen years of age, was called to the stand by R. W. Lent, Crown Attorney, and when he broke down in the witness chair, was told that he need not give any evidence. Only three witnesses were called, Mr. Davidson, the farmer to whose home Leslie Manes went immediately after the accident, Highway Traffic Officer Charles Hefferon, and a photographer.

The jury embodied in their verdict as strong recommendation that pedestrians meet approaching traffic on the same side of the road as that on which the traffic is driving. Although this is the recommendation of the Department of Highways, and of several safety leagues, there is no direct legislation as to which side of the road is to be used by pedestrians.

In a football match with the Peel and Dufferin Regiment, at Brampton, Royal Canadian Regiment lost 3-2. Sgt. Instructor C. E. McGuire, of the Royal Canadian Signal Corps is conducting a class in Brampton for High School pupils and members of the regiment.

County Master Roy Lavery, representing the County Orange Lodge of Peel placed a wreath on the cenotaph at Brampton on Sunday. Owing to the bad weather the parade which was to have been held from the Orange Hall to the Presbyterian Church was put off. Mrs. R. Herbert, on behalf of the Queen Alexandra L.O.B.A. which also attended the service, placed a wreath.

Orland Hewson and Edward Lyons, two Toronto youths who stole a generator, battery, heater and part of a cash register from the garage of H. H. Sanderson, Caledon East, were sentenced to four months and six months in the Ontario Reformatory when they pleaded guilty before Magistrate L. J. C. Bull on Saturday morning. On a charge of breaking a gas pump and stealing gas from Thos. Coulter, Caledon East, they received similar sentences, which will run concurrently. Lyons, who is 19 years of age, had the heavier penalty imposed.

Heavy fog on the highways kept traffic down to speeds much below the limit on Sunday night. Although driving was difficult no accidents of any account have been reported.

COOKSVILLE

The editors of local newspapers are often blamed for partiality in their notices for churches, societies and even families, when the fact is the parties most interested are the ones to blame. The local newspaper does not possess a sufficient number of reporters to send to every church service in the range of its circulation, and it must needs depends upon some person to send in the news. Many pastors or leaders of the congregation do this and their items are gladly printed. Many societies appoint one of their members to attend to this important work.

Young People's Annual Banquet

Held in United Church Last Monday Night

STREETSVILLE UNITED CHURCH YOUNG PEOPLE'S ASSOCIATION

On Monday night, an outstanding event in this year's program of the Young People's Association of the United Church was held in the church school room. It was the Association's Annual Banquet and marked the beginning of the activities for the coming winter season.

At 7 p.m. 150 people sat down to a magnificent meal, amid beautifully decorated surrounding. After the supper an excellent program was provided under the able chairmanship of Mr. J. B. Ross, a past president of the Association. It was opened by a bright sing song led by Mr. C. P. McArthur, which instilled into everyone the spirit of the gathering. With keen interest, the large crowd followed the election of officers for the coming season.

Mr. Ross, in his remarks, expressed his joy at the manifest interest and hoped that the enthusiasm evidenced would be maintained throughout the entire year. The program continued by various members of the Association proposing or responding to toasts. The toast to "Our King" consisted in singing of the National Anthem. The toast to "Our Country" was proposed by Howard Purchase and in response all joined in singing "The Maple Leaf". Following this, Jim Steen rendered a pleasing violin solo. The toast to "Our Church" was afterwards proposed by Ruth Ross, who spoke of the place of the Church in the world to-day and urged her listeners to act sincerely and to more acutely feel the need of the abiding presence of Jesus Christ. In response, the Minister, Rev. Mr. Purchase pointed out that the co-operation of everyone was necessary to the proper advancement of Christ's Kingdom. Margaret Falconer then gave a very well accepted piano selection. The toast to "Our Sister Societies" was proposed by Bernice Temple and responded to by Mrs. Chas. Falconer. Both speaker emphasized the need of mutual assistance among the various orgainizations of the Church if definite results were to be obtained, because each society is a part within the larger whole. Mr. Roy Elderfield, in his usually fine manner, then played two saxaphone numbers.

Whereupon, Mr. Ross, called upon the quest-speaker of the evening the Rev. Geo. W. Barker, of Grace United Church, Toronto, Chairman of the Toronto West Presbytery and Secretary of the Toronto Conference of the United Church, to give his address. Mr. Barker is a gifted speaker, forceful and earnest in his delivery. He is an authority on young people's subjects and his wide experience and depth of knowledge made his address most interesting and inspirational. His subject was "The Challenge to World-Thinking." Mr. Barker pointed out how necessary it was for us to-day to think in world terms. The growth of commerce, the radio, more rapid and efficient means of travel all combine to make the world one large community and render it impossible for us to think locally if we do not desire to be circumscribed. "As a man thinketh, so is he." Even at such a time when thinking in local terms was somewhat justifiable, Jesus challenged the people of his day to world-thinking. Mr. Barker went on to say that since all parts of the world are interdependent, we are confronted with many great problems, including the race question, war and many others, all of which call to us for their solution. This may seem a stupendous task, but if a man has the Spirit of God within, nothing can stop him. He is invincible.

Mr. Barker's message was a great challenge to everyone present to endeavour to be a better Christain by imitating to a greater degree our Master's example and by following in his footsteps.

On behalf of the gathering, Jim Steen thanked Mr. Barker for his most helpful address. The program then ended with the singing of "God Save the King" and the Benediction by the Rev. Mr. Purchase, and everyone went away loud in his praises of the exceptional program and the happy time enjoyed.

The following is the list of officers for the coming year.

Hon. President, Mr. J. B. Ross; President, Jim Steen; Vice-president, Margaret Cook; Secretary, John Ross; Treasurer, Alex. Wallace; Pianist, Miss Edna Falconer; Assistant Pianist, Edith Rogerson; Leaders of Programmes, Harry Johnston, Blanche Hisey, Margaret Cook, Graydon Clipperton; Refreshment Committee, Miss Alma Hewgill (convener; Membership Committee, Jean Temple, (convener); Press Reporter, Ruth Ross.

Firebug Continues to Menace Farmers of Ontario Countryside

Week-End Fires

West Bothwell, Kent County — Schoolhouse destroyed; loss $5,000; incendiarism suspected.

Dereham Township, Oxford County —Barn destroyed, with live stock, crops, implements; loss, $8,000; incendiarism suspected.

Peel Township, Wellington County —Barn destroyed, with live stock, crops, implements; loss, $7,000; incendiarism suspected.

Ridgeville, Welland County — Barn destroyed; loss, $2,000; origin unknown.

Puce, Essex County—Barn destroyed, with crops; village threatened; loss, $4,000; origin unknown.

Verner, Nipissing District—Mill destroyed, with stable, lumber and wheat; village threatened; loss, $8,000; thought to have originated in boiler-room.

Beverly Township, Wentworth County—House and barn destroyed; loss, $2,000; origin unknown, but spontaneous combustion suspected.

Hamilton.—The eighteenth mysterious farm blaze within two months occurred in Wentworth County Saturday afternoon when the home of Arthus Whitehead, on the seventh concession of Beverly was destroyed.

Alarm once again has gripped the farmers of the county, as fears that a pyromaniac is at large are intensified, lull in the series of suspicious blazes in the county restored confidence and security several weeks ago, but once again flames are almost nightly reddening the skies over a sleepless and worried countryside.

A few articles of furniture were saved from the lower floor. The loss was estimated at $2,000 and insurance of $1,500 is held.

The fire started in a small shed, used as a stable for two horses, at the rear of the house. There were no animals in the place at the time and the owners are puzzled to know the cause of the blaze. Mrs. Whitehead was alone in the home and discovered the fire.

The nearest farm home is a considerable distance away and by the time she gave the alarm the house was ablaze. Neighbors carried household effects from the burning structure but heat prevented them from reaching the rooms on the second story.

Two years ago the farm was the scene of a barn blaze.

Another in Peel

Elora.—Fire of an unknown origin Sunday night destroyed the barn of George A Hall, Peel Township.

The fire is believed to be the work of some unknown person, and connected with recent barn fires throughout the country.

It was first noticed by a neighbor at about 9 o'clock. Mr. Hall, who had been in Alma all evening, estimated his loss at $7,000, which is partly covered by insurance.

Besides the barn and season crop a large amount of poultry, three horses, seven cattle and thirty hogs were destroyed.

The provincial police were last night investigating the blaze.

South Oxford Blaze

Tillsonburg.—The farmers of South Oxford are fearful that arson was the cause of the destruction of the large metal barn of Charles Winegarden, two miles north of Tillsonburg, on the 9th concession of Dereham Township, early Sunday.

In addition to the barn, two silos, 30 head of cattle and four horses were lost. Grain, the farm implements and a large quantity of hay were also destroyed, entailing a loss estimated at $8,000, partly covered by insurance.

Mr. Winegarden was awakened by the reflection of the fire and made an unsuccessful attempt to liberate the live stock. The Tillsonburg fire department was called and succeeded in saving the dwelling, milk house, garage and chicken house.

Schoolhouse Razed

Bothwell.—Fire believed to be of incendiary origin entirely destroyed the West Bothwell school house Saturday night.

The blaze was first noticed by Wilson Nash, a milkman, on his route, who sounded the alarm. The school is situated about a mile from the town on a triangle where the Bothwell road meets the highway, and consequently little could be done as it was beyond the water mains.

The school was one of the best equipped and most modern rural schools in this part of the country.

There had been no fire in the furnace since Friday. The building was valued at $5,000 and is insured. This is the second bad blaze in West Bothwell within six weeks.

Old Steamer Destroyed

Orillia.—The Priscilla, an old 58-foot steamboat, built at Kingston in 1895 for Senator Standish, and for the past two years a derelict on the shore of Lake Couchiching at Orillia, was completely destroyed by a fire of mysterious origin Sunday morning.

When firemen arrived the entire vessel was a mass of flames, and in less than an hour and a half nothing remained of the gallant little ship but a charred mass.

Arson is suspected.

Back in the gay nineties the Priscilla was considered the finest vessel afloat in Muskoka. With her rich interior finish of teakwood, heavily plushed floor and chairs, she cost $16,000 when new, and although she had somewhat deteriorated in appearance during her less prosperous years, it had been the intention of the owner, Captain Tom Wood, of Orillia, to refit the little craft.

Enjoys Playmate and Dolls For First Time

Allegedly imprisoned for four years in a clothes closet by her father and stepmother, little Edith Riley is seen here in a hospital in Washington, where she has found toys, a playmate and flowers.

Press Items Show Brighter Outlook

Winnipeg. — Grain movement over C.P.R. lines during October showed a substantial increase over the corresponding period last year, according to a statement just issued. Cars of grain loaded in the three prairie provinces last month totalled 17,921, which, compared with 13,373 cars in the corresponding month last year, is an increase of 4,548 cars. A substantial increase was noted in the amount of grain received at country elevators. Grain in store at country points totalled 38,9990,000 bushels, compared with 32,078,000 bushels in October last year.

Montreal.—That Canada is undoubtedly returning to more prosperous times was declared by Beaudry Leman, retiring president of the Canadian Bankers' Association, in an address at its annual meeting here.

"Governments, in many of the wealthiest countries of the world, have been hard pressed to maintain their credit structure," he declared, and yet, throughout this financial and economic upheaval, young Canada has not suffered a single bank failure.

"Nothing much can be wrong with a system that produces such results, and some merit must attach to the organizations which have conserved intact the savings of the people and kept them available to insure the return of prosperous times in Canada, of which unmistakable signs are becoming apparent."

New York.—That the world as a whole is feeling the quickening movement of business was shown last week when entry of teams from Sweden, Finland and Spain in the Olympic games to be held at Lake Placid and Los Angeles next year. A few months ago these countries decided that financial conditions would prevent their taking part in the 1932 Olympics.

Vancouver.—Brokers here who had been idle for some weeks and indulging their spare time on the golf course, were reported working overtime last week. Orders were rushed out for former employees when sales began and the force was kept on the job far into the night.

Scotland Yard's New Head Earned Nickname

London—London has a new chief of police. He is Lord Trenchard, fifty-eight years old and known as the man who made the Royal Air Force. He is a disciplinarian, looks the part, and his deep voice earned him the nickname of Boom."

Lord Trenchard follows in the steps of Lord Byng of Vimy as head of Scotland Yard. Lord Byng, also a warrior, made a record for drastic dealing with London's tough spots which Lord Trenchard is expected to equal.

The new commissioner was born in 1873 and entered the army twenty years later. By 1916 he was a major general and in 1919 became an air marshal. In 1927 he was commissioned marshal of the entire air force.

Dominion War Memorial Ready Next Summer

Ottawa. — Canada's national war memorial is expected to be completed early next summer

Rapid progress is being made on the impressive memorial, it is stated, in reports from England, where the sculptors, the March brothers and sisters, are working on it.

Ninety feet high, showing a colossal group of figures in bronze, exemplifying the heroism and self sacrifice of the Canadian people, the memorial will stand in Confederation Park. Its erection will involve the removal of the city post office, the construction of a new railway terminal and a new arrangement of uptown vehicular traffic.

I beseech you to treasure up in your hearts these, my parting words: Be ashamed to die until you have won some victory for humanity.—Horcae Mann.

Cuban Farmers Seek to Enlarge Markets

Havana—The National Federation of Vegetable Growers and Exporters has been organized to obtain better transportation facilities for vegetables; to develop home and foreign markets; seek favorable tariff agreements with countries consuming Cuban products; work in co-operation with the Department of Agriculture; give members the benefit of latest crop growing methods and in general to increase the vegetable production of Cuba.

The federation was formed under supervision of General Eugenio Molinet, Secretary of Agriculture, Commerce and Labor, and will receive the hearty support of the administration.

Cuba's vegetable production has increased steadily during the past few years and more farmers are devoting their efforts in this direction due to the low price of cane.

Outlook Is Good For Wheat Market

Winnipeg. — Signs of better times are apparent in Europe and the outlook for sale of Canadian wheat is improved, in th opinion of A. L. Searle, president of the Searle Grain Company, one of the largest grain elevator concerns in western Canada.

Back from an extensive trip through Great Britain, Germany and France, Mr. Searle said in an interview he was convinced the new British National Government would introduce some form of tariff, though he thought any preference for Canadian wheat would be conditional on a preference for British goods coming to Canada.

France, crops depleted by unfavorable weather, will require between 40,000,000 and 60,000,000 bushels of wheat from outside the country this season, he believed. Likelihood of milling restrictions being slackened early in the new year indicated a larger French market for Canadian wheat within a few months.

A much brisker demand for Canada's wheat would obtain in England if Russian shippers are unable to fill their contracts, he commented. There is some uncertainty in Britain about the Soviet's ability to deliver, he said.

He is happiest, be he king or peasant, who finds peace in his home.

Winter Storms Hit Rockies

Wire Service to Coast Interrupted by Snow, Frost, Wind.

Calgary.—High winds and heavy snowfalls continued Saturday to interrupt telegraph service in mountainous regions west of Revelstoke, B.C., and Jasper, Alberta, near the British Columbia-Alberta boundary. Gangs of repair men were strung out in the storm area, attempting to effect repairs.

Canadian Pacific telegraph lines were broken in the vicinity of Taft, B.C., 10 miles west of Revelstoke. Canadian National lines were damaged at Red Junction Pass, B.C., about 24 miles west of Jasper. Service over Canadian National lines was resumed, but repair crews around Taft were still busy.

So far, few details of the extent of the storm have been obtained, but it was reported by Canadian Pacific Telegraphs that over 25 miles of lines, in broken sections, had been affected. A few miles were damaged on the northern Canadian National area.

Wet snow clinging to the wires, with a light frost, followed by strong winds, caused the disruption, officials said.

Cost of Living Still Decreases

Retail Values Have Not Reacted Yet to Upward Wholesale Trend

Ottawa.—Several favorable business factors are shown in Canadian Government statistics issued last week, the Department of Trade and Commerce notes in a statistical review issued on Saturday.

Steadily decreasing cost of living, increased tobacco production, increased storage of butter, increased production of leather footwear, improved prices on the Canadian stock exchanges and firmness in the calue of mining stocks are among the favorite factors, says the review. It adds:

"Retail values in Canada have not yet reacted to the upward trend in wholesale values shown in October for the first time in two years. This indicates that the cost of living is still benefitting the purchaser even while the producer is profiting by higher wholesale prices."

Hit and Run Autoist Injures Three Youths

Sault Ste. Marie, Ont.—A hit-and-run driver, speeding into the Sault Sunday night at 7.30 o'clock, came close to killing or seriously maiming three inmates of the children's shelter. Handy Garlow, 21, an employee of the shelter, was knocked down and sustained a scalp wound that required many stitches to close. Robert Cartmill had his shoulder badly injured when he was knocked down, and Geo. Curtis was slightly bruised about the leg. The car veered towards them, the young men believe, deliberately, to frighten them. Before they could get out of the way, the car struck them and hurled them into the ditch. The car continued on its way without stopping.

Septic Sore Throat Grips Children

Four Dead, Many Ill of Septic Sore Throat at St. Thomas

St. Thomas.—An emergency meeting of the local Board of Health and the Board of Education was called Saturday to consider what course would be taken to check the outbreak of septic sore throat which has already claimed four young lives in the city and several in the surrounding country.

As a result of the meeting, eight rooms in two of the city's public schools have been closed for fumigation. In addition, strict quarantine of all homes where sore throat has occurred has been ordered.

The latest victim of the dread streptococcus is Patricia Ann (Patsy) Carter, nine-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Clair Carter and granddaughter of Dr. F. E. Bennett, St. Thomas, well-known emissary of flowers. Little Patsy died Saturday morning, making the second death in this family in the week. A younger brother died of the same trouble on Monday night. A third member of the family is still seriously ill. The death of 7-year-old Margaret Thorpe occurred 12 hours previous.

General alarm has spread throughout the city. Dr. D. A. McKillop, the medical officer of health, and three public health nurses are working without cessation, visiting absentees from schools, checking up on all sickness that they can trace through the homes and schools, placarding, fumigating, advising, inoculating—all with a view towards preventing the spread of the dread disease.

The five-year average is 404,000,000 bushels.

This year's oat crop is estimated at 177,700,000 bushels, compared with 254,011,000 last year. Barley crop is estimated at 52,800,000 bushels, compared with 109,495,000 bushels last year.

Interesting Facts Of Bird-Life

By Professor Julian Huxley
In The Strand Magazine

Man happens to be the most successful of a whole series of diverse and fascinating experiments to deal with the problems of the world; but we are not therefore the most beautiful or the most ingenious.

Birds branched off from reptiles somewhere about a hundred million years ago, and were remodelled for flight, so that their forelimb was irrevocably converted into a wing. They clung obstinately to one important character of their reptilian ancestry—the shelled egg, and thus debarred themselves from ever being born into the world at such an advanced state of development as is possible to man and other higher mammals.

In respect of their minds just as much as their bodies, birds have developed along other lines than mammals. Mammals have gradually perfected intelligence and the capacity for learning by experience, and the power and fixity of the instincts have diminished; birds have kept instinct as the mainstay of their behaviour, and while they possess some intelligence, it is used merely to polish up the outfit of inherited instincts. The front part of their brain, known to be the seat of intelligence and learning, remains relatively small, while other parts, known to be the regulating machinery for more automatic and emotional actions, are in birds relatively larger than in four-footed creatures.

Perhaps the most obvious way in which birds differ from men in their behaviour is that they can do all that they have to do, including some quite complicated things, without ever being taught. Flying, for instance, with all its complexity of balance and aeronautical adjustment, comes untaught. Young birds very frequently make their first flight when their parents are out of sight. The stories of old birds "teaching" their young to fly seem all to be erroneous. Some kinds of birds, once their young are full-fledged, do try to lure them away from the nest, but this is merely to encourage them to take the plunge. There is no instruction by the old bird, and no conscious imitation by the young.

Still more wonderful is it that a bird should be able to build its nest untaught. Young birds, mating for the first time, can make perfectly good nests, and nests of the usual type found among their particular species. Some people suggest that the young birds may have gained the necessary knowledge from contemplating the structure of the nest in which they were brought up, but this theory is negatived by the facts. The young brush-turkey of the Australian region scrambles out of its tunnel immediately upon hatching, and does not bestow so much as a look upon the mound of rubbish and decaying leaves that formed its nest, yet when the time for mating comes, it will build a mound just as its ancestors have done. Moreover, young birds reared by hand in artificial nests will later build the proper kind of nest for their species. A finch will have the impulse to weave coarse material into a rough cup, and then to line this with a finer material; the tailorbird takes leaves and sews them together; and the house-martin collects mud or clay and constructs a cup against the side of a cliff or a house.

Birds in a state of broodiness will have the impulse to sit on eggs, but if eggs are not available, then on something else. Crows have brooded on golf-balls, gulls on brilliantine tins, and penguins on lumps of ice.

Contrary to general opinion, birds have no real affection for their young. They have a strong, emotional, irrational concern, not entwined with reason, memory, personal affection, and foresight. When a nestling dies there is no sign of sorrow, although there may be some agitation if a whole brood is stolen. When a chick becomes ill, it is definitely neglected. It would seem that the bird is only impelled to parental action when there is some activity, like gaping or squawking, on the part of the children.

Perhaps the familiar cuckoo provides us with the completest proof of the dissimilarity of birds' minds with our own. A young cuckoo, having been deposited as an egg in the nest of some other quite different species of bird, and having hatched out in double-quick time, proceeds to evict all the rest of the contents of the nest, whether these be eggs or young birds. It has a slightly hollow, hyper-sensitive back, and the touch of any object there drives him frantic, so that, no matter what it is—eggs, young birds, nuts or marbles—he walks backward and upward to the edge of the nest and tilts it overboard. It is neither cruelty nor malice aforethought, it is merely instinct.

When the foster-mother comes home, she is not distressed in the least, but sets about at once feeding the changeling, and paying no attention to her own offspring, even though some of them may be dangling just outside the nest. Even when the young cuckoo grows into a creature entirely different from its foster-parents, and so bulky that they have to perch on its head to feed it, the older birds do not seem disconcerted as human beings certainly would.

The well-known "broken-wing" trick is usually set down as a remarkable example of intelligence, but all the evidence points to this, too, as being merely instinctive—a trick not invented by the individual bird but patented by the species. It is, in fact, on a par with the purely automatic "shamming dead" which many insects practice, and is the inevitable outcome of the animal's nervous machinery when it is stimulated in a particular way.

Besides instinctive actions, we could multiply instances of unintelligent behaviour among birds. If a strange egg is put among a bird's own eggs, the mother may either accept it or intelligently turn it out of the nest and continue to sit. But a quite common reaction is for it to turn the strange egg out and then desert the nest.

But because birds are mainly instinctive and not intelligent in their actions, it does not follow that their minds are lacking in intensity or variety: in fact, they experience a wide range of powerful emotions. There is an intense satisfaction in brooding and feeding its young; where there is danger, birds suffer very real fear; in song, the bird gives vent to a deep current of feeling; the emotions aroused during their courtship display often make them oblivious of danger; and they are as subject as men to the emotions of jealousy — rival cocks sometimes fight to the death.

Bird-mind has sufficient subtlety to indulge in play: birds have been seen dropping small objects in midair, and swoop down to catch them before they reach the ground, with the greatest evidence of enjoyment. Some birds, for example, the ravens, have a real sense of humor although of a rather low order. Two will combine to tease a dog or a cat, one occuping its attention from the front, and the other stealing behind to tweak its tail.

But being without the power of conceptual thought, birds still differ in a fundamental way from ourselves. Their emotion is not linked up with the future or with the past as in the human mind. Their fear is just fear: it is not the fear of death, nor can it anticipate pain, nor become an ingredient of a lasting "complex." They cannot worry or torment themselves. The bird mother is not concerned with the fate of an individual offspring; and when the young grow up and her inner physiology changes, there is no intellectual framework making a continuing personal or individual interest possible. Our powers of thought and our imagination bind up the present with the future and the past: the bird's life must be almost wholly a patchwork, a series of self-sufficing moments.

SAVED IMPORTED DRESS

"After a little wearing, a lovely green voile—an imported dress—lost color so completely that it was not wearable. A friend who had admired it asked me why I wasn't wearing it any more. On hearing the reason, she advised dyeing it and recommended Diamond Dyes. To make a long story short, it turned out beautifully. I have a lovely new dress that really cost just 15c—the price of one package of Diamond Dyes.

"I have since used Diamond Dyes for both tinting and dyeing. They do either equally well. I am not an expert dyer but I never have a failure with Diamond Dyes. They seem to be made so they always go on smoothly and evenly. They never spot, streak or run; and friends never know the things I dye with Diamond Dyes are redyed at all!"

Finder of Missing Men

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Woodruff had been two days away from home on their automobile tour when Mr. Woodruff's mother passed away very suddenly. The road from Sarnia to Quebec has many turnings and where and how Mr. Woodruff's younger brother was to locate the tourists quickly was the question.

Twenty-one long distance telephone calls to fourteen points on their supposed route were necessary before Mr. and Mrs. Woodruff were found. The time lost and the distance away meant that they arrived home in barely time for the funeral. Had they thought to inform the home folks each day by long distance of their itinerary, much of the time and worry of locating them would have been saved.

Nowadays there is no point so remote that telephone service will not reach the missing party. All that is needed, and that at little expense, is to regularly keep in touch by long distance telephone.

Plant Life Is Forever Thirsty

By Dr. D. T. MacDougal, in the Scientific Monthly (August, 1931).

The fundamental thirst of living matter has laid the foundation of wars between peoples, and has been the cause of racial migrations affecting civilization in the profoundest manner. The water problems of a city of over a million people in one American state have recently led to the expropriation and assignment of the water on one of the largest rivers, and a controversial discussion by the people of seven states occupying an area of half a million square miles. It is highly probable that among the earliest agreements between family or tribal groups were those as to the shared use of limited supplies of water. Plant life, especially, is forever thirsty, and when active, continually takes in and loses water.

The growing substance in tender root tips, in swelling buds, in the fragile wood-forming combium layer of tree trunks, and in enlarging fruits, may have as much as a hundred or a hundred and fifty parts of water to one of solid matter, but, as the liquid is being lost all the time, a continuous new supply is necessary. We can probably understand this condition by filling a drinking glass loosely with excelsior or wood-fibre packing, and then pouring in water until it rises to the brim. Water is similarly placed among the ultimate strands or particles of protoplasm, which—unlike the wood fibres—adhere by their poles like fragments of magnetized iron. These molecular clumps, or strands, unlike the wood fibres, also bind the water in much the same way as they hold to each other, so that it does not run out freely: when the water is forced out by pressure the fine meshwork or grouping of the molecules is broken up and the protoplasm is injured or destroye If instead of pressure the water should be slowly evaporated from the surface of the mass of living matter, the fibers would be brought closer together with an accompanying concentration of the sap which slows down the activities which constitute life. This is the universal effect of thirst.

Crop plants and forest and fruit trees obtain their water supply from layers of soil of varying depths. The roots of some species form great webbed sheets of wide extent just underneath the surface. Others send rootlets deep into the substream. The first habit is especially prevalent in places where the rainfall is used as soon as it soaks into the ground. Deeply penetrating roots take up large amounts of water: a sunflower with a leaf spread of about 11 square yards will evaporate about 75 quarts of water from its leaves during the course of development; a corn plant takes up about 16 quarts of water during its lifetime; a hemp plant twice as much. An acre of cabbage plants needs over two million quarts of water in a season. Two hundred beech trees on an acre require nearly double this amount. One of these trees loses about 80 quarts of water as vapor daily from its leaves.

Irrigation practice must put enough water into the soil to replace losses from the leaves and losses from the surface of the soil as well as the amount actually used or bound in the tissues. The farmer knows that over 600 pounds of water must be put into the soil to provide one pound of dry alfalfa, while the forester estimates that half a ton is necessary to make a pound of wood.

The plant is a complicated living mechanism that converts the energy of sunlight into power. Some of the energy is used in making compounds; but 98 per cent of the energy absorbed by leaves and other green expanses of the plant is used in evaporating water from the surfaces of the cells. The work of lifting water from the rootlets in the soil to the crown of tall trees, to heights as great as 400 feet, is done by power generated in this manner. This movement of liquid in the ascent of sap is as important as the circulation of our blood, although the movement is not a circulation. Watery solutions rise from the roots to the leaves where most of the liquid goes into the air as water vapor. Only a small fraction of the water which moves rapidly upward in the woody conduits of stems is bound or held in chemical combinations in the cells.

The green surfaces are held toward the sunlight partly by stiff, rigid stems, and partly by the force of water through the tiny cells. Sometimes the water is forced through the elastic cell walls at a pressure of a ton to a square inch. A stem, leaf, or flower, the cells of which are distended by such pressure, will have great rigidity and firmness.

The production of sugars and other organic substances in green leaves depends directly on the extent of green surfaces exposed to light. Over-extension of the surfaces will be followed by undue loss of water and a consequent wilting. Certain plants, such as cacti, are able to store water for years.

Not Much To Be Thankful For

You think you've little to be thankful for, do you?

You're able to read this, aren't you?"

Well, that's a lot to be thankful for.

We've just been to a place where there are some blind men—they'll never see the beauty of God's world again in all their lives. They were soldiers, too—gave their eyes for their country.

If they could have their sight restored to them they would get down on their knees and praise God!

You would, too, if you were blind and had sight restored.

But you have your eyesight, so there's that at least to be thankful for.

Some of those boys are crippled, armless, legless, hopeless invalids for life—because they served their country. They haven't much to be thankful for, have they?

Yet most of them are so grateful for little favors done them, your heart would ache to see it.

Nothing to be thankful for?

Look around a bit and you'll probably find you are mistaken and that you have a lot to be thankful for.

Wife—"John, the bill collector's at the door."

Hubby—"Tell him to take that pile on the desk."

Kathleen—"Clarice always leaves a good impression on the boys."

Ellen—"Yes, the kind of lipstick she uses comes off very easily."

Nurse—"Bobby! What would your father say if he saw you'd broken that branch off?"

Bobby—"He'd say trees are not so well made as they were before the war."

To Begin With

Owing to the absence through illness of the woman who taught the senior girls' Bible Class, the young assistant minister was asked to undertake the duties for the day. He consented, but before beginning he said, smilingly: "Now, girls, I want to conduct your class just as your teacher does, so you might tell me what she does first."

A short pause, then the answer from a pert miss of sixteen: "Well, she always kisses us all round!"

Activity Melted it

Exercise is the enemy of fat. If you are overburdened with superfluous flesh, call up reserves of energy to fight it. Do as this lady did:—

"During the past six months, I have made steady improvement whilst taking Kruschen Salts. I have reduced 28 lbs. in weight during that period, and have benefited greatly from greater agility and liveliness—all directly attributable to that famous preparation."—Mrs. W. P.

You can take off fat with Kruschen Salts if you will take one-half teaspoon in hot water every morning before breakfast, modify your diet and exercise regularly.

While you are losing fat you will be gaining in energy—in endurance—in ambition. Your skin will grow clearer, and your eyes will sparkle with the good health that Kruschen brings. The old arm chair won't hold you any more—you'll want to be up and doing—ou'll enjoy work and active recreation and you'll sleep like a top. You'll lose fat, and probably live years longer.

ACID STOMACH

EXCESS acid is the common cause of indigestion. It results in pain and sourness about two hours after eating. The quick corrective is an alkali which neutralizes acid. The best corrective is Phillips' Milk of Magnesia. It has remained standard with physicians in the 50 years since its invention.

One spoonful of Phillips' Milk of Magnesia neutralizes instantly many times its volume in acid. Harmless, and tasteless, and yet its action is quick. You will never rely on crude methods, once you learn how quickly this method acts. Be sure to get the genuine.

The ideal dentifrice for clean teeth and healthy gums is Phillips' Dental Magnesia, a superior toothpaste that safeguards against acid-mouth. (Made in Canada.)

Wakeful restless CHILD needs Castoria

WE can never be sure just what makes an infant restless, but the remedy can always be the same. Good old Castoria! There's comfort in every drop of this pure vegetable preparation, and not the slightest harm in its frequent use. As often as Baby has a fretful spell, is feverish, or cries and can't sleep, let Castoria soothe and quiet him. Sometimes it's a touch of colic. Other times it's constipation. Or diarrhea—a condition that should always be checked promptly. Just keep Castoria handy, and give it promptly. Relief will follow very promptly; if it doesn't you should call a physician.

All through babyhood, Castoria should be a mother's standby; and a wise mother continues it in more liberal doses as a child grows up.

Readily obtained at any drug-store, the genuine easily identified by the Chas. H. Fletcher signature and the name Castoria on the wrapper like this:

HIGH SCHOOL NOTES

Arnott Charlton, Hilda Haddon, Edith Rogerson and Roy Hollingshead attended the convention of high school editors at Convocation Hall on Friday and Saturday of last week. Many prominent journalists addressed the assembly. An interesting feature of the convention was the tour of The Star building and of MacLean's Publishing House. All delegates attended a presentation of The Barretts of Wimpole Street at the Royal Alexander on Saturday afternoon.

Definite plans for the commencement are being drawn up and intensive practice should begin next week. "The Arrow Maker's Daughter" may possibly be chosen as the main feature of the program. This play was presented a few years ago and met with great success.

Owing to the fact that our fall term examinations are in full swing no rugby games are in sight at present.

The regular monthly meeting of the Literary Society comes on Friday. Fourth Form is supplying the program.

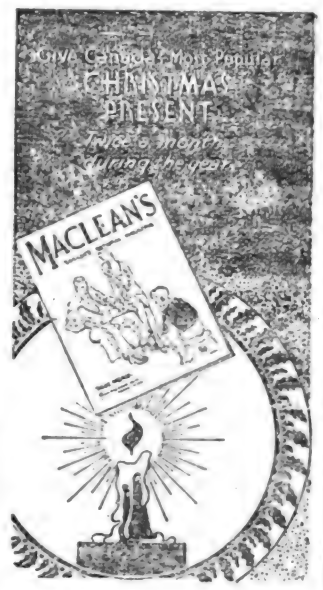
Look Them Over First



The merchant and manufcturer who advertises actually are placing their merchandise before you for your inspection. They invite your most critical attention and an uncompromising comparison. And their advertisements, so to speak, say to their products "We have introduced you to the public—now stand on your own merits."

If the manufacturer and merchant did not have confidence in their wares they would hesitate to call attention to them. For advertising rigidly tests the maker, the seller and the merchandise Business so tested, and found not wanting, is prosperous.

It is through advertising that the excellent things of the world are brought to the attention of those who are seeking for the best and most economical way to spend their money

The Streetsville Review

IF WE ONLY UNDERSTOOD

If we knew the cares and trials,
Knew the efforts all in vain,
And the bitter disappointment,
Understood the loss and gain—
Would the grim eternal roughness
Seem—I wonder—just the same?
Should we help where now we hinder?
Should we pity where we blame?

Ah! we judge each other harshly,
Knowing not life's hidden force—
Knowing not the fount of action
Is less turbulent at its source;
Seeing not amid the evil
All the golden grain of good;
And we'd love each other better
If we only understood.

Could we judge all deeds by motifs
That surround each other's lives,
See the naked heart and spirit,
Know what spur the action gives,
Often we would find it better;
Purer than we judge we should;
We should love each other better
If we only understood.

—Rudyard Kipling

Children Left Alone

In a little house in a back street two children are awaiting Mother's and Dad's return. They are being helped by a friendly organization but there can be no home for them until their parents come back.

Where are the parents? For many months they have been struggling for lost health and strength in the Toronto Hospital for Consumptives. They have benefited greatly, as so many hundreds do, from the quietness, fresh air, kindly nursing and medical attention.

"Able to walk to the dining-room for two meals a day now" is the proud boast of the husband and father. But a short time ago he could not be moved from his bed. A few months from now, who knows, he may be back again taking up the burden of the home.

Such work as this has great economic value to the community as well as opening the only way from misery and despair to hundreds of the consumptive poor. The hospital greatly needs your help. Will you please send a gift to Mr. A. E. Ames, 223 College St., Toronto.

COMMUNITY CLUB

The last meeting of the club was held at the home of Mrs. C. May, with a good turn out of members and several visitors. The programme consisted of readings and recitations, and an instructive paper given by Mrs. A. May. A contest was then put on by the committee in charge, and was won by Mrs. May Workman, after which the hostess served the club lunch.

The next meeting will be held at Mrs. Henry Campbell's, Wednesday, November 25th, at two o'clock. Members please come prepared to quilt.

LET US SMILE

Visitor—"Well, Joe, how do you like your new little sister?"

Joe—"Oh, she's all right. I guess; but there are lots of things we needed worse."

James, aged six, who had been taken for a visit to his grandmother's, sat looking at her for some time and suddenly remarked, "Granma, what are those lines on your brow?"

Grandmother—"Those are lines of time, my boy."

James, turning to his mother, said: "What time is it on your brow, mother?"

ENGAGEMENTS

Mrs. Henry Bentley, Trafalgar, announces the engagement of her daughter, Dolly Irene, to Mr. Frank U. Stevenson, only son of Mr. Usher and the late Mrs. Stevenson of Streetsville, Ont. The marriage will take place quietly the latter part of November.

THE

TULE MARSH MURDER

STORY OF A MISSING ACTRESS AND THE TAXING OF WITS TO EXPLAIN HER FATE.

BY NANCY BARR MAVITY.

SYNOPSIS

Don Ellsworth's wife, the former actress Sheila O'Shay, disappears. Dr. Cavanaugh, criminal psychologist, learns that their married life has been very unhappy.

Peter Piper, a Herald reporter while trying to see Dr. Cavanaugh, meets Barbara Cavanaugh, and finds she was engaged to Don Ellsworth before his marriage. An unidentified body found in the tule marsh is identified as the body of Sheila O'Shay. Barbara faints when she hears this.

Mrs. Kane, Sheila's maid, is arrested and admits that her mistress forced Ellsworth to marry her by threatening a breach of promise. Peter and Dr. Cavanaugh find that the breach of promise papers have been taken from Sheila's safe, but discover a threatening letter signed "David Orme." Peter finds Orme at a tourist camp.

Forgetting caution, Peter's gaze shifted, startled, from the man's hand to his face. It was a surprising voice to come from a ragged fugitive, hiding under an alias, with murder in the background. It was low, vibrant, modulated, giving to the simplest words a hint of music.

Peter knew with instant absolute assurance that a man with a voice like that might commit murder, but he would never stab an unarmed man with a dirty knife. He slid into a seat on the bench beside Orme and leaned his elbow on the table.

"It would be," he smiled companionably. "It's a funny thing about people who change their names always keeping the same initials. In fact, the tendency is so familiar that I should think by this time everyone would take pains to avoid it. By the way, why didn't you clear out?"

"I didn't have the money," the man said simply.

Peter groaned. There surged over him an irrational impulse to protect this man from the trap which he himself had laid, and into which the victim had stepped with such blind, unhesitating promptness. It was too easy!

"You ought to have a guardian!" he exclaimed almost angrily; and then, almost gently, "It's a good thing I found you."

Suppose this babe had been pounced upon by men from the homicide squad, with their "sweating" methods and "strong-arm" tactics—it would be like seeing a rabbit torn piecemeal by dogs. Peter quite forgot that the man beside him was sought as a dangerous character—a slayer.

"But you haven't told me yet why you wanted to find me." There was not a trace of fear in the low voice, nor any combativeness.

Peter leaned forward and peered at the face before him with his bright, near-sighted gray eyes before answering. It was a worn and sensitive face, young and yet ravaged; a face with delicate, clearly modelled features and dark sunken eyes. The perfectly shaped head had the smiting beauty of a profile on a Greek coin.

And this was the man whom Ethel had dismissed as a "sickly looking fellow!" If sickness was there, it was a sickness of the soul. The curved lips, drooping slightly at the corners, the dark, steady eyes with their depths of pain, did not suggest weakness so much as the helplessness of one who is an alien in the world where he must live. There was a permanent bewilderment in those eyes—the eyes of a baffled poet thrust into a world of ugly prose in which he could never be at home, bruised and broken and still wondering. A man like that, wounded beyond endurance, might strike to kill—and still not understand what it was all about.

"Surely you know," Peter said at last, speaking patiently as if to a child, "that you are under suspicion of the murder of Mrs. Ellsworth."

The curved lips tightened into a hard, straight line. The face before him became as still, as expressionless as if it were chiselled in stone.

"I don't know any Mrs. Ellsworth." The voice took on a remote metallic ring, as if each word were the dropping of a coin.

Peter stared a moment. Then he remembered something—something that had puzzled him.

"But you knew Sheila O'Shay?" he asked breathlessly.

"Yes, oh, yes—Sheila O'Shay." The words were hardly more than an audible sigh. "A great many people knew Sheila O'Shay!"

His hands were suddenly flung outward on the table in a singularly defenseless gesture. The knife, unnoticed, slid across the boards and fell noiselessly to the ground. The fat woman and her tumultuous offspring had wandered away out of sight.

"Yes," Peter said sternly, "but you wrote Sheila O'Shay a threatening letter. I don't know why you didn't take any pains to disguise it, but you didn't. Then you hung around outside the house, lying in wait for her. Sheila O'Shay was found murdered—and you are out here, hiding under an assumed name. You're absolutely no good as a fugitive, I'll admit—I could have done a lot better myself—but that's no sign you didn't do it. You trembled all over when I spoke to you."

"Oh, but that was before I knew you!" Orme's face broke into a radiant, confiding smile of sheer delight. "You're so very likeable, you know!" By the way, I don't think you're a policeman, are you?"

"No. I'm not," Peter said harshly. "But I'm just as bad. I'm going to take you to jail."

He wanted to take this unaccountable young man by the shoulders and shake him—shake him into a realization of the seriousness of the situation. It was like seeing a child watch the house burn down and clap his hands at the pretty fire.

"Well, that can't be helped, I suppose," Orme acquiesced.

"You'd have done better to face the music in the first place, if you couldn't get away any better than this," Peter said crossly. "You've made an awful mess of things."

"Yes," the young man nodded his head gravely. "I know—I do that often. I'm always making a mess of things."

"But hardly with your life in the balance!"

"Does it matter? Not a great deal, I think." Orme's tone was not in the least bitter. He might have been commenting on the prospect of rain.

"I'm afraid you'll wake up too late and find that it does!" Peter raged.

"Well, don't let it bother you. It's my—er, potential funeral, after all!" Again that winning, sunny smile, like a child watching the mounting flames. Against his will, Peter found himself smiling back.

"I won't say that whatever you say will be used against you, because you'll be just putty in the hands of the police, anyway. But would you mind telling me—did you really kill her?"

"Maybe so," the young man said. "But that will be for the police to find out."

And this, through all the long drive back to town, was the last word that Peter had from him.

CHAPTER XXXII.

"Did you put up any money on me?"

Peter threw his hat into the nearest armchair and leaned forward to examine the top of the desk, but the familiar nickel was not in evidence.

"No," said Dr. Cavanaugh. "The sporting element would be lacking, unless I elaborated a system of odds. I'd hate to have you on my trail, young man—or perhaps this is what you call being on my trail already?"

The doctor's clear brown eyes smiled with warm friendliness into Peter's as he pulled forward a chair.

"Oh, no, I've just got into the habit of consulting you. I hope I'm not making a nuisance of myself."

"I've no doubt you hope it. But even if you were a nuisance, you would regretfully persist."

"I suppose I would," Peter admitted.

"Well, then, if it's any comfort to you, I'm really not particularly busy at the moment and you may help yourself to the cigars. It's rather lucky for me that I've retired from active practice—you might not leave me much opportunity to collect from my patients."

"I'm glad I'm not bothering too awfully" Peter said cheerfully, ignoring the box of cigars which Dr. Cavanaugh extended and pulling forth his inevitable crushed package of cigarettes. "Because, you see, I do feel sort of responsible for this babe in the woods I turned over to the police."

Dr. Cavanaugh smiled ever so slightly.

"Do the police look on him as a babe in the woods?" he inquired.

"They do not," Peter said emphatically. "As a matter of fact, I'm surprised at him myself. Honestly, I felt as if I were throwing him to the wolves. It had to be done, of course, but I didn't think they'd need to be half as violent as they probably would be, on general principles, to get everything out of him. And yet there he sits and says absolutely nothing.

"They've questioned him in relays, 24 hours at a stretch. They've planted a man in the same cell with him to gain his confidence. They've done everything but light a bonfire under him, and they're getting annoyed."

"You seem rather pleased about it," the doctor observed noncommittally.

"I can't help being proud of his grit. It's a perfectly useless line to take, and it'll only make it harder for him in the end. The district attorney has got to the point where he's out for blood. Why, they even held before his eyes a copy of the 'Herald' with headlines about Sheila's murder and made him stare at it for hours—'Butcher' Joe crumpled under that stunt two years ago, you remember—and he just sits there, looking as if he were somewhere else.

"It isn't as if he were an old hand; a 12-year-old child could have done better at covering his tracks. He really needs a guardian, and since I found him, I sort of feel that I'm it. At least I want him to have a fair show. He isn't the ordinary criminal type at all."

"Among all the things we don't know about Sheila O'Shay's murderer," Dr. Cavanaugh murmured between puffs of his cigar, "we do know this one thing—that he wasn't an ordinary criminal."

Wheat Is Up

The price of wheat has riz,
And glorious news it is.
It means, you see,
There will shortly be
Some farm relief for biz.

The farmer in the dell
Will soon begin to yell
For sugar and spice
And everything nice,
And radio sets as well.

The wheels of trade will turn
So city folks can earn,
And every one here
Will whoop and cheer,
As far as I can learn.

Gardeners are stated to live longer than men in many other trades, not only because of their healthy work, but also because their contact with Nature gives them a saner interest in life.

Film Displays to Aid British Teachers

Mechanical Devices Are Exhibited at Imperial Institute

London.—That the teacher's task will soon be lightened of much of its routine drudgery, leaving him free to carry out the more personal side of education, is the conclusion forced upon one by the exhibition of mechanical aids to learning which was recently held at the Imperial Institute here, writes a correspondent of The Christian Science Monitor.

The accuracy and speed with which foreign languages could be taught by the help of the gramophone were demonstrated by Prof. J. J. Findlay. Film displays were given illustrating with remarkable clarity lessons in botany, biology, history, geography and so forth. The time of the teacher could be cut down by 50 per cent. and the impressions gained by the pupils were said to be far clearer by the use of such methods.

Apparatus was shown depicting the value of vocational guidance. By the aid of suitable testing appliances children have been launched upon careers suitable to their tastes and abilities. The majority of young people thus guided have had higher pay, have obtained earlier promotion, and have had fewer changes of occupation. There have hardly been any dismissals, and 80 per cent. are satisfied with their work. Of those who after guidance obtained employment other than that recommended, less than 40 per cent. were satisfied with their jobs.

An interesting innovation was the showing of a "talkie" film giving a lesson in phonetics by Prof. A. Lloyd James. This film shows the method of teaching clear English speech. Epidiascopes, daylight screens, and other pictorial aids were in view, as also were map-making devices, decimal calculating machines and lunar calendars. There was also historical time maps which can be superimposed one upon another, string diagrams for teaching geometry, astronomical models, and a rector-trolley apparatus for illustration and experiment in dynamics. A number of useful conferences were organized in connection with the exhibition.

The Watchers

O you who sit in safe and sheltered places,
Serene of face and of unclouded mind,
Thinking you read what lies behind the faces
Of youth, which you have left so far behind:
Our fight is yours—who thought you had outgrown it—
Our part is in the fray,
Yours, who so oft before have known it,
To watch and wait and pray.

Sunday School Lesson

November 22. Lesson VIII—Paul in Rome—Acts 28: 16-24, 30, 31. Golden Text—I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me.—Philippians 4: 13.

ANALYSIS.

I. ROME AT LAST! Acts 28:16.

II. THE JEW FIRST, Acts 28: 17-29.

III. A WORLD RELIGION, Acts 28: 30, 31.

INTRODUCTION—Paul, at last within sight of his long-sought goal, was once more overcome with depression. Wonderfully preserved from the hands of men and from perils by the sea, he was coming now to the critical moment when he must stand before Caesar to defend himself and uphold Christianity at the centre of the world. Three years had gone since he had written his letter to the Roman Christians. What would their attitude be by now?

One can understand the joy with which he found a body of Roman Christian brethren waiting for him at the Appian Market, forty miles from the city. At the Three Taverns, ten miles on, he met another group. This evidence of confidence and love dispelled his gloom. He thanked God and took courage, 28: 15. He saw, in these Christians, the evidence that the kingdom was advancing, even in the shadow of Caesar's throne. It was a good omen. Then, too, Paul, like other heroic souls, needed sympathy and encouragement. Luther, going up to the Diet of Worms, was braced for his ordeal by the knight who slapped him on the back as he passed him, and spoke a hearty word of cheer. So Paul came to Rome at last.

I. ROME AT LAST! Acts 28:16.

Rome was the climax toward which Paul's missionary labors pointed. Christianity, once firmly established there, would make its way quickly to every corner of the Roman world. Although arriving there a prisoner, Paul was given considerable liberty. The good reports of Festus and Agrippa and of the kindly Julius who brought him, won for him much leniency. Instead of geing lodged in jail, he was permitted to rent a house and live there, chained to his soldier-guard, 28: 16-20.

Chained to his guard, Paul preached his gospel. The frequent change of soldiers gave him an opportunity for reaching many. Philippians 1:13 suggests how he turned to account even his imprisonment. To him a class of only one pupil was not a class to be despised. Through it the gospel came to Caesar's household.

II. THE JEW FIRST, Acts 28: 17-29.

Paul was not the man to let the grass grow under his feet. Having secured lodgings, he immediately got in touch with the leading men of the Roman synagogue, v. 17. He had already met the Roman Christians, or some of them. This first conference with the leading Jews was not so much an evangelistic effort as a prudent preparation for his trial. It was important to learn their attitude—and, if possible, secure, if not their support, at least their neutrality. His appeal to Caesar, he told them, meant no attack upon his own people, the Jews, v. 19. He was simply defending himself. He had not revolted against either the nation or the religion of the Jews. His message was not the destruction of their ancestral beliefs but their fulfilment. It was for the hope of Israel and not for its destruction that he wore his chains, v. 20.

The leaders were non-committal. They had received no official word, they said. They had heard nothing. Probably they knew more than they admitted. Their reference to "this sect" in v. 22 indicates as much. One can imagine the next day spent in testifying, disputing, persuading, the Rabbis with their rolls verifying the references to the prophets—the brave preacher and teacher trying to win his own countrymen for Jesus Christ. The usual results followed. The crowds were sifted—as they always are by faithful preaching. For one, Jesus may be a "sure foundation"; for another a "rock of offence." As everywhere, the Jews turned their back on the gospel. The gospel turned to the Gentiles. For the Jews, it was the final refusal.

III. A WORLD RELIGION, Acts 28: 30, 31.

Our last glimpse of Paul shows him preaching his uniform gospel to the cosmopolitan population of Rome. When, long ago he prayed to see Rome also, did he dream of crowded squares, thronged basilicas to hear his message? During the two years while he waited for the accusers from Jerusalem who never came, he preached in a prison. The crowds came to him.

The Book of Acts ends abruptly. Probably there was nothing more to tell just then. Luke may have intended to write more later on. From other sources we learn that Paul was acquitted at the first trial. After an extended missionary tour he was brought back to Rome. His second trial, four years after the first, proved fatal. One winter's day he was led out on the Ostian Way and beheaded at the modern Tre Fontane—having fought a good fight.

A Little Poem

A little laughter, as a while we tarry
Upon this weary road we've christened "life"
A little ache, as friends go passing onwards
Leaving behind this world of pain and strife.

A little thoughtfulness, a little wisdom,
A little gentle pressure of the hand.
A tender word sometimes will ease a burden
Will often help more than we understand.

A little aid, when things are getting muddled—
A helping hand to some one sorely driven,
A word or two by someone gently spoken,
Oft brings to us a little glimpse of heaven.

—Nina Stevenson, in "Animal Life."

Art Traded For Food

Stockholf.—An art clearing house where paintings and sculptures may be exchanged for food, furniture or other merchandise has opened in Stockholm under the name of "Art for Goods."

Among the founders is Anshelm Schultzberg, prominent Swedish painter, who two years ago arranged an exhibit of American art in Stockholm.

Landscapes, still lifes and portraits are offered in exchange for lamps, bicycles, kitchen utensils, talking machines and other practical objects.

A similar clearing house has been established in Copenhagen, where, as Alma Louise Olson recently reported in the art columns, "an artist can barter a flaming sunset for a filling that will ease the ache of a throbbing tooth or a still-life in silverpoint for a standing order of his weekly portion of lamb chops or steaks."

Sites of Old Forts To Be Preserved

English Writer Recalls Many Historic Events in Canadian History

That North America has many historic ruins of much interest, especially along the great unfortified border between the United States and Canada, was the subject of an article by W. J. Banks in the Landmark, organ of the English-Speaking Union. We read:

Fort Anne in Annapolis Valley

"Long before the Pilgrim Fathers landed at the Plymouth Rock there was a flourishing French village at Annapolis Royal, Novia Scotia, then known as Port Royal. Here the first ships ever built on the continent unfolded their sails to the winds of the Atlantic, and here the first mill was stream. The founders of the colony, turned by the waters of the nearby de Monts, Champlain and Poutrincourt, had passed to their reward before the Mayflower came to New England. The French had come in 1604, and built their first Acadian fort on a site now marked by a cairn some seven miles from the present Annapolis Royal.

"Six times from then to its final passing under the British dominion in 1710 Port Royal changed hands between the rival powers. In 1613 it fell for the first time to an expedition from Jamestown, Va., under Captain Samuel Argall. In 1635 it was again in French hands and the second fort of Fort Royal was erected on the present site of Fort Anne. A part of the rock and timber foundations of one of the bastions of this building is still to be seen. The present structure was built in 1695 and on its final occupation by General Francis Nicholson's forces from New Eigland in 1710, its name was changed to Fort Anne in honor of the reigning sovereign.

Larges Part Still in Good shape

Fort Anne is situated at the entrance of the world-famed Annapolis Valley amid scenes of the greatest beauty. It was built as a square earthwork, with four bastions, and surrounded by a dry ditch and embankment for musketeers, and a large part of it is still in good shape. The fort and the surrounding land have been set aside as a national park, and there are few more interesting or significant sites on the continent. No other has seen more dramatic and momentous events. The departure of the Acadians in the expulsion of 1755—immortalized by Longfellow in 'Evangeline'—was an incident in its history.

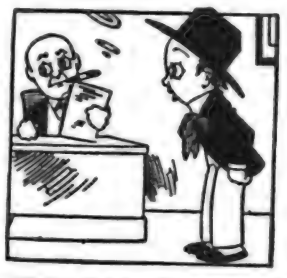
"Fort Chambly, twenty miles southwest of Montreal on a conspicuous headland of the Richelieu River, is another ruin of great value, whose preservation has been assured by government action. The first Fort Chambly, built of wood by Jacques de Chambly, a Captain of the Carignan Regiment in 165, was planned in order to resist the raids of the Iroquois and to serve as a headquarters for the settlers of the Richelieu country. The Red Men, of course, simply gave the fort a wide berth and continued their depredations as before. In 1709 the present fort, a formidable stone structure, was erected to resist English aggression. It is interesting to note that the energetic colonists had already built the fort before the vacillating home government had authorized the undertaking.

"For generations Chambly was one of the most important of the border fortresses. It passed into English hands in 1760. The Americans under Montgomery occupied it in 1775 and burned everything combustible when they evacuated in 1776. The following year the fort was repaired and in it American prisoners were incarcerated for the remainder of the war. During the War of 1812 Fort Chambly was a base of operations in the Champlain country. The expedition to Plattsburg started from it. During the abortive rebellion of 1837 in Canada the fort was again used as a prison, and it was not until 1851 that it was finally abandoned as a military retreat. Subsequent to that date it was neglected for some time and was falling into ruin until the appointment of a curator and the beginning of preservative operations in 1889.

Canadians and the War of 1812

"Americans and Englishmen are inclined to make little of the War of 1812-14, which does not loom large in the history of their countries, but to Canada the war was of much greater significance. It must be remembered that a sweeping American victory would probably have meant the annexation of Canada by the United States, and in such a case there would have been no Canadian nation to-day. Such names as Lundy's Lane, Beaver Dam and Queenston Heights have almost as great a place in the heart of the Canadian patriot as have Valley Forge or Saratoga or Bunker Hill in that of his United States cousin.

"Many sites of events in this war, especially along the Niagara frontier, have been marked by the Canadian national parks branch and other agencies. One of the most notable is old Fort George, at Niagara-on-the-Lake, where a cairn has been erected to commemorate the battle of Fort George, which took place May 27, 1813. This was one of the most critical episodes of the campaign, and eventually resulted in the capture of the fort by the Americans, who held it for seven months before being forced to retreat across the river again.



"Parts of the fort are still in a good state of preservation, and descendants of the men who fought there in the opposing armies view them with prideful memories of the past, but happy in the conviction that never again will Canadians and Americans meet in armed conflict."

Cotton Stockings

For years it has been customary for sophomore students to rule what the freshmen must do or wear, but it has remained for second-year women students at Louisiana State College to set an excellent example by ruling that cotton stockings must be worn by first-year students, to help cotton prices. No loubt parents would appreciate also the economy involved if the rule should spread to other schools.—The Christian Science Monitor.

Unknown Warrior

By Muriel Stuart

In his arms he carried a morsel, a wisp of a baby,
A lily that somehow he had mysteriously fathered,
That flowered from his hunger and dirt.
Himself the sacrament broken daily to feed and enrich her.
And he carried her like a flag swinging brightly above his battle.
For she wore a gay little pelisse.

Round him stupendous cars rolled idle and fabulous women
Languid as wax in glass cases and men as polished as agates,
Bland and insufferably clean,
Viewing through half-shut eyes the blare and blink of the traffic.
And he, trundling on with his baby and passing the cenotaph,
Raised his unspeakable cap.

What reason had he to make that exquisite gesture of homage
As he passed that ironic stone, that stupid and meaningless symbol?
Him too, unnamed and unknown,
The world had pinned down with a stone on the breast, and as careless,
(But without saluting this soldier and the wreath that he carried)
Went rushing by in its cars.

1960: the Last War

(From Poetry)

Against the purple sky soft bombs were flowering,
Like poisoned orange poppies, Hissing light
Blossomed and guttered out. Bright sparks were showering,
Like falling stars. A silence thick as night
Swallowed the city. . . .
And his tired ears hurt.
He saw white smoke curl up the sky in scrawls.
The anti-aircraft guns began to spurt.
A dull roar rose like distant waterfalls.

Dull roaring broke in blasts of heavy thunder.
Black wings swooped. Loud propellers cut the sky.
Shells split the air. Skyscrapers ripped asunder.
Gas clouds swirled down. . . . His throat and eyes got dry.
His knees snapped. Something broke inside his head.
(Ten million died that day, the papers said.)

Precious Words

Lord Lister had many honors heaped upon him in later life. He was the first surgeon to use antiseptics, and his methods changed the whole practice of surgery and have been the means of saving countless lives.

In 1902 Lister was sworn a Privy Councillor on the occasion of King Edward's Coronation, which had been postponed owing to the King's operation for appendicitis.

What pleased him far more than the honor of being made a Privy Councillor, said Lister afterwards, was the fact that when his turn came to step forward to shake hands the King said: "Lord Lister I know well that if it had not been for you and your work I should not have been here to-day."

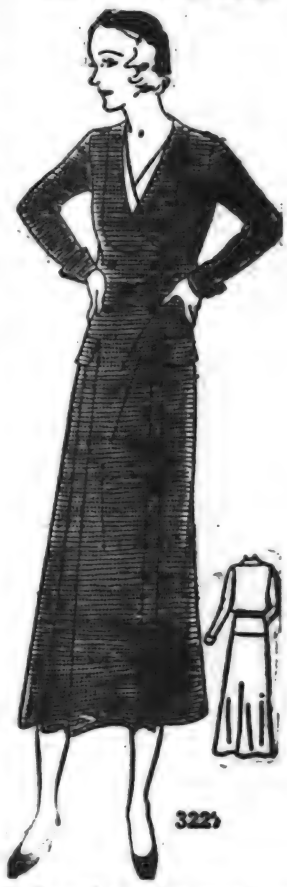
Power

O power to do! O baffled will!
O prayer and action! ye are one,
Who may not strive, may yet fulfil
The harder task of standing still,
And good but wished with God is done.
—Whittier.

Fashion Notes

Black and brown characterize smart gloves for street wear. White is used for dress, with rose-beige a close second, the latter owing its popularity to its power to blend with the eggplant and dark red shades. It will become more popular as the season advances. Suede is the popular leather.

Heavy sheers which include crepe-romaine, Elizabeth crepe, and crepe-delaine are being sponsored for dinner and formal afternoon. The smartest colors are rust, reddish brown, Persian rose, and green. Formal afternoon gowns are now worn eight inches from the floor.



The finest of silk-mesh hose in dark tones are being worn with the sheer wool dresses. Dark brown and black are favored.

Clips, buskles, and fancy buttons are much in evidence. Curtain-ring clips of sterling silver trim gown, hat, and purse. They may be worn in sets or singly.

COMMUNICATION

H. W. Hope, Esq.,
Reeve of Streetsville.
Dear Sir:

Since hearing of the change proposed to be made in the lighting system of our village by taking Hydro, we feel that we have been stung in the matter of being put to the expense of installing a bigger wheel, which it was hoped would do away with all complaints made in regards to poor light and power service. It has proved a very poor investment. It was argued by the council at that time that only a shortage of water would fail to produce the extra power needed.

The electric power plant was built to supply light and power, has served the town and will still do so for all lighting purposes. Therefore I do not see the need of a change, which most of us do not want and do not understand. These proposed changes do not meet the approval of the majority of the ratepayers who find themselves unable to afford the expense of more taxes or the expense of having their houses re-wired. As you say, there might be some house wiring which may be defective. I have lived in Streetsville nearly 40 years and have not known any defective wiring that caused trouble. The council is the only body of men holding up this proposition, as you seemingly have a by-law to prevent any one individual from changing to Hydro as they see fit—or as their up-to-date "turn the button" suits them. In order to have everything up-to-date and above board, just rescind that by-law and allow anyone that wants Hydro to connect up according to the agreement that the Hydro Commission has for country users, which, I think, would be fair to everyone, and leave the municipal plant as it is. The greater number of the people who have lived here all their lives have paid the greater part of the cost of the erection and up-keep of the power plant. The ones who can afford a big electric stove, vacuum cleaner, iron, washing machine and all the latest fads are only a small part of the real property owners and ratepayers, and some of them don't own one cent's worth of property and can just pick up and walk out of town any time and leave the rest to foot the bill, after this has gone through—if it does.

This is a very unfair proposition to bring to the ratepayers. It would mean another fleecing, and, goodness knows, our taxes are too high now. The majority of the ratepayers are not going to stand for this imposition made upon them by the few who feel disposed to ask for it.

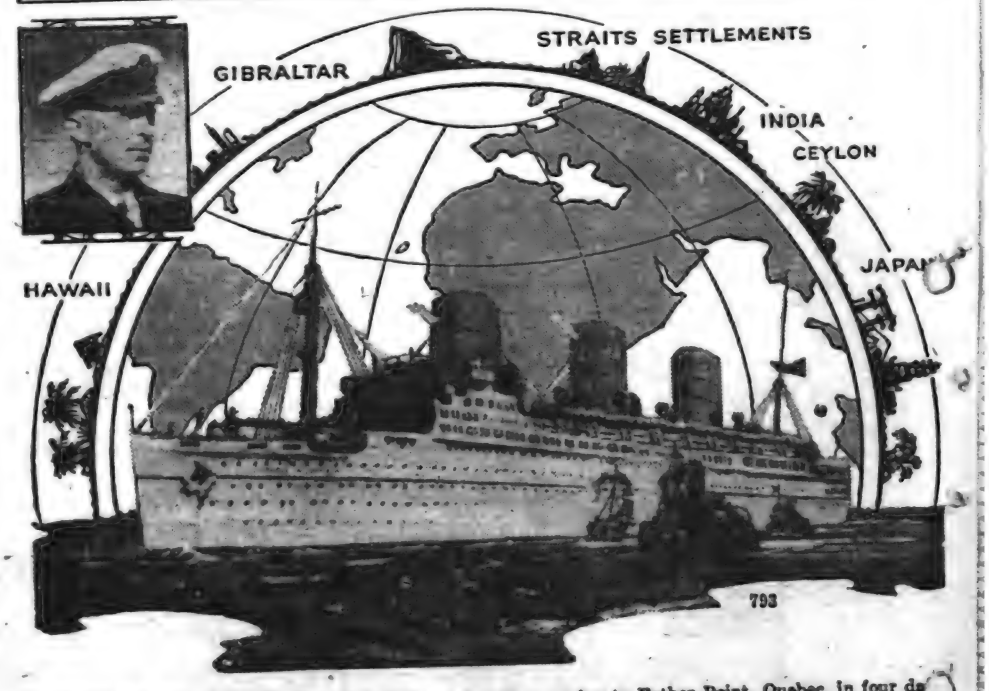
Rescind your by-law and let everyone who wants Hydro for their improvements take it the same as they do in the country. This is the fairest thing to do.

A RATEPAYER.

Nita was worried . . . she could not imagine where she had lost her bracelet—in the hotel or on the journey home.

"I can't think what I could have done with it," she kept telling her mother.

"Why not telephone to the hotel," mother suggested. "It's after eight-thirty now and a call will only cost a few cents."



Imagine Nita's joy when the hotel clerk told her that the bracelet had been found in her room and would be mailed to her right away.

Thanks to her mother's suggestion, Nita's anxiety was relieved at once . . . and the cost of the call was considerably less than her taxi fare from the station.

Station-to-station ("anyone") calls between 7.00 p.m. and 8.30 p.m. local time are on the low evening rate. Between 8.30 p.m. and 4.30 a.m. they are on the "night rate" basis and still lower.

THE BELL TELEPHONE COMPANY OF CANADA

Cruises Around World After First Season

Tired, like any debutante after the hectic galeties of her first season, the young lady who, immediately after her presentation at the Court of King Neptune last May, became a leader of society, leaves shortly for a leisurely cruise around the world.

The young lady in question, the 42,500 ton Canadian Pacific liner "Empress of Britain" has just concluded her first Atlantic season during which her parties, amongst the most brilliant ever held on the Western Ocean, have been attended by more representatives of rank and fashion than Ward McAllister dreamed of.

Princes, Ambassadors, Earls, Viscounts, Baronets, Knights of many of the highest orders of chivalry and their ladies have vied for her favour; and the highest aristocracy of North America, the noble Iroquois Indians, paid their homage when they conferred Chieftainship upon Captain R. G. Latta (inset) commander of the Empress of Britain, and Commodore of the Canadian Pacific fleet.

Regaining the Blue Ribband of the Atlantic for the British Empire on her second voyage by making the crossing to Father Point, Quebec, in four days 12 hours, 30 minutes, thus breaking the previous continent to continent record by four hours and 36 minutes, the Empress of Britain did not rest on her laurels, and since that date has broken her own record on five other occasions. On her final voyage of the season she crossed in seven hours and 49 minutes less than the best record between Cherbourg and New York.

Starting December 3rd, from New York, the Empress will visit 30 ports before, after a complete circle of the world, she returns to the Atlantic. Her guests will bring back with them when they reach New York again, April 8th, 1932, fragrant memories of Madeira, Gibraltar, Algeria, Monaco, France, Italy, Greece, Palestine, Egypt, India, Ceylon, Sumatra, Java, Straits Settlements, Federated Malay States, Siam, the Phillippines, China, Japan, Hawaii, Panama and Cuba.

She will be the largest and fastest vessel ever to cruise around the world.

BOILS

In general, we think of germs as causing certain definite diseases such as diphtheria or typhoid fever. There are, however, other germs which are almost always present on or in the [illegible]. These seldom cause trouble if the skin is unbroken and if the individual's general health is maintained.

The unbroken healthy skin has several functions, among which is that of serving as a covering for the body, in which capacity it acts as a barrier to keep out germs which would cause trouble if they succeeded in penetrating the barrier and reaching the structures underneath.

The skin may be broken in many ways, as for example, when it is cut or scratched. Many small breaks occur which are not visible to the naked eye, but which nevertheless are large as compared with the germs which may gain entrance to the body through them.

The skin, as one organ of the body, reflects the general condition of the body. The skin cannot be healthy unless the whole body is healthy. Some diseases, such as diabetes, particularly influence the health of skin, and when these diseases occur, the power of the skin to resist the germs is lessened. Uncleanliness, and over-clothing which causes excessive perspiration and so irritates the skin, also lower its resistance.

A faulty diet, the use of greasy foods, upsets of the digestive tract and constipation are favourable to the germs. It would appear that these conditions and others, such as worry, over-fatigue and lack of fresh air, reduce the general resistance of the body to the assaults of germs.

When germs gain a foothold for one or others of the reasons mentioned they set up an inflammation which shows itself as redness and swelling, and which is felt as pain. This inflammation may be and usually does go on to the formation of pus, and so these germs are known as pus-producing germs.

Boils are infections in that they are caused by living germs which may be spread to other parts of the body or to other persons. This is the reason why, in treating boils, strict, cleanliness is necessary. Considerable harm may follow the squeezing, of boils as this is apt to break down the barrier formed and spread the infection. The boil should not be touched with the hands. A carbuncle is really a large deeply-seated boil and it is, therefore, more painful and more serious than the ordinary boil.

The prevention of boils lies in giving attention to general health through proper food, regular elimination, fresh air and exercise, by keeping the skin whole, clean and healthy, by avoiding over-clothing of the body, and by regular bathing.

Proper treatment includes the same attention to general health, and treatment of boils by a physician who may also use vaccines to raise the resistance of the sufferer. Proper treament limits the spread of infection and avoids possible dangers.

Peel County Council Now in Session

Meeting for the final session of the year, Peel County Council began work on Monday at 10 a.m. this week, instead of at 2 p.m. as has been customary.

One of the first resolutions moved was one of regret for the passing of Lina Schrag, Peel County newspaper woman who had covered county council for county and Toronto papers for some ten years past. A motion was introduced by David Moran and passed that the resolution be recorded in the official minutes.

James Shearer, representative of the Department of Agriculture, delivered a detailed report of the work done by the department during the year. A short course was held at Ebenezer, a dramatic series put on instead of the inter-branch debates which formerly occupied the winter, Streetsville being the winner of the dramatic competition in which six Junior Institutes and Junior Farmers branches took part. The musical festival, held at Port Credit in May, was carried through successfully and arrangements are already under way for another, to be held in Brampton next May. The Calf and Colt Clubs were organized, with a membership of 70 boys of 'teen age. Home garden and canning clubs were organized, in which 50 boys and 30 girls competed. Seventy-two schools took part in the six school fairs of the county. In the county plowing match 57 plowmen from Peel and near-by counties took part.

The judging competition was well carried out and drew large entries, 95 boys and 71 girls contesting the prizes. $463 was paid to Peel farmers buying their first pure bred bulls, and educational talks on breeding given. Each month 900 samples of milk were tested at the department for farmers of the county.

Grants to the branch during the past year were $1,510.

Reeve W. J. Beatty, Brampton, told council that the total paid in the county for pensions since the Old Age Pensions Act came into force was $117,407. The Board of Peel County has had, in the past year, 91 applications, of which 76 were granted, bringing the present number of pensioners to 291, as opposed to 276 in 1930. Although the 76 applications granted would seem to make for a larger increase than is noted in the report, deaths and removals amongst the pensioners has brought the number of those receiving pensions to the figure given. The county paid, in 1930, $10,336.22. The sum for 1931 was $13,145.18, bringing the total payments to $23,481.47. The board on pensions in the county was highly commended by the provincial investigator, Mr. Asbury, when he made a tour of inspection during the summer, very few of the applications necessitating reconsideration.

The House of Refuge is also reported in excellent condition, both in finances and in respect to the well-being of the inmates. Under W. E. Yarranton and Mrs. Yarranton, the budget has been so well handled that no transfer of funds to the house has been necessary during the past year. Receipts from the Pensions Act were $2,142.83 from Peel, and $5,025.10 from Halton, which with $2,889.96 for board, miscellaneous receipts and $184.10 raised from stock proved sufficient for the needs of the house.

Expenditures included $3,195.30 for salaries, $2,630.91 for supplies, insurance, heating and light charges of $1,475.90, together with miscellaneous expenditures and capital purchases. The furnace of the home was repaired and is rated up-to-date at present. Five dairy cows were purchased and produce ten gallons of milk a day, with a large enough surplus to produce fifty pounds of butter per week. Seven beef cattle were purchased to be fattened and killed for winter consumption.

The Mothers' Allowance Board reported that there are now 27 persons receiving assistance to the amount of $880 monthly. Last year the board expended $850 monthly for the same number of persons. Six meetings have been held during the year and eight applications passed.

A by-law was brought in by Reeve Hare, of Port Credit, to borrow for the meeting of current expenditure and debenture payments the sum of $78,500 at five and one-half per cent. interest.

On recommendation of the committee on miscellaneous matters a request for a grant from the Sick Children's Hospital, Toronto, was filed.

Reeve L. H. Pallett brought up the question of reductions in salary for county officials at Tuesday's session, and in reply, David Moran, deputy-reeve of Chinguacousy, suggested that the question be laid aside for the council of 1932 to deal with. Mr. Pallett felt that the present council should handle the question, but no action was taken at that day's sitting.

"LET YOUR DOLLARS SERVE CANADA" IS SLOGAN FOR LOAN

"Let your dollars serve Canada" is the slogan for the appeal which the Dominion Government has launched to raise $150,000,000 "to promote the economic and financial welfare of Canada", as it is aptly put in the official circular containing details of the 1931 National Service Loan.

The offering of this considerable amount of bonds to investors is one of the most important financial undertakings this country has ever witnessed, certainly since the war days when Victory bonds were offered in large amounts and readily subscribed to save the country from foreign aggression.

Now the necessity has arisen of saving the country from economic consequences of an extraordinary character, and that the public will respond with the same promptness is as unquestioned as when Canada stood on the verge of a cataclysm in the darkest days of the Great War.

Owing to world-wide conditions, economic problems are confronting Canada, which require the public to respond with the same promptness and in the same measure as when Canada faced the darkest days of the Great War. That is why the present appeal for funds is being made.

One of the important features of this issue is that the public will receive a little more than 5 per cent. on their investment. The bonds are being issued to mature at the end of five years, according to the wishes of investors. The five year bonds are priced at 99¼ and the ten year maturity at 99. Both classes can be obtained in denominations of $500 and $1,000, but the five year issue can also be obtained in $100 lots, which will appeal to people of modest means.

The interest dates are May 15th and November 15th, the interest rate starting to accrue from Nov. 15th, 1931. Fully registered bonds of larger denominations running up to as high as $100,000 are also obtainable with the interest payable on these direct to the holder by Government cheque.

All the banks in Canada and their branch offices are authorized to accept subscriptions as well as all recognized bond dealers throughout the Dominion.

General feeling in well-informed financial circles is that there will be adequate response on the part of the investing public to make this issue a great success. There is profound confidence among bankers and other leaders in the realm of finance, that Canadians can be depended upon to back up their country with their money when call is made for their assistance.

That there is a large amount of money awaiting favourable opportunity for investment in some high-class security, such as a Government bond provides, is unquestioned. The public have savings in the various banks aggregating upwards of $1,500,000,000. This total approximates an increase of $49,000,000 over the figures of a year ago, which goes to show that the public are displaying pronounced habits of thrift, one of the healthiest signs possible for any country to exhibit.

Besides this source of purchasing power, it is stated on good authority that trust companies hold a substantial reservoir of funds which would come into service in connection with just such an offering as the Dominion of Canada is making through the Department of Finance at Ottawa.

These are encouraging factors which ought to crown the offering with success if the public at large second the efforts of financial organizations of the country.

Mr. O'Neill was crossing the Dundas Highway at the time, carrying a pail of water. He did not see the approaching motor, and the driver had no time to avoid an accident. Mr. O'Neill sustained a compound fracture of both bones of the left leg, a fracture of the left wrist, and injuries to his back, spine and pelvis.

McKenzie rushed him to the office of Dr. W. H. Godfrey, Cooksville, where the aged man was given medical attention. He was taken then to St. Joseph's Hospital, but he failed to rally.

The driver of the car was not held by Traffic Officer Joseph Palmer, Islington, who investigated. Mr. O'Neill was slightly hard of hearing. His daughter, with whom he lived, was away at the time of the accident, and was not accompanying him across the highway as she usually did.

Born in County Wicklow, Ireland, 85 years ago, Mr. O'Neill came to Erindale with his parents at the age of nine.

At 14 he moved to Streetsville, where he worked on the farm of W. McGrath, later taking charge of 800 acres of land. 50% Duty Levied By Britain On Lengthy List of Goods

Typewriter Industry for Toronto, Immediate Result of British Move—Increase of Exports Expected

London.—Britain's new anti-dumping measure was declared to become effective on November 25th. The text of the "Abnormal Importations Act" issued on Saturday showed duties of 50 per cent., based on value.

Dominion goods will not be taxed under the new legislation. The Dominions will have full preference.

Must Be Made in Canada

Some exception in the case of Canada might be made, however, according to rumors here, to block the possibility of United States firms sending parts of articles to Canada and assembling them there for shipment to take advantage of the preference.

The order imposing these taxes was made under the terms of the anti-dumping measure which earlier in the day received royal assent after having passed all stages in Parliament.

The measure gives the Board of Trade authority to impose duty as high as 100 per cent. ad valorem on certain classes of manufacture and partially manufactured goods.

The Board of Trade is satisfied that in every case listed importations into the United Kingdom had been in abnormal quantities.

Subject to 50 Per Cent. Levy

The followng articles will be subjected to 50 per cent. duties:

Metal furniture, cutlery, including surgical instruments and safety razors; hand tools, other than agricultural implements; vacuum cleaners, wireless sets and the component parts thereof, excepting valves, permanent magnets or batteries; typewriters.

Other articles affected include: Woollen manufactures, stockings and hose of silk or artificial silk, handkerchiefs, wholly or partly of linen; men's and boys' overcoats, mantles, suits, coats, waistcoats and trousers; all gloves except rubber gloves, paper and paper manufactures, tires and tubes, heels and soles, linoleum, oilcloth and similar floor coverings.

The new duties also apply to all kinds of perfumery and cosmetics, including tooth pastes, creams, deodorants, sachets, lipstick, rouge, grease paint, lotions and soaps.

Toilet requisites also are affected, such as powder puffs, nail buffers, clippers, files and tweezers.

The order, designated as "Number One," was signed by Rt. Hon. Walter Runciman, president of the Board of Trade.

Harmsworth Cup Course Changed

Speed Boat Races to Be Held in Lake St. Clair—Longer Heats

Detroit.—If the Harmsworth Trophy races are held next year, they will be run over a new ten-mile triangular course in Lake St. Clair, where for ten years Gar Wood has defended the famous plaque.

Officials of the Yachtsmen's Association of America announced over the week-end that a course on Lake St. Clair had been approved by the executive and race committees of the association, and would be used for the 1932 events, providing they are run next year.

Designed to meet the requirements of increased speed in the high-powered speedboats, the new course allows gradual curves and lengthy straightaways. The previous course in the Detroit River was but five miles in length.

The officials also said that new Harmsworth rules had lengthened the course, and that next year's race probably would be 40 nautical miles for each heat, instead of 30, as in the past. The new rules also provide for a straightaway of two miles between the starting line and the first turn.

No intimation as to whether Kaye Don, whose boat was wrecked while making a turn in the race this year, would be a challenger in 1932 was given.

25 Per cent. of Population Are Enrolled in Schools

Toronto.—Approximately one-quarter of the population of Canada are students at schools, colleges and universities, according to an official compilation. The total is 2,490,623, and the average cost of maintaining a student is about $66 a year, so that the national bill runs to more than $165,361,198. The staff of teachers, men and women, numbers, 83,144.

It is pointed out in the report that the proportion of pupils in the upper grades is increasing from year to year, having risen from 8 per cent. in 1921 to 13 per cent. in 1930 and a considerably higher figure this year. It has been found that the difficulty experienced by older pupils in obtaining employment during the depression has induced many of them to remain in school, or even to return to classes after an absence of a year or more.

The proportion of male teachers is 21.1 per cent. for the whole country. During the war this figure sank to 15.5 per cent., and it has returned now to the normal of recent years.

Deaths Total 37 In Mine Disaster

Five Are Given Up For Lost in British Mine Explosion

Doncaster, Eng. — The death toll from the Bentley mine explosion continues to mount. Thirty-seven miners are dead, no hope is entertained for five others who are missing and seven are in hospital in serious conditions. The explosion, which was followed by fire, took place Friday.

When a violent blast shook the mine the men were trapped hundreds of feet below the surface. Gas filled the tunnels and fire swept from one end to the other.

The King and Queen telegraphed their sympathy to the survivors of the victims and to the injured.

Heroism played a conspicuous part in the rescue work. Herbert Smith, veteran ex-president of the Miners' Federation, was underground in the gas-laden tunnels for more than three hours. When a call was made for 25 volunteers to form a rescue party, more than 100 men stepped forward, fighting for places.

Wolves Besiege Farmers In North Bay District

North Bay, Ont.—Wolves, although plentiful in this area, are becoming particularly bold near the little village of Warren, forty miles west of North Bay. Recently the few families have had sleepless nights listening to the packs howling about the doors

The Raymond family, living about a mile out of the village, had a particularly terrifying experience. Although it was late in the evening, Mr. Raymond had not returned from work in the village and Mrs. Raymond and her five children were alone in the house. Setting out to get the cows, Mrs. Raymond was terrified by the howling of a pack in the woods near by and she rushed back to the house.

Later in the evening, Raymond, coming home, went out for the cows himself. Hurriedly herding the cattle, he started back. The wolves took up the chase. Raymond reached home none too soon. The wolves stopped on the edge of the clearing just behind them. He could see their shadowy forms moving in the bush. Their eyes glared in the darkness. All that night the frightened family heard the howling around the house and in the morning the imprint of their feet were found all over the soft soil in the yard.

Philadelphia Car Lines Speeded-Up

Philadelphia.— Streamline designs are now being applied to street cars.

Ten bullet-like cars—the first to be built in America—have now been put into service on the 13-mile suburban line between Philadelphia and Morristown.

They have a top speed of 100 miles an hour, and a "cruising speed" of 83 miles an hour, but they are being held down to 70 on the straightaways at present.

As the new cars went into service recently the scheduled running time between here and Norristown was cut from 24 to 16 minutes. It is planned to speed up the service even more later.

No Return to Gold Basis Yet Says Britain

London.—Mr. Neville Chamberlain, Chancellor of the Exchequer, indicated in the House of Commons last week the British Government does not contemplate an early return to the gold standard.

In answer to a question, he said: "There are a number of important conditions, some of which are not subject to our control, which must be satisfied before stabilization of sterling in terms of gold can be contemplated."

Buy British Sell British Says Prince

Empire Goods Next Prince of Wales Appeals to People in Broadcast

Birmingham, England.—In his recent address from here, broadcast throughout Great Britain, the Prince of Wales said: "Buy British and thus help restore the Empire's commerce.

This is the rule which I ask you to follow: In great purchases and small, first choice for home products; second choice for products of the Empire overseas."

He appealed particularly to "the woman budgeting her housekeeping money" to help her country "in its hour of need."

His rule, he said, implied "no lack of friendship toward any foreign nation."

As for himself, he spoke "as a farmer and cattle breeder of England and Canada, as a master of shipping fleets and as a man whose fortune it has been to travel widely over the Empire."

"Those who control expenditure, fro mthe man with large contracts to place to the woman budgeting her housekeeping money, must be curious about the sources of what they buy," said the Prince.

"Here at last in the home and at the counter is the opportunity for every woman to help her country in its hour of need. I appeal to every woman who is listening to take that opportunity and do the country that service.

"The whole world is concerned to see the fortunes of this country solidly established and we cannot rest content with our fortunes while so many of our people are unemployed and so many of our producers find it difficult to market what they have grown."

Argentina's Budget Nearing Balance

New York.—Argentina is leading the world in economic recovery, Senor Alejandro Shaw, prominent Buenos Aires banker, declared in a recent interview in the South American capital which was made public here by the Argentine Information Bureau.

"Argentina has paid and is continuing to pay her debts," said Senor Shaw, "and without contracting new debts is nearing a balanced budget. Of course, this has involved the necessity of creating new taxes and increasing customs duties. But these sacrifices, as Minister of Finance Uriburu has truly said, are accepted today to avoid greater sacrifices tomorrow."

The banker added that the recuperation of Argentina from the depression "will constitute one of the points of departure toward general world recovery."

$1,000-A Year Sufficient Allowance For Clothes?

London.—One thousand dollars a year is the "maximum" any woman should spend on her clothes, Justice McCardie, London's bachelor judge, declared in deciding a judgment action here.

The suit was brought by a London dressmaking firm against Gilbert Frankau, English writer, and his wife, holding them jointly liable for a bill of approximately $1,250. Frankau disclaimed responsibility declaring he gave his wife an allowance for clothes and had forbidden her to pledge his credit.

Justice McCardie ruled Frankau was not liable and ordered Mrs. Frankau to pay the amount.

"The perils of a husband do not grow less as the years go slowly by," Justice McCardie declared in passing judgment.

"The function of women in modern society is largely utilitarian. Nature decreed their leadership, physical traits and intellectual achievement below man, but women are the chief decorations of social life."

"About seven ordinary men and women out of ten are bored stiff with international politics."—Lord Cecil.

WITH THE LONE SCOUTS

People who have been incorrectly informed are sometimes heard to state that the Boy Scouts Association is a "Military" movement, which we all know to be untrue.

As a matter of fact, the constitution of the Association states that it is "Non-Military," and it is therefore with particular interest that we note that the Boy Scouts Association has identified itself with the League of Nations Society of Canada for the purpose of circulating a petition throughout the country on the subject of "World Disarmament by International Agreement."

The petition reads as follows:

"The nations have renounced war. Let us also renounce the instruments of war.

"The undersigned men and women, irrespective of party, stand for world disarmament by international agreement.

"We are convinced:

"That competition in armaments is leading all countries to ruin without bringing them to security, and that this policy of competition renders further wars inevitable;

"That wars in future will be wars of indiscriminate destruction of human life;

"That so long as measures of disarmament are delayed, the Government's assurances of peaceful policy will be valueless."

The Chief Scout of All the World, Lord Baden Powell of Gilwell, speaking at the close of the great World Jamboree of Scouts held in England in 1929, before the Scout delegates of some fifty nations said:

"Here is the hatchet of war, of enmity, of bad feelings which I now bury. From all the corners of the world you came at the call of Brotherhood. Now I send you forth to your homelands, bearing the song of Peace, and Good Will and Fellowship to your fellowmen."

The Dominion and Provincial Executive Committees of the Boy Scouts Association have given their unqualified endorsation of the above sentiments and petition, and have asked every Scout in Canada to get behind it and use every effort possible to add names to the petition.

Copies have been sent to the Lone Scouts and Lone Patrols of Ontario with a personal letter from their own Commissioner, who hopes that each Lonie will do his share to promote the application of the Fourth Scout Law, which reads:

"A SCOUT IS A FRIEND TO ALL."

If every person in the world would make the Fourth Scout Law his or her life motto, what need would there be for armaments? Here, then is a splendid opportunity for the Lone Scouts to uphold the principles expressed by the Chief Scout in 1929, and we hope that they will, as usual, "do their best."

It is with interest that news comes from Paris of the proposal to form a Rover Crew in that town, the nucleus of which will be the members of the old Lone Scout Patrol which eventually graduated into the 1st Paris Troop.

This brings two thoughts into our mind which are that firstly Lone Scouting in Ontario is fast becoming an old established institution, as evidenced by the fact that our erstwhile young Lonies are growing into the more mature age of "Rovership," and secondly that once a boy has joined the ranks of the Scouts it is with reluctance that he severs his connection with that organization. In other words: "Once a Scout, Always a Scout."

We hope the Paris boys will experience "Good Rovering."

As announced in our issue of last week, we regretfully had to record the resignation of the Scoutmaster of the 3rd Ontario Lone Scout Troop, Mr. Vi Sheppard.

We are glad to announce, however, that we have been fortunate enough to have been able to persuade Mr. George G. Emery of Toronto to assume the leadership of that Troop. Mr. Emery, it must be admitted, did not take a lot of persuading, as he has always taken a very keen interest in the Lonies, and we know that he will make a very fine leader (he has had previous experience in this work) and that he will soon be very popular with his boys.

So, members of the 3rd Troop, what about a letter of welcome to Mr. Emery?

Here are some activities to remember:

THE SCOUT TOYSHOP. Have you sent in that slip from "On Lone Scout Trails"? Get busy, Lonies, time is flying fast.

THE SCOUT QUESTION BOX. We are always glad to answer questions. Send them to "Lone E" at headquarters.

THE DISARMAMENT PETITION. Please do your share.

Maybe you aren't a Scout? Well if you can't join a regular Troop, why not be a Lone Scout?

Write to The Lone Scout Department, Boy Scouts Association, 330 Bay Street, Toronto, and ask for particulars. They will be gladly sent.

"LONE E."

BABY
RESTLESS?

Look to this cause

When your baby fusses, tosses and seems unable to sleep restfully, look for one common cause, doctors say. Constipation. To get rid quickly of the accumulated wastes which cause restlessness and discomfort, give a cleansing dose of Castoria. Castoria, you know, is made especially for children's delicate needs. It is a pure vegetable preparation; contains no harsh drugs, no narcotics. It is so mild and gentle you can give it to a young infant to relieve colic. Yet it is as effective for older children. Castoria's regulative help will bring relaxed comfort and restful sleep to your baby. Keep a bottle on hand. Genuine Castoria always has the name:

Hearts of Athletes Show Difference

From Study of Those of Nurmi and Hempl Doctor Says Action, Not Size, Counts

Berlin.—Dr. Victor Gottheiner, roentgenologist, who invented X-ray motion pictures, has made a special study of the organic constitution of athletes and recently filmed Finish runner Nurmi's heart in action, holds that athletic prowess is not so much a matter of how bodily organs are made but how they work and that the latter depends largely on what goes on in the brain. He threw on the screen a reel showing the heart and lungs of the German champion runner, Paul Hempl, in contrast to Nurmi's, and pointed out that whereas Nurmi's heart is more than double the average size Hempl's is barely average.

"Nurmi is in physical constitution an ideal athlete," Dr. Gottheiner said. "But Hempl is so far from it—in fact, he is asthenic; his extraordinary performance shows what a man can do when he has the will for it."

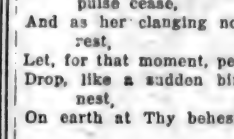
Dr. Gottheiner said he had started as a pathological anatomist but on the basis of his X-ray researches had come to the conclusion that mere knowledge of the organic structure was almost meaningless.

"When a heart has been cut out of the body," he said, "it is just a chunk of meat. You must know it in action before you know anything useful about it. Take Nurmi's heart: from a static X-ray picture of it no doctor could tell whether it was not enlarged by severe heart disease. A sick heart works unevenly.

"Look at the film of Nurmi's heart and you will see in what perfect rhythm it functions. It shows, indeed, an anomaly in its action unobserved in ordinary hearts; in pumping it turns on its axis through about a quarter circle but that is only because it is so big it otherwise would not find room in his chest. Nurmi developed his heart—which is perfectly sound—to that extraordinary size much the same way as another athlete develops huge biceps. But unlike the latter Nurmi's huge heart demands constant exercise; if he stopped training very likely he would fall ill."

Armistice Day Silence

Oh, let us learn, we pray Thee God, today;
We who have lightly broken our brothers' hearts;
And when hot passion starts
And would our oft-bewildered senses sway,
Oh, teach us, God, we pray.



Just for a moment will the world's pulse cease,
And as her clanging noises sink to rest,
Let, for that moment, peace
Drop, like a sudden bird upon her nest,
On earth at Thy behest!

So we in stillness, seeing what we are,
Thy children yet, may turn, and with our tears
Wash out the merciless years;
Wash out the clamors and the wrongs of war,
And man no longer mar.

—A Jacqueline Shaw.

The Imperial Conference

London Daily Telegraph (Ind. Cons.): Serious difficulties in Australia and New Zealand led to a postponement of the Imperial Conference to an unfixed date in 1932. These exist no longer, and in both those Dominions the Governments' desire for an early meeting has been made known. In this country the position has been magically changed; the strongest Government of modern times has been given what is asked for—a free hand for the reconstructing of our economic fabric by any means that shall be deemed effective; and that mandate has been sought and obtained with a specific insistence that a tariff policy is not to be excluded from the methods of adjusting our economic life to the altered conditions of world commerce. Thus, armed, the Government will take part in the Economic Conference completely untrammelled by the doctrinal commitments which have clogged its activities hitherto; and for the first time the policy of Empire economic unity will be placed in the way of realization.

Cause of This Depression

A judge says it is the existence of corporations.

A financier says it is the hostility to corporations.

The farmer says it is the low price of wheat and cotton.

The silver man says it is the action of Wall Street.

The manufacturer says it is the fear of free trade.

The Wall Street men say it is the action of the silver men.

The consumer says it is the tariff.

The debtor says it is the creditor.

The creditor says it is the debtor.

The preacher says it is the devil.

Now what have you got to say about it?

Watt—"I thought you and Foozello were acquainted"

Howe—"We are."

Watt—"You didn't seem to recognize each other when you met."

Howe—"Our acquaintance is purely telephonic."

Mr. Lee was entertaining his small daughter in his lumber yard. The phone rang while he was out of the office, so Betty answered it.

Caller—"Hello, is this Mr. Lee's lumber yard?"

Betty—"No, this is Mr. Lee's little girl."

A Scot, who had worn the same hat for fifteen years, decided with heavy heart to buy a new one.

Going into the only hat shop in his neighborhood, he said: "Well, here I am again."

She—"Say, it's past midnight. Do you think you can stay here all night?"

He—"Gosh, I'll have to telephone mother first."

Mistress—"Saturdays I shall go to market with you."

Bridget—"But who's going to carry the basketh the other days, mum?"

Foreman — "Well, everything all right?"

Nnght Watchman—"Yes, I haven't done so bad for the first night. I've checked off everything and there's only one thing missing—the steam roller."

In the old days before mayonnaise became epidemic table scraps were hash instead of salad, and you could tell what the darned thing was. Grandmother's handbag may have contained a lot of foolish things, but it never contained a lipstick or cigarette case. Every boy asks for more than he expects to get. The woman who used to be ashamed of her past is now having it syndicated. An optimist is a guy who thinks his wife has quit smoking cigarettes when he finds cigar butts around his house. More than one girl has given a boy friend the bounce for rubbering at other girls. You can tell good literatu The publishers give you a set of it free when you buy a set of trash. We'll credit Admiral Byrd with finding all that land down at the South Pole, but just the same how is he going to get it defrosted? Naturally some wom think better of their first husband after they have been hooked up a few years with their second

Nurse—"Your wife has just given birth to triplets."

Brown—"Gosh, that's what comes of her working in the recorder's office. Everything is triplicate."

Hudson—"Don't you find it hard to meet expenses?"

Ramsey—"Hard? Man alive! I meet expenses every time I turn around."

Frank—"Why don't you and Helen get married. Are you afraid to pop the question?"

Peter—"No; afraid to question the pop"

Cooper (at the Southern Winter Resort)—"When did you discover that you loved me?"

Agnes—"When I found out that you were the only unmarried man in the place."

Boss—"A man is never older than he feels. Now this morning I feel as fresh as a two-year old."

Steno (sweetly)—"Horse or egg?"

"THESE HARD TIMES"

"The hard times and scarcity of money makes it more important than ever to economize. One way I save on clothes is by renewing the color of faded or out-of-style dresses, coats, stockings, and underwear. For dyeing, or tinting, I always use Diamond Dyes. They are the most economical ones by far because they never fail to produce results that make you proud. Why, things look better than new when redyed with Diamond Dyes. They never spot, streak, or run. They go on smoothly and evenly, when in the hands of even a ten-year-old child. Another thing, Diamond Dyes never take the life out of cloth or leave it limp as some dyes do. They deserve to be called 'the world's finest dyes'!"

LOST 20 LBS. FAT
Without Altering Diet

To reduce weight without any attention to diet is rather more than anyone should expect. That the Kruschen method should have succeeded in this case, is a great tribute to its effectiveness.

"When I started taking Kruschen for reducing weight, I weighed 170 lbs. That was seven months ago. I decided I was too heavy, and now thanks to the half teaspoonful of Kruschen every morning, I tip the scale at 150 lbs. I have been that weight for nearly four months. I may say I feel much better. I did not diet myself in any way whatever."—E. C.

Kruschen Salts do not reduce you overnight—like so many products claim to do. But taken regularly over a period of time—with a modified diet and gentle exercise, half a teaspoonful in a glass of hot water every morning before breakfast will take away unhealthy flesh and restore your figure to its normal weight. Yet at the same time—build up health with a great increase in vigor and energy for you!

Castoria corrects CHILDREN'S ailments

WHAT a relief and satisfaction it is for mothers to know that there is always Castoria to depend on when babies get fretful and uncomfortable! Whether it's teething, colic or other little upset, Castoria always brings quick comfort; and, with relief from pain, restful sleep.

And when older, fast-growing children get out of sorts and out of condition, you have only to give a more liberal dose of this pure vegetable preparation to right the disturbed condition quickly.

Because Castoria is made expressly for children, it has just the needed mildness of action. Yet you can always depend on it to be effective. It is almost certain to clear up any minor ailment and cannot possibly do the youngest child the slightest harm. So it's the first thing to think of when a child has a coated tongue, is fretful and out of sorts. Be sure to get the genuine; with Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the package.

Here's the rub there's no rub

Surprising, perhaps, to know that at no stage of of the washing in this up to the minute laundry is there one bit of rubbing. The secret of the super-fine work is no secret at all —— Just a scientific painstaking attention to details, such as softening every drop of water used: making certain that soaps etc. are pure; regulating, to a degree, the temperature of the water—the rest is a gentle sloshing in warm suds and many rinsings. There are eight different kinds of family wash service here, each one slightly different to meet varying requirements, and all moderately priced. Fair Grounds Sold

At the meeting of the members of Toronto Township Agricultural Society last Saturday night, it was decided to accept Mr. Dawson's offer of $5,000 for the Streetsville Fair Grounds. The deal was closed on Tuesday.

Mr. Dawson will conduct a summer resort and picnic grounds. He will erect several buildings for the purpose and will also build a number of cottages for rent for the season. The Fair Board will still have the privilege of holding the fair on the grounds, and, will be allowed to use Mr. Dawson's buildings. Mr. Dawson is to keep the race track in good shape for racing. The High school pupils and village people will be allowed to use the grounds as usual for sports, providing they do no damage. Mr. Dawson will endeavour to work with the people of Streetsville for the benefit of all concerned.

There was some objection to selling the property at the present time, some thinking that if the Fair Board held on for a year they might double their money. Only four voted against the disposal of the property.

The price, $5,000, is considered a good one, and is more than twice that offered by the Village Council a few months ago.

One way in which the Village will get the benefit is that the property, which consists of 33 acres, will again become assessable, and the taxes should amount to about $150.00 per year.

Mr. Dawson has conducted a park at Huttonville for several years and knows the business well. No doubt he will make a big success of his new venture here.

The editors of local newspapers are often blamed for partiality in their notices for churches, societies and even families, when the fact is the parties most interested are the ones to blame. The local newspaper does not possess a sufficient number of reporters to send to every church service in the range of its circulation, and it must needs depends upon some person to send in the news. Many pastors or leaders of the congregation do this and their items are gladly printed. Many societies appoint one of their members to attend to this important work.

TULE MARSH MURDER

STORY OF A MISSING ACTRESS AND THE TAXING OF WITS TO EXPLAIN HER FATE.

BY NANCY BARR MAVITY.

SYNOPSIS

Don Ellsworths wife, formerly actress Sheila O'Shay, disappears. Dr. Cavanaugh, the great criminal psychologist, learns that their married life has been very unhappy.

Peter Piper, a Herald reporter, while trying to see Dr. Cavanaugh, meets Barbara Cavanaugh; he finds she was engaged to Ellsworth before his marriage. Dr. Cavanaugh identifies a body found in the tule marsh as that of Sheila O'Shay. Barbara faints when she hears this.

Mrs. Kane, Sheila's maid, is arrested and admits Sheila forced Ellsworth to marry her by threatening breach of promise. Peter and Dr. Cavanaugh find the breach of promise papers have been taken; they find a threatening letter signed "David Orme." Peter trails Orme to an automobile tourist camp.

"Well, it's a funny thing," Peter said, his brow wrinkled in a puzzled frown, "I went romping out after Orme on suspicion of his being the O'Shay woman's murderer. If he's guilty, I want him to be convicted. In fact, I shall be extremely relieved and grateful if he turns out to be the guilty party.

"He's the most promising suspect that's turned up so far. And yet—I had to hire a lawyer for him, out of my own pocket. He didn't even have the sense to ask for one. There's a sort of innocence about him—I don't mean innocence of this particular crime, but of the world and all its works.

"I couldn't see him or anybody drift straight down the rapids to the big crash without even grasping what it was all about. My wires are all crossed, somehow," he concluded ruefully.

"The world is very full of people whose wires are tangled," Dr. Cavanaugh said meditatively. "That, we might say, is the normal state of humanity. Motives are not laid side by side and neatly balanced. They are more like a basketful of loose skeins of silk after the kitten has been playing with them. You pull a motive and instead of the thread's coming out smooth for its entire length, you run into a knotted snarl of other motives, blocking it. The very few who are not like that—who can pull their threads out to the end—are the great single-minded people, artists who starve themselves and their families, financiers who wreck their competitors, scientists who innoculate themselves with deadly bacilli, even arch criminals. It's lucky for them, and also fortunate for normal, tangled humanity, that they are in the minority. But I take it you did not come to listen to my views of the world in general?"

"Well, I hoped you might work up a view on one person in particular," Peter grinned. "You see, I managed to put it up to a lawyer friend of mine—at least he has pretty good reasons to feel friendly toward the 'Herald'—that it would be worth his while to take up Orme's case for the publicity there'd be in it. If he puts on a good show, that's fair enough—and I had to get his services at bargain rates, salaries being what they are in the newspaper business. He wants to look into the chances of an insanity defence. And we'd like to engage you as defence alienist to examine Orme."

"I've no doubt you would," Dr. Cavanaugh said blandly, following with his eyes, the floating procession of a series of smoke rings.

"Of course publicity means nothing to you—you could get as much free publicity as a movie star by lifting your finger. And there isn't any money in it. After all," Peter exploded, "I can't be expected to go broke in order to pay for the defence of a man I never saw in my life until I grabbed him for the sheriff! And even if I did go broke," he added more calmly, "I couldn't raise enough to interest you."

"So far as I know," the doctor said placidly, "nobody expected anything at all from you, except yourself. And you seem to be devoting considerable energy to seeking bargain rates in professional services for the sake of a notion of abstract justice."

"Justice be blowed!" It was Peter's code to snort with indignation when accused of lofty sentiments. "This chap rather interests me, that's all. And I hoped he'd interest you."

"He does," the doctor agreed with unruffled tranquility. "He interests me very much. He also interests the district attorney, who had the idea that a plea of insanity might be in order. He even suspects that our peculiar Mr. Orme is laying the ground for it by his present attitude. It just so happens that the district attorney's office has already requested by services as alienist for the prosecution."

CHAPTER XXXIII.

"My grief!" Peter's hands were flung out in a gesture of despair, strewing ashes from his half-burned cigarette heedlessly over the doctor's Pekin rug. "That jig's up then. The jury won't understand half of what you say, but they'll believe all of it because you say it. I wish you'd waited for me," he added reproachfully.

Dr. Cavanaugh wafted three smoke rings into space before he answered.

"I did," he said at last.

"You did?"

"That is, I waited for everybody. I am quite willing to examine Orme. His case, from what I hear, presents some interesting features, but I am not willing to go into it with any more definite bias than I would have if he had come as a patient to my office.

"The district attorney was rather heated in his comments on the 'insanity dodge' as the current fashion among criminals of the present day—but after all, we are not sure that Orme is a criminal, any more than we are sure that he is insane. By the way, how did he take the transformation of his captor into a good Samaritan?"

Peter leaned back in his chair and lighted a fresh cigarette from the stub of its predecessor.

"The police weren't allowing any newspaper interviews. They didn't want to run the risk of having Orme start something with the reporters before he'd talked to them. But my position was what you might call strategic."

"You have a way of putting yourself in strategic positions," Dr. Cavanaugh commented with a briefly quizzical glance in Peter's direction.

"Oh, it was nothing to crow about," Peter hastened to assure him. "Only, you see, if I'd chosen to play myself up in the 'Herald' as the intrepid amateur who discovered and caught the man who wrote that threat, before the police even got rightly started to search for him, it would have made them look rather silly.

"It wasn't like that, of course, really. I just happened to light on a tip and followed it; and capturing Orme was about as heroic as picking up somebody's strayed kitten. But they couldn't help seeing the possibilities of the other treatment—when they were tactfully pointed out. I merely turned Orme over to the sheriff and beat it back to the office—giving the police due credit for the arrest in a story that was on the street before the other papers even knew that anybody'd been arrested. That little scoop was quite enough for me, in the way of glory. But naturally, when I suggested that I'd like a word with my pet tame prisoner, rules or no rules—well, I got it."

"Naturally," Dr. Cavanaugh agreed so suavely that Peter looked up with sharp scrutiny; but the doctor was intent on extinguishing the burning end of his cigar against the side of the ash tray. "And what did he say?" he asked without looking up.

"I told him I'd see that he had a lawyer, and he said, 'That's very kind of you, but you oughtn't to bother,' just as if I'd offered to call a taxi. I honestly do think there's something queer about him—nobody has any call to be as philosophical as all that, when he's about to be tried for murder."

"But then, you see, you've never been on trial for murder—perhaps you are not in a position to judge," Dr. Cavanaugh reminded him.

"Well, I think I'd at least manage to be interested." Orme's indifference to the fate of his own neck was becoming a point of acute grievance to Peter, despite his part in bringing that neck within reach of danger. "He didn't look up at all until I told him we were going to try to get you to come and see him. Then he stared, like somebody that's just been shaken awake. But all he said was, 'Oh! I've heard of him.' Still, the idea seemed to impress him. Whatever you decide about him, I'm glad you're going. You haven't got any advance theory—I suppose—in other words, a hunch?"

"If I had, it wouldn't be worth expressing. Still, your impressions are helpful; they give us a little background—a starting point. And I may be your witness, not the district attorney's, after all, you know."

"Whoop-ee! I'll bet two doughnuts you will!" Peter beamed. "By the way, I found out how he withstood all that grilling by the detectives. 'I simply withdraw my attention,' he said. 'I just turn my back mentally, and trace out the development of some theme in music—a Beethoven symphony, for instance.' Just 'withdraws his attention,' mind you, while they take turns trying to sweat a confession out of him! Can you beat it?"

"It's a good method," Dr. Cavanaugh said. "But it will never become widely popular because most criminals don't know enough about Beethoven's symphonies. Do you realize that you've uncovered the very first objective fact we've been able to gather about David Orme? Anybody who can lose himself in mentally following an elaborate musical composition while being subjected to the third degree must take music with more than ordinary seriousness—must, in fact, be a real musician."

"Suffering cats!" ejaculated Peter. "That's so—and he's lost two fingers off his hand," he added in a tone of awed sympathy. "No wonder he looks as if he'd been thrown into a world where he can't find his way. Music was his own particular world, and he was pitched out of it, without money, deprived of the only way he knew of making any—cast into the society of auto camp bums——"

"Still," Dr. Cavanaugh brought him down to earth, "that hardly explains why he should forthwith walk out and murder a rich and rather famous lady of the stage."

"No," Peter assented glumly, "it doesn't."

Sunday School Lesson

November 29. Lesson IX—Paul's Letter to Philemon—Philemon 4-20. Golden Text—There is neither bond nor free . . . for ye all are one in Christ Jesus.—Galatians 3. 28.

ANALYSIS.

I. APPRECIATING GOODNESS, Phil. 4-7.

II. BOSS OR BROTHER? 8-16.

III. PAYING OTHERS' DEBTS, 17-20.

INTRODUCTION — Paul must have written a great many private letters—he had formed so many intimate friendships everywhere. This letter to Philemon is the only complete letter which we now possess. It is one of the most beautiful letters ever written. Sabatier said of it, "Only a few familiar lines, but so full of grace, of serious and trustful affection, that this short epistle gleams like a pearl of the most exquisite purity in the rich treasure of the New Testament."

I. APPRECIATING GOODNESS, Phil. 4-7.

Philemon, apparently, lived in Colosse. We are not told this definitely, but Onesimus is referred to as "one of yourselves," Col. 4: 9. A member of his household is a leader in the Colossian church, Col. 4: 17. Paul came to know him, probably in Ephesus. He was well-to-do, able to keep servants, entertain the church in his own house (v. 2), and act as a public benefactor, vs. 5, 7. The Christian communities were as yet small and had no buildings of their own. Some wealthier member gave the use of his house for their gatherings. Philemon was greatly loved for his work among the poor. It is evident from v. 7 that the whole church at Colosse had benefited by some particularly needed and welcomed gift.

Paul rejoices, not because Philemon is well, and prospering in business, but because he is a true Christian and is devoting himself to a life of practical helpfulness. How this warm-hearted brother who evidently preferred to remain in the background (Col. 4: 17) must have been gladdened and encouraged at having his labors thus recognized and appreciated by the great apostle!

II. BOSS OR BROTHER? 8-16.

Paul writes to intercede for a runaway slave, Onesimus. He had been a worthless fellow and had finally run away, after robbing his master, as Paul hints, of a considerable sum of money. He made his way to Rome, as fugitive slaves usually did. Eventually, destitute and lonesome, he met the only man in that great city whom he could trust to befriend him. Through Paul he was converted and attached himself to his benefactor as a most devoted and valuable personal attendant, v. 13. When an opportunity came, Paul sent him back to his owner. The letter is an appeal for forgiveness, and also to have Onesimus received, not merely as a slave, but as a brother in the Lord.

Paul's letter suggests the Christian way of dealing with our fellows. He could have commanded Philemon. Philemon owed Paul a great deal, including his spiritual life. Paul, as an apostle also, had great powers. But he preferred to use persuasion, and rely on the affection of his friends and spiritual children. He would win by love rather than by law. The "I command you" method may win mechanical obedience; it cannot create a helpful and happy relationship. Paul, therefore, did not make his demand from the position of a master. He appeals on the level of ordinary human brotherhood. He is just an "old man," old before his time, it is true. He is in jail. He is Philemon's fellow-worker. A response to that kind of an appeal will mean blessing for all three.

Paul's letter also suggests the Christian relationship in business and industry. Onesimus had been a worthless slave. Now he is coming back of his own free will. Only one thing could make that possible,—love. Love will make of Onesimus a better slave than he has ever been. On the other hand, it will make of Philemon a new kind of master. Once, probably, he looked upon Onesimus as an instrument of profit. Now he will see in him a brother.

When Paul asserted the principle of brotherhood (v. 16) he struck a blow at the system of slavery. The application of that principle has been the destruction of slavery in every Christian society. When a man recognizes in another a member of his own family, he will no longer treat him as a bit of machinery. He will then cease utilizing every opportunity to make money out of his brother's need. He will, instead, work with him for the common good. The master-slave relationship, based on self-interest, must go as Love comes in. The leader-fellow worker relationship, based upon community interest, will come,—as Love comes in.

III. PAYING OTHERS' DEBTS, 17-20.

Paul offered to pay back whatever Onesimus had stolen. It must have been a good sum, for it took him all the way to Rome. Paul used to be a poor man, working his way with his hands. In later life, however, he gave indications that he had funds at his disposal. Possibly he may have inherited some wealth from his family.

Leniency

Leniency in dealing with erring children! Yes, one cannot be too kind or forgiving, provided there is method and efficiency of supervision—Harshness or imprisonment only creates a stubborn determination to resist and get even by increased violence and wrongdoing.

A boy ran away from a Reform school. The police were notified—his escapade, name and history were broadcasted through the newspapers. He was captured in due time, of course, but this publicity ruined his chances and prospects in life.—Resentment at injustice embittered him to such an extent that reform become impossible.

Does a policy of forgiveness and kindness pay? Yes a thousand times over, as we have often demonstrated.—J. J. Kelso.

Record Flights

Donald Rose in the North American Review (New York): Only in insignificant degree have the record flights been converted to real usefulness. Some have served for laboratory tests, as automobile racing once stimulated the building of better cars. But most of them have been seven-day sensations for a thrill-thirsty public and not much more. Some of the most elaborate and expensive have proved nearly nothing except, for example, that there is ice at the Pole in superfluous quantities. Many have ended in disaster and dark tragedy. And some have ended exactly where they began, leaving the world no wiser nor better nor happier for an incredible effort and a daring challenge to chance and danger.

Gold Hoarding

Manchester Guardian: That the flow of gold across the Atlantic should stop is really just as important to the French as to American bankers. French investors are already beginning to lose their nerve and to withdraw their money from the banks and hoard it; and if that internal drain got going in earnest all the bullion which is now crossing the Atlantic would be poured into a bottomless pit.

Planes to be Carried By Akron Being Tested

Lakehurst, N.J.—The first of the small fighting airplanes which are to be carried on the new Navy airship Akron have been received here and are undergoing testing. These planes, designed by the Curtiss-Wright engineers, have been constructed with two main objectives—the highest possible speed and the greatest practical lightness. A special hangar is being constructed in the interior of the airship to house four planes.

Large Italian Families Get 5-Room Bungalow

Rome.—Each of the 10 families in Italy with the largest number of children will be given a five-room bungalow by the Governor of Rome, beginning on Christmas, 1932, it was announced recently.

Similar prizes will be given each year for five years. With the prize goes a proviso that the houses cannot be sold, leased or mortgaged within 30 years.

Peace of Mind

Efficiency in business methods will enable us to make money and thus enjoy added luxuries but only religion can give us peace of mind, joy in service, courage in time of trouble and hopefulness concerning the future.—J. J. Kelso.

Farm Relief By Chemistry

(From Review of Reviews, August, 1931)

A generation ago Sir William Crookes startled the world by predicting famine because of lack of nitrogen for fertilizers. During the war military authorities of the United States were gravely concerned about possible shortage of nitrogen for explosives, as well as for the increased food production to supply the demands of war. Even five years ago the production of fertilizer nitrogen in the United States was less than half of the country's consumption, hindering more efficient farming through shortage of domestic supplies and by the high price of imported products.

Within these five years the situation has been reversed. The use of fertilizer nitrogen has increased about 50 per cent., while production has increased 100 per cent. With production of synthetic nitrogen from the air increased 1000 per cent., a reduction of about 50 per cent in prices, and further large increases in sight, it is certain that the United States will soon produce much more nitrogen than it consumes.

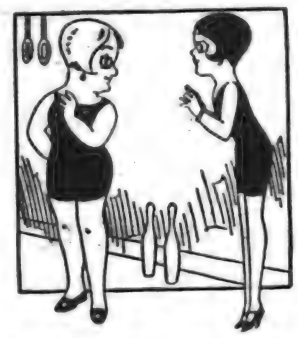
Either she must become a nitrogen-exporting nation, the industry must find new uses for its products, or she must persuade the American farmer of what seems an unquestionable fact, that he can use much more nitrogen on his fields to make much more money. From the prospect of a world-famine in nitrogen to a surplus in less than forty years is perhaps the most rapid revolution of a major industry ever worked in scientific history.

Since no living plant or animal can use air nitrogen directly, essential as it is for the growth of living protoplasm, before the days of man or of synthetic chemistry, life on earth had to depend for its nitrogen on lightning and on germs. Every lighning flash shatters a tiny percentage of the oxygen and nitrogen atoms in its path. Compounds like nitric acid are formed and brought down by the rain. They are then in a form that plants can utilize them freely. Bacteria, too, especially those that live on the roots of clover and alfalfa and related plants, have imposed upon them the duty of replenishing the nitrogen of the soil, and furnish the reason why the wise farmer includes these plants in his crop rotation.

Sir William Crookes' prediction of world-disaster went wrong for two reasons. In the first place two sources of combined nitrogen had already been discovered. One of them was coal, from which by heating we now make coke or gas and in so doing liberate the nitrogen which lightning and germs combined in the Coal Age. The other is the natural nitrats of Chile, where millions of tons of combined nitrogen, probably formed by lightning on the stormy crest of the Andes, have accumulated in a rainless desert whence none of the precious material has washed away. Sir William underestimated both these sources. New methods, such as the Guggenheim process, have been devised, to work the Chilean deposits more efficiently, thus saving thousands of tons of nitrogen that formerly went to waste.

The second reason his prediction failed was because of the marvellous advance in synthetic chemistry. This enables us now to imitate lightning—that is, to accomplish the artificial fixation of the inexhaustible but useless nitrogen of the air. At first, powerful electric arcs played in air to force some of the atoms to combine. This has been almost discarded. Another early process, still in use, is to heat the calcium carbide otherwise used to make acetylene, in nitrogen, to yield a chemical compound called cynanamid, used directly as a fertilizer or convertible to other compounds.

But the most efficient method of producing this nitrogen in usable form is the direct synthesis of ammonia gas from its two chemical elements, nitrogen and hydrogen. During the war, Germany's desperate need of nitrogen for explosives—the Chilean supply being cut off by the blockade—stimulated the practical development of the first steps in this direction taken by the distinguished German chemist, Professor Fritz Haber. British, French and American chemists each contributed ideas and experiments, until last year this method presented the world with about as much fertilizer as the entire production of Chile, and about a quarter of all the nitrogen consumed on farms and in the factories of the world.



We might call the process atomic torture. A nitrogen atom has a central nucleus composed of fourteen particles of positive electricity and seven of negative electricity tightly clumped together, with seven more negative particles revolving loosely about this central point like planets about a sun. The hydrogen atoms consist of a central nucleus of only one positive electric particle, with a single negative one revolving about it. To produce ammonia the chemist must make each nitrogen atom accept union with three hydrogen ones. This is done by compressing nitrogen gas from the air and hydrogen gas from natural gas or from water by thousands of pounds to the square inch, and passing it over a fine dust of iron, nickel, or some other catalyst. It is believed that the outside particles of nitrogen are distorted so that they lose their hold on the nucleus and combine with the hydrogen.

Phosphorus and potash have become important fertilizers as a result of chemical research.

British Guiana Gets Aid To Develop Rice Industry

Georgetown, British Guiana.—The Colonial Development Committee has granted £1,820 (about $7,000), for the purchase of machinery for development of the rice industry, the Governor was informed recently. The money will be used to buy a rice mill from Scotland which will have a capacity for cleaning 1,800 to 2,000 pounds of paddy an hour.

British Guiana supplies rice to nearby colonies in competition with India. Increased cultvation will provide employment for many natives, and it is even said that rice to a great extent may take the place of flour, which is now imported from foreign markets.

$1,000,000 Edison Memorial Planned Ever-burning Light to be Feature

West Orange, N.J.—Mrs. Thomas A. Edison has given her approval to a plan sponsored by the chamber of commerce and citizens of the Oranges and Maplewood for erection of a $1,000,000 memorial to her late husband on a promontory overlooking the home and laboratories of the dead inventor.

Plans for the memorial have not been decided upon, but it is expected that its central feature will be a huge tower, surmounted by an ever-burning light to serve the entire metropolitan area as an aviation beacon.

A nation-wide committee, with President Hoover as honorary chairman, will be organized under present plans. It is hoped that Secretary Andrew W. Mellon will serve as honorary treasurer. The committee in charge plans to form organizations throughout the world for the purpose of raising funds for the memorial.

Youths Work Without Pay

Berlin.—The Germans have a proverb: "Work makes existence sweet," and a large number of youth under twenty-one years of age, who have banded themselves together as the "Young German Order,' 'are endeavoring to prove this. So weary are many of these boys of being without a job that they are demanding work of any kind without pay. Some six miles out of the busy town of Bautzen in Saxony flows a rivulet known as Albrechts Brook which, picturesque though it is, does great damage to the surrounding country every spring by the overflowing of its banks For the last twelve years it has been intended to regulate the undisciplined stream and drain the land, but the necessary funds were lacking. The first experiment is now being made with 120 volunteers, who go singing to their work every morning, glad to be about and doing again. They are provided with food and lodging, simple, but ad uate, also with workman's clothing to save their own, and—though this is not considered payment—with 50 pfennigs (about 12 cents) daily as pocket money.

Bicycle Comes Back

The bicycle is returning to favor in England. Cycle manufacturers are finding the demand for bicycles higher than it has been for the last seven or eight years.

Although the bicycle has not been seen so much in the larger cities during the last few years, there are certain places which have always been known as Bicycle Towns.

Bedford is the most famous "bicycle town" in England, and has the highest proportion of bicycles to its population. This is probably due to the flatness of the surrounding country. In Bedford the preponderance of bicycles is so great that shopkeepers make special arrangements for parking them.

On the continent the bicycle is very popular. Copenhagen, for instance, moves almost entirely on the bicycle, so does the Hague. In Berlin the streets are crowded with bicycles at the hours when people are going or coming from work. Factories on the outskirts of the city have accommodation for thousands of bicycles, as most of the workers find this the cheapest and easiest way of travelling.

Tomato Popular in Germany

Berlin.—Perhaps no vegetable has become so popular in Germany as the tomato, and yet some thirty years ago it was hardly known. When it did appear, it was regarded with suspicion on account of its brilliant color and considered harmful. For a long time, under the name of Liebesapfel (love apple) it was only cultivated in a few gardens for decoration. To-day the tomato is eaten and enjoyed in every form by rich and poor alike. Now that it has been proved that this useful fruit or vegetable—opinions differ as to its rightful cognomen—will keep good for over six weeks in ice storage, the growing grounds throughout the country have been enormously increased, but foreign importers, with Holland at their head, do a very great trade with Germany.

Alberta Leads

Ottawa. — Alberta replaced Saskachewan as the greatest wheat-producing Province of the Dominion this year, with a total estimated yield of 135,000,000 bushels, the report of the Bureau of Statistics shows. In 1930 the Alberta wheat yield was 132,900,000 bushels. Saskatchewan this year has an estimated yield of 117,000,000 bushels, as compared with the 196,322,000 of a year ago. Manitoba shows a drop from 45,278,000 bushels to an even 27,000,000 this year.

Museum Gets Petrified Lizard

Montreal.—Salamanders or no salamanders, the Peace River district is going to have its lizards. Scarcely had the claims to antiquity of salamanders found at Hudson's Hope been officially denied, when a genuine, of petrified, section of an ichthyosaurs was placed in the hands of Francis Kermode, director of the Provincial Museum, Vancouver, B.C. Several ounces in weight and six inches in length, the stone fragment reached Mr. Kermode from a police post at Hudson's Hope, and is now a fully accredited exhibit in the museum.

NEURITIS

With many people, it is not unusual for them to call every ache and pain from which they suffer, neuritis. These people are mistaken, because there are many pains which are not due to neuritis; this word means inflammation of the nerves.

Local neuritis is the term used to indicate that only one nerve is involved. Sciatica is a local neuritis of the sciatic nerve. This form of the disease may follow exposure of one part of the body to cold, such as in the case of facial neuritis. Again, a nerve may become inflamed as the result of injury or of the prolonged pressure which occurs in cases where the arm is held, for a long time, in certain positions. The inflammation may also arise in the tissues surrounding the nerve, and spread to the nerve.

Multiple neuritis, or the inflammation of a group of nerves, is usually the result of some general or systemic condition. When the body is subjected to chronic poisoning, multiple neuritis may result.

The poisoning may be due to the toxin given off by living germs inside the body. This accounts for the occurrence of neuritis in such diseases as diphtheria and typhoid fever. Foci of infection, such as diseased teeth, are a common source of chronic poisoning leading to neuritis.

The poisoning may be of another type due to occupation, as is seen in lead or arsenic poisoning. It may also be a complication of the excessive use of alchohol, leading to what is known as alcoholic neuritis.

Certain diseases, such as anaemia, cancer, diabetes and tuberculosis, cause a lowering of the general vitality of the body. When this occurs, neuritis is not infrequently associated with the condition. The same thing may happen following prolonged exposure or over-exertion.

The symptoms which result from the inflammation of a nerve depend upon the type of nerve which is inflamed. There are various types of nerves. In general, the symptoms of inflammation are pain, tenderness on pressure, and changes in sensation in the area which the nerve supplies, such as tingling or numbness; muscular weakness and, later on, atrophy or wasting of the muscles supplied by the nerves involved.

The many causes of neuritis have been indicated in order to make very clear that the only hope for success in the treatment of a case lies in finding the cause of the condition in that particular case.

It is necessary to secure relief from the pain, but such temporary relief does not meet the need. As long as the cause exists, relapses will occur. The removal of the cause is, of course, the purpose of proper treatment. The avoidance of the cause, in the first place, is the means of prevention.

Questions concerning Health, addressed to the Canadian Medical Association, 184 College Street, Toronto, will be answered personally by letter.

Hydro By-Law Explained by Reeve

For the benefit of the ratepayers, who will vote on the proposed Hydro Electric By-law, we print the following letter received by the Council from headquarters:

A perusal of the same will no doubt enlighten our readers on this question. Next week, we expect to print another letter dealing with rates to be charged consumers of power and light.

POWER SUPPLY—STREETSVILLE

In connection with approval given by the Commission, on November, 3rd for entering into an agreement for the supply of some 200 horsepower to your Municipality, we would advise that it will be necessary, if Hydro power is taken, to replace your 60-cycle transformer and metering equipment with 25 cycle. Other changes are not absolutely necessary but as a number of your secondary circuits are inadequate for the load carried, which load we anticipate will increase when the power supply is given, and as you will be ordering complete new transformer equipment it will be economical in the end to purchase transformers of suitable size to handle the anticipated load and to accommodate the secondary circuits, at least on the most thickly-settled portion of the Main street, to the loads they will be required to deliver.

The Commission's equipment will be transferred at the book value, allowance being given for accumulated reserves.

Our estimate of the cost of alterations to your distribution system, which includes the replacing of transformers and meters and rebuilding your secondary circuits on the Main street between Princess and Water Streets, together with a few minor changes on a number of the other streets, is $7,167.00. Commission's equipment to be transferred to Streetsville $3,731.77. A final estimate has not been made on the installation of an induction-type generator, as we did not feel this had been fully decided. We have, however, secured an estimated price on a one-hundred horsepower machine of $1,740.00, f.o.b. cars, factory. To this will be added the cost of installation and any changes necessary to your present switchboard, which we anticipate will not be great.

The power loads to be transferred are as follows:

	Average H.P. per month
Dominion Sash	124.9
Streetsville Creamery	14.65
Couse and Son	5.65
E. F. Redick	2.97
Total	148.17

The above loads were served at the power rates approved for your Municipality and for the fiscal year of October 1st, 1930, to October 1st, 1931, the total revenue at these rates amounted to $5,375.42. As these are all day loads it is anticipated there will be considerable diversity between the power and the lighting loads, particularly in the summer time.

We have estimated that the rates named for street lighting will produce a revenue very similar to that charged by you in 1930 for this service. With regard to the domestic lighting rates, the net monthly bill will be materially reduced to the majority of your customers, but as the rate structure is somewhat different from that used at present the bills for those customers with unusually high consumption will be somewhat greater. On the whole, however, your customers will benefit by the change and will, in addition, have a practically unbroken twenty-four hour service with ample power supply for all requirements.

The average horsepower per year in similar municipalities runs from 86 to 209; while the number of light consumers runs from 173 to 274; the power cost ranges from 34.28 to $56.-91; while the domestic rate is from 3 1-5 to 4 1-5. The street lighting is as low as $11.00 per 100 watts in some cases, and as high as $13.00 in others.

The Reeve says that it is not the intention of the Council to scrap the present electric light plant, but to use it in conjunction with the Hydro.

The Reeve will be a member of the Commission, and two other members will need to be elected by ballot the same as members of the council are elected, and at the same time.

The following boys will constitute the livestock team: Emerson McKinney, Brampton; Gordon Black, Caledon; Gordon Robinson, Bolton; and Russell Duke, Caledon.

SHORT COURSES AT CALEDON, JAN., 1932

The Caledon Women's Institute and the Caledon Township Council are sponsoring Short Courses in Agriculture and Domestic Science for the boys and girls in the Township of Caledon from January 4th to 30th, 1932.

Already the canvassers from the W. I. have handed in the names of 43 boys and 42 girls desirous of taking the Courses. Stock Judging, Feeds and Feeding, Care and Management of animals, and Crop Production will be some of the subjects taken up fully for the boys. The girls will receive instruction in Sewing, Home Nursing, and Dietetics, Public Speaking, Debating and Literary papers will be emphasized to both groups.

Special speakers on Marketing, poultry and soil fertility will be for the older farmers as well as for the regular class members.

The boys will hold their one Month Course in the Township Hall and the girls will be housed in the Library or the Orange Hall.

J. C. Shearer, Agricultural Representative, and Miss Pearle Church, Home Demonstrator, will be in charge of the courses.

THE ROYAL PARTY

Last week 260 girls from Ontario were the guests of the Ontario Department of Agriculture in Toronto. During their visit in the city the Royal York Hotel was their headquarters. They visited the United Farmers Co-operative Company, where each girl received silver salt and pepper shakers, the Museum, the Art Gallery, the Parliament Buildings, where group pictures were taken, the Robt. Simpson and T. Eaton stores, attended the Girls' Session of the Women's Institute Convention and the Royal Winter Fair.

Among the many speakers were: Col. the Hon. T. L. Kennedy, Minister of Agriculture of Ontario; Hon. Mr. Challies, Provincial Secretary and Registrar; Mrs. Plumptre; Miss Ethel Chapman, of the Ontario Farmer; Dr. Edna Guest; Dr. Margaret Patterson, of the Women's Court; Dr. C. I. Christie, President of the Ontario Agricultural College; Miss O. R. Cruikshank, Director of Home Economics at Macdonald Institute, Guelph; Mrs. Nina Moore Jamieson and Mrs. A. E. Walker, President Federated Women's Institutes of Ontario.

On Tuesday morning an examination on Coaching work was written by each girl with the result that the five South Simcoe girls had the highest standing and were presented with the Cup and individual cups donated by the Ontario Farmer. The fifteen high girls will receive suitable books from the Ontario Farmer. Miss Reta Robinson, of the Ebenezer Juniors, stood eighth in this examination.

Misses Jeane Verner of Bolton Juniors, Margaret Macdonald and Charlotte Lyons, of Terra Cotta Juniors and Wilma Boucher, of Brampton Juniors were the other girls from Peel County. These girls received high points in Household Science Judging Competitions in their Counties and completed projects which enabled them to qualify for this trip. Every girl was under 26 years of age and not a previous winner.

Mrs. J. M. Dolson and Miss Pearle Church of the Department of Agriculture were among chaperones during the week.

Tuesday evening the party witnessed the arrival of Earl and Lady Bessborough for the Charity Ball, which was held in the Concert Hall of the Royal York Hotel.

The editors of local newspapers are often blamed for partiality in their notices for churches, societies and even families, when the fact is the parties most interested are the ones to blame. The local newspaper does not possess a sufficient number of reporters to send to every church service in the range of its circulation, and it must needs depends upon some person to send in the news. Many pastors or leaders of the congregation do this and their items are gladly printed. Many societies appoint one of their members to attend to this important work.

ONTARIO BARLEY FOR BRITAIN

As a result of deliberations between the Canadian High Commissioner, Hon. G. Howard Ferguson, and Col. the Hon. T. L. Kennedy, Minister of Agriculture, two cars of high quality Ontario malting barley will shortly go forward to Great Britain.

These cars are being shipped as a trial shipment by the Ontario Marketing Board, and if the quality meets the standards of the British malt houses and the price received is favorable, the shipment will no doubt open up a new and extensive trade channel for Ontario barley.

One car left Montreal by a C.P.R. boat to London on Nov. 26. The second car left Montreal on the Head Line boat Dunnaff Head on Nov. 27.

The results of these shipments will be watched with keen interest by barley growers and grain dealers.

OAKVILLE

Sportsmen of this district are anxious to find the person or persons who shot a deer through the legs and left it to die in the bush. So anxious are they, that a reward of $25 has been posted. Chief of Police Kerr is also interested, there being no open season for deer in Halton County.

The deer was found by Hugh Wilson, on his farm north of here, Saturday night. He called the chief, who put the animal out of pain. It was about three years old, and is believed to be the same one that was wily enough to come south for the hunting season, while all the hunters were emigrating north. It was seen at Clarkson, and later on the Mississauga golf course.

WITH THE LONE SCOUTS

Lone Scout Signs.

It has very frequently been suggested, and the idea has been boosted periodically from time to time, that Lone Scouts should make a special decorative sign of their own design, bearing the words, "A Lone Scout Lives Here," and erect same in a conspicuous place outside their homes.

During the past summer a check up was made throughout Ontario, and it was found that very few Lonies in this province had troubled to fall in with this idea.

This is unfortunate and it is thought that perhaps the Lone Scouts of Ontario do not fully realize the significance and importance of such signs in the communities in which they live.

Of course all Scouts know that they have a big duty to perform, not only to themselves, but to the rest of the world at large, aand not only are Scouts supposed to voluntarily perform a "Good Turn" each day, but also they are intended to "be prepared" to do a good turn whenever called upon to do so.

But how can a Scout be called upon when no one knows where he lives?

The making and erecting of a Lone Scout sign not only gives a boy craft training, but it also serves as an announcement to the general public, to Dominion, Provincial and County officials, the Red Cross officers, Humane Society officials and to district nurses that here is a Scout who can be called upon in case of emergency.

Scouts are expected to train themselves to "be prepared" to meet emergencies, in the case of accident, illness, flood, fire, and storm, and in the fighting of diseases and pests, to both human beings and to plants.

A Scout should have a good working knowledge of First Aid, and it is his duty to learn all he can of this subject as quickly as possible.

The following survey was taken in the United States of America by one of the staff of "The Farmer's Wife" magazine, and no doubt the same conditions prevail throughout the Dominion of Canada.

These facts serve to show him how important a matter it is to have the Lone Scouts mobilized in readiness to meet emergencies.

"The average distance from rural homes to the nearest doctor is seven miles.

"The average time required by doctors to reach rural homes in America is over 20 minutes in summer and over 58 minutes in winter.

"The average distance of all rural homes to the nearest dentist is 14 1-2 miles.

"Eighteen per cent. of the rural population is more than 12 hours away from the services of a trained nurse, and 82 per cent. of the rural homes are from 2 to 12 hours away from this service.

"Average distance of nearest hospital from rural homes in America is 18 miles.

Average distance of rural homes to nearest drug store is 11 miles.

"Average amount paid by rural population during 1929 for services of a doctor was $29.35.

"Average amount paid by farm families for doctors and specialists was $19.28.

"Average total amount paid by rural people during the last year, due to sickness alone, was $104.94."

The above figures will show clearly the need for an organization such as the Lone Scouts, trained to meet emergencies.

Therefore, Lonies, see to it that you do your duty. That you train yourselves to be ready for any call that may be made upon you, and have your sign outside your home to let every one know where you may be found, and incidently to inform any other Lonie what may pass your way that his Brother Scout is at hand.

Christmas is drawing very near now. Have you completed your Lone Scout Toyshop arrangements? By this time you should have your list of names of the children to whom your parcels are going. If you have not yet received them write to Lone Scout Headquarters immediately.

If you are not a Lone Scout and would like to be one, write to the Lone Scout Department, Boy Scouts Association, 330 Bay Street, Toronto 2, and ask them for particulars.

Lone Scouting is designed for boys who live on farms and in country districts, and who are located in places where it is impracticable for them to join an ordinary Scout Troop.

It Pays to Advertise

Montreal Information (Ind.).—While we hear complaints on all sides of the reduced volume of business, there are certain firms and certain industries who are enjoying prosperity. Why is this so? In most cases it is the result of the intensified publicity which they have employed. Many enterprises believed it had become necessary to decrease expenses, as a consequence of the depression. Contrary to all business principles, they commenced to reduce their appropriations for advertising, though this item should have been the last to be reduced. These firms may have economized a few dollars on this score, but on the other hand they have lost much more through the reduction in their turnover.

Engineer Predicts Tropics Habitable for Whites Soon

Toronto.—Willis H. Carrier of New York, President of the American Society of Heating and Ventilating Engineers, told members of the Ontario Chapter of the society recently that adoption of a cooling and humidification system in tropical cities will eventually make the tropics habitable for the white race. He declared also that within the next five years theatres, office buildings, factories, homes and trains in the United States will have adopted air-conditioning as essential to comfort.

Mr. Carrier foresaw a quickening of business for the railways "when a man can travel on the hottest summer day from Toronto to Texas without wilting a collar." He foresaw also bigger box-office returns for air-conditioned theatres, higher efficiency of factory workers, more comfort in American office buildings and homes.

"But one of the greatest benefits of air-conditioning for cooling and humidification will be that of making the Tropics habitable for the white race," he declared. Already air-cooling systems have been established in India, Brazil, Cuba and Northern Argentina, he said, and recently the King of Siam had ordered air-conditioning of his palace and national theatre, because he considered, Mr. Carrier said further, that "it changes living conditions completely."

"If the white man in the Tropics can go from his home to his office or club, the buildings in which he spends the greater part of his day being conditioned to proper effective temperature, the intermediate exposure will not bother him," he said.

Products Prove State To Be No Arid Desert

Tonopah, Nev.—While Nevada is not classed as an agricultural state, the United States census bureau reports reveal that Nevada produces apples, apricots, cherries, figs, nectarines, peaches, pears, plums, prunes, quinces, grapes, almonds, pecans, blackberries, dewberries, currants, gooseberries, raspberries and strawberries.

In the southern part of the State many of the so-called tropical fruits and vegetables are raised in considerable quantity. In the Boulder Dam area, which includes the city of Las Vegas, there are seven pecan orchards.

The Lahonton valley, under the Newlands irrigation project is famous for its Hearts of Gold cantaloupes. Apples are raised in every county in the State.

Night Surveys Made In Canadian Hills

Obtaining geodetic angular measurements from the mountain peaks towering 6,000 and 8,000 feet above sea level in British Columbia is difficult and dangerous. This work, done by the Geodetic Survey of Canada, Department of the Interior, must be performed at night, when lights can be seen from distant stations.

Electric lights are placed at certain points and the angles between them measured from the observing station. The length of the lines observed varies from thirty to sixty miles.

The peaks are usually rough, needle-shaped and treacherous and the observer has to exercise great care in moving around his instrument lest a small sidestep cause him to drop down a sheer precipice.

Better Times Coming

Quebec Soleil (Lib.).—There is no reason to remain pessimistic in face of the signs of economic recovery which are now manifest. Pessimism is demoralizing. And the reconstructions which are needed after these two years of trial demand the energy of our entire population; they demand the employment of all our efforts and the maintenance of a serene confidence, incompatible with the disastrous influences of pessimism. New mistakes will be made. Nervousness will provoke new conflicts and new deceptions. But the hope of better days must inspire all our initiative and direct us in the way which is opening up before us.

Revival of Earrings

A noticeable instance of how old fashions return is shown in the revival of earrings.

In Victorian days almost every girl had her ears pierced as a matter of course, until the 'nineties, when earrings suddenly went out of fashion. To-day earrings will be worn as much as ever they were.

There is in souls a sympathy with sounds.—Cowper.

Highway Footpaths

Montreal Press (Ind.).—Two juries in Brantford and Toronto unanimously recommended the construction of footpaths alongside the highways as a means of avoiding accidents and traffic fatalities. The recommendation would mean an increase of extraordinary expenses, but the juries are of the opinion that they are justifiable and necessary for the purpose of safeguarding human lives and protecting motorists themselves against the many dangers which they cannot always avoid when they meet people on the road. If the roads had any kind of footpath at all alongside them, the responsibility of people driving motor cars or heavy lorries would obviously be less great, whilst pedestrians would not have as many risks to encounter.

Isle of Man Desires To Have Own Flag

London.—The Isle of Man has made known its desire to adopt a flag and the Governor has been asked to procure the assent of the British Government.

The only Manx flag which now approaches a national status is a red ensign bearing three legs. The Manx coat-of-arms consists of three legs in armor, kicking in different directions. Its origin is obscure, but it is thought to have typified the island's independence of England, Scotland and Ireland.

A Peck of Gold

Dust always blowing about the town,
Except when sea-fog laid it down,
And I was one of the children told
Some of the blowing dust was gold.

All the dust the wind blew high
Appeared like gold in the sunset sky,
But I was one of the children told
Some of the dust was really gold.

Such was life in the Golden Gate:
Gold dusted all we drank and ate,
And I was one of the children told,
"We all must eat our peck of gold."
—Robert Frost, in "Collected Poems."

Gloria Swanson and Michael Farmer were married for the second time four hours after the motion picture actress' divorce from Marquis de la Falaise became final. The ceremony took place at Yuma, Arizona. This is Miss Swanson's third matrimonial attempt.

Man Domesticates Many Animals

Modern Man is a better domesticator of animals than his caveman ancestors, better even than the agricultural people who lived before machines decreased the need for animal labor. Mankind now possesses, it appears from a list published recently in the London scientific periodical, Nature, no less than 39 domesticated animals. Probably the total of all domestic animals is nearly a hundred. Of these only dogs, oxen, goats, pigs, horses, asses and perhaps some varieties of sheep and buffalo were domesticated by prehistoric men. Domestications in ancient but not prehistoric times include the cat, the ferret, the rabbit, reindeer, two kinds of camels and the South American llama. Inclusion of the elephant is doubtful since that animal does not breed well in captivity and accordingly cannot be considered fully domesticated, which is true also of apes and monkeys.

Other mammals, such as two kinds of foxes, the skunk, the mink and the muskrat have been domesticated recently for the sake of their fur. Several others now are domesticated as laboratory animals, including the white rat, the mouse and the Guinea pig. The yak, the Barbary sheep, at least two kinds of antelope and several other mammals have been domesticated by the natives of limited regions.

Outside the class of mammals, domestic animals include the chicken, the canary and several other birds; goldfish, guppies and other acquarium fish and several food fish, including trout; the silk worm, and several other insects chiefly bred by entomologists as aids against other insects which are pests; snails and oysters raised for food and leeches for medical purposes; and several kinds of microscopic animals, such as the protozoa raised in laboratories or the malaria germs now bred to treat certain nervous diseases.

Recent domestications include the lion, bred for sale to zoos; the alligator, bred for its skin, and the fly maggots now bred in hospitals to treat bone diseases.

Animal Ethics

Different savants bring up the fact that animals have a moral sense and system. R. L. Ditmars observes the working of conscience, J. B. Haldane the evidence of ethics, C. F. Russell finds "the distinction between truth-speaking and lying and other moral acts implicit in their conduct," and that our virtues trace back to the pre-human stage—to animal ancestry.

Gratitude, fidelity, bravery, obedience to duty, considerateness—these are indeed familiar qualities in horse, dog and cat, the quadrupeds we know best. No horse will step on a thrown rider; for an understanding master he will leap walls, swim rivers, burst his heart to answer a call to speed; and no creature in pain is a truer Stoic.

As for the cat, a mystery to many persons, its motto is service. Its pride is to exhibit the mouse caught in its owner's cellar. Some blame it for "walking alone." So doing, it is simply obeying what it is hard to teach the young idea—that one should captain one's self and make up one's mind regardless of what the crowd is shouting.

The dog in all latitudes has proved himself. He never bites without barking first his declaration of war. Things in his charge—persons, premises or herds—he will defend to the last. In life-saving, in the courageous actions called heroism, he has deserved more medals and monuments than he has received. No snobbery is in him; reprobate or demirep can gain his faith.

Once man was, it is believed, just as ethical. His downfall dates—according to recent researches by this corner—from the invention of the pocket, and its extensions—tin boxes, safes, vaults and warehouses.—Franklin Clarkin in The N.Y. Times.

When You're Writing

Remember, when you're writing about New York,
Faces are as important as buildings.

Dive deep into the subway, that gallery of portraiture;
Bathe your eyes in that flood of bitter truth.
It is not lovely, it proves no theorems,
But there is no weariness it cannot heal.

Generalizers on human trouble,
Have you courage to face those faces?
You, and you, and you, seen only once,
Goodbye, forever, and good luck.

"I presume you have an up-to-date city."

"Very. We've even got it fixed so that you can't stop your automobile within a mile of the place you want to go to."

Submarine To Be Used by Expedition

The submarine, primarily an instrument of war, is justifying the huge amount of research and engineering which has gone toward its development by enlisting in the peaceful service of science. Rear Admiral W. R. Gherardi, hydrographer of the U.S. Navy Department, announces that a submarine and tender will be part of the equipment of an expedition to study the sea floor about the Bahama Islands in 1932. This expedition, international in character, will be under the leadership of Princeton University. It will include also the Royal Society of Great Britain and a member of the Netherlands Geodetic Commission.

Besides the measurements in the intensity of gravity, investigations into the geological foundation of the Bahamas, said to differ in structure from other ocean islands, will be undertaken. While most of the other islands are known to be of volcanic origin, indications are that such is not the case with the Bahamas. The unusual characteristics of the foundation and the meaning of the structural features which account for their existence will be studied and analyzed by the experts of the expedition.

The submarine is called into the field because of the character of some of the work to be undertaken, which requires great steadiness obtainable below the surface of the sea and the necessity of submerging the instruments.

The submersible will be used in the submarine studies for a period of about two weeks. Vening Meinesz, of the Netherlands Geodetic Commission will conduct the multiple pendulum observations.

How Many of them Can Sew?

Quebec Action Catholique (Ind.): An Ontario Women's Association has asked the Government to find work for unemployed women. The problem is complicated, for the Government will have to find out what kind of work it can give these women. At the present the country has an army of white collar unemployed. There is also an army of unemployed artisans. The works voted are almost all of the pick and shovel type, the kind of work that can do the white collar man no good. He is not fitted for this work. If it is impossible to find work for an important part of our male unemployed, how are we going to find any for our women? About the only thing possible would be to start huge sewing circles to make clothes for those who had no money to buy clothes. How many of them know how to sew?

French Woman to Head Feminine Move for Peace

Paris.—A dynamic blue-eyed French woman, whose creed is "the science of peace," will be the leading feminine figure in an international mass meeting on disarmament scheduled here late this month, preceding the world disarmament conference in Geneva in February.

She is Mlle. Louise Weiss, managing editor of the international magazine "L'Europe Nouvelle." Since the days when she worked as a nurse of World War prisoners she has delved untiringly into the study of international politics—to her "the sole means by which nations may master the science of peace and the prevention of wars."

"Disarmament is an international matter, which can be settled only through international understanding," says Mlle. Weiss

"True security can never be found in competitive armaments."

Helium Keeps Cake Fresh Sixty Days

Also Can Heat or Cool Home, Keep Flyers Warm and Aid Ill

When the British dirigible R-101 was destroyed by fire resulting in heavy loss of life because of the highly inflammable hydrogen, the cry again went up to make balloons safe by filling them only with helium. Helium is non-explosive but until recently its price had been so high and the restrictions put on it by the American government, which controlled production, so severe, that use of it was almost impossible for European balloons.

Now, however, with perfection of devices for separating this mysterious gas from other gases, a new day seems to be dawning for helium, says "The Milwaukee Journal." Starting experiments, which not only revolutionize the methods of obtaining helium but which find new practical uses for the gas, have just been made by scientists.

For example, experimenters announced the other day that orange juice sealed in helium was found to be as fresh at the end of six months as it had been originally. Half a sponge cake was left exposed to the atmosphere. At the end of two months the cake in the helium was as moist and fresh as the day it came from the oven. The other half of course was spoiled.

Helium Has Many Uses

These early experiments indicate only a few of the many uses besides inflating dirigible airships, that are being found for that strange gas. Helium, it has been demonstrated, can both heat and cool the home, keep flyers warm, preserve food, treat pulmonary and blood diseases, aid metallurgy, develop deep sea diving and caisson work and be utilized in drying systems and in the grading and grinding of powdered materials It may even be made available for electrical generators and transformers and in lighting and television.

This unusual gas has had an unusual career. Colorless and odorless, the lightest gas known except hydrogen, helium was discovered in the sun in 1868. Twenty-six years later it was found on the earth by Sir William Ramsay. Sir William continued his work and demonstrated, in 1903, that helium was a product of the radioactive disintegration of radium.

It was an incident that occurred during an air raid on London early in the World War that led British scientists to make an effort to provide the allies with helium. One of the zeppelins defied every attempt with anti-aircraft guns to bring it down, Although others were destroyed. The British surmised that the Germans had equipped this impregnable zeppelin with helium.

Small quantities were found in England and France, but when the scientists, under the direction of Sir Richard Threlfall and Sir William Ramsay turned to America they found a sufficient supply at Dexter, Kan. The circumstances that surrounded the discovery were quite amusing. The people of Dexter looked forward to a great boom for their town when geologists pointed out strong indications of petroleum.

Gas Blows Out Flame

The test well brought in gas. It was decided to celebrate the good luck. A holiday was declared and a platform built from which the Mayor and other speakers were to hold forth. The speeches rolled out in good style but there was a hitch when the gas was turned on and the Mayor tried to light it. Every time he applied a lighted match the gas blew it out.

It was concluded that the pressure was too strong, so the pipe was extended and a bonfire used in an attempt to ignite it—but the gas would not burn. Great was the chagrin of the Mayor and the people of Dexter who had been confident that fortune would spring from the hole they had drilled. Rival towns gave them the ha ha and made wisecracks about Dexter's "wonderful fire extinguisher."

But it turned out to be another case of he who laughs last laughs best. Professor H. B. Cady, of the University of Kansas, discovered that the gas contained the two inert elements, nitrogen and helium. Sir Richard Threlfall heard of this and sent his representatives to Kansas. They were so satisfied with what they found amid the wheat fields that they made plans for an extraction plant.

While this was not built, the United States, upon entering the war, at once prepared for the production of helium, spending millions in surveys, research and building containers for storing and transporting the gas. Before the war ended hundreds of steel containers of compressed helium were ready for shipmont to France.

Now a Great Industry

"Helium then became a great peacetime industry of the United States alone, for its deposits, found in the Texas Panhandle, near Amarillo, are far richer than anywhere else in the world, the gas assaying 1.75 per cent. helium. The two fields in Canada, one north of the Montana line, and the other in Ontario, produce helium of but eight-tenths of 1 per cent.

"Fifteen years ago this gas cost $1,700 a cubic foot. To-day it is so cheap that it is used in toy balloons as well as dirigibles. Helium is used over and over again, as it easily can be purified of the contaminating air that seeps into the gas bags. The United States uses only helium airships. The six commercial airships in service in the United Stataes are equipped with helium.

"Helium is hailed as a blessing to persons who have to work under conditions of high artificial air pressure. The new discovery enables deep sea divers to descend to greater depths and remain under water a much longer time. Tunnel workers will be able to labor under much higher air pressure."

RHEUMATISM and NEURITIS

Driven From the System Just By Drinking This "Tea"

A simple but WONDERFUL REMEDY for Rheumatism, Neuritis and "acid" complaints. Not a drug nor medicine, but a tropical plant called HERVEA. A beverage is made of the tiny leaf, which you prepare and drink like ordinary "Tea." No trouble or fuss, you make it in your own home; the RELIEF IS FELT AT ONCE, and becomes evident more and more every day. Hundreds of people in all ranks of life have received lasting benefit and have sent me letters praising this wonderful little plant.

Drink a cupful of HERVEA each morning and you will feel a different person. The reason is that it expels the uric acid poisons and PREVENTS NEW ACCUMULATIONS of further acid deposits in the system.

TRIAL PACKAGE FREE

Over in England, where so many people suffer with rheumatism, HERVEA has given such wonderful results that today every mail brings a sheaf of letters asking for free trial packages, which are gladly sent by the importer of HERVEA. So many requests were received also from Canada, that a Canadian depot has been established and the same offer of a trial package free is now made to every sufferer from rheumatism or neuritis.

Mr. Lee, the importer of HERVEA "tea," offers to send you, through his Canadian representative, a trial package of this "tea" free. If you feel you are getting benefit, he will supply you with a further quantity at a small charge. From his own personal experience, he states that this "tea" is most effective for rheumatism and allied complaint—and what it did for him in a few weeks it should do for you—if you will give it a fair trial. Just send your name and address and you will receive, free of charge, a trial package of Hervea "tea" for rheumatism. If you wish you may send four cents in stamps to help pay postage and distribution costs.

SELF EXAMINATION

Let not sleep fall upon thy eyes till thou hast thrice examined the transactions of the past day. Where have I turned aside from rectitude? What have I been doing? What have I left undone, which I ought to have done? Begin thus from the first act, and proceed; and in conclusion; at the ill which thou has done, be troubled, and rejoice for thee good. —Pythagoras.

Schoolboys Wear Overalls

Raleigh, N.C.—Twenty-five male students of the Nashville, N.C., High School, recently appeared at school clad in neat blue overalls, made of cotton, and informed the principal, Professor Gray R. King, that it was their intention to carry on a campaign designed to stimulate the increased use of the South's staple. The boys urged the girls to join them in this movement, especially in the matter of wearing cotton hosiery.

Mrs. Nagger (to garbage man as she opens back door)—"Am I too late for the garbage?"

Garbage Man—"No, ma'am. Jump right in."

Neighbor ladies probably saw little that they considered fascinating about Cleopatra. People with clean records often are targets for dirty remarks. There is only one more thing to be feared. Some men take their troubles to bed with them, but wise men sleep alone. The girl who shops around for a husband never knows what is in store for her.

Joe—"He's a crook; he's wanted in Chicago."

Sam—"Why do they want any more crooks in Chicago?"

Gladys—"I'm a little dubious."

Calvin—"Why don't you take something for it?"

The church-school lesson in the primary department was about Samson. After the teacher had described the great deeds of the man, to her small charges, she asked:

Teacher—"Now, where do you suppose he got his great strength?"

Little Fellow—"Oh, I guess he ate spinach."

She—"Where will you be stopping at when you get to Paris?"

He—"Lady, when I get to Paris, I'll stop at nothing."

During the making of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," they naturally came to the scene where Simon Legree has to whale the tar out of Uncle Tom. Everything was ready, the lash lifted and about to fall when Uncle Tom let out a yell.

"Hold everything," he bellowed. "I forgot to put on the cork undershirt."

Willie—"Pa, what is excelsior?"

Pa—"Long saw dust, son!"

The Kid—"Pop, how soon will I be old enough to do as I please?"

The Old Man—"I don't know. Nobody has ever lived that long yet."

There would be many more thin humans in the world if it were half as much fun taking it off as it is putting it on. Half the world would like to know how to persuade the other half to let loose of its money. A man used to go to the golf club a great deal, coming home rather late. His wife became suspicious and went through his pockets one night, and found nothing but—a hole in one. The world is made up really of three classes, those who really try, those who half try and those who don't try at all.

COULD NOT TURN IN BED

Held by Unseen Hands

LOCKED JOINTS THAT KRUSCHEN RELEASED

Unseen hands held this woman in her bed. They held her limbs and her joints, so that she was scarcely able to move. They were the hands of the uric acid fiend—and their grip became tighter and tighter every day.

She had almost despaired of ever loosening their hold—when she made what she describes as "a wonderful discovery." She found Kruschen. Read how it helped her:—

"I have suffered terribly for a very long time with rheumatoid arthritis. The pain I've suffered I cannot explain to you! I commenced taking Kruschen six months ago,—following directions, and I am thankful to say in less than a week I was able to get a night's rest and sleep. That was something I had not had for a very long time. My joints seemed completely locked and I could not turn in bed for pain. Now I'm able to sleep well, turn with ease, and get about fine, and my joints seem to be quite different. It was one day when I was reading in the newspaper about Kruschen that I decided to try it. And now I shall never be without it. I consider Kruschen is a very wonderful discovery."—Mrs. R. L.

The system of the rheumatic subject is a producer of that dangerous body poison known as uric acid, which is composed of knife-edged crystals. It is bred in accumulated waste matter which the organs of elimination have failed to expel. Kruschen is a powerful solvent of these flint-hard crystals. It swiftly dulls their sharp edges, then flushes them out of the system. Your pains ease; swellings subside; knotted joints become loose.

Better still, Kruschen eliminates the root cause of the evil. Taken regularly, it keeps your liver and kidneys in perfect tune, so that these eliminating organs free your inside from all poison-breeding waste products.

Kruschen Salts is obtainable at all Drug Stores at 45c. and 75c. per bottle.

When PAIN Comes

WHAT many people call indigestion very often means excess acid in the stomach. The stomach nerves have been over-stimulated, and food sours. The corrective is an alkali, which neutralizes the acids instantly. And the best alkali known to medical science is Phillips' Milk of Magnesia.

One spoonful of this harmless, tasteless alkali in water neutralizes instantly many times that much acid, and the symptoms disappear at once. You will never use crude methods when once you learn the efficiency of this. Go, get a small bottle to try.

Be sure to get the genuine Phillips' Milk of Magnesia prescribed by physicians for 50 years in correcting excess acids. 50c a bottle—any drug store. (Made in Canada.)

COOKSVILLE

On Sunday evening, at Cooksville, Rev. Dr. Hincks, Toronto, was the special speaker at the anniversary services of the church conducted by Rev. C. Sinclair Jones. Gordon B. Jackson was soloist.

James Gow, 70, of Burlington, a traveller for the Williams Shoe Company of Brampton, died Friday afternoon at the Peel Memorial Hospital from injuries sustained when his car met in collision with another car driven by David Wilson, manager of the Bank of Montreal, at Georgetown, near Cooksville, earlier in the day. Gow is believed to have suffered a fracture of the skull, and in the crash his false teeth became lodged in his throat. They were removed by Dr. Harold Sutton and Dr. T. Bromley before the patient was taken to the hospital.

Wilson, who was also injured and taken to the hospital, was charged with manslaughter by Provincial Officers Ted Kyle and Charles Hefferon, who investigated.

MARRIAGES

Stevenson—Bentley

There was a pretty wedding at the home of Mrs. Henry Bentley, seventh line, Trafalgar, at seven o'clock on Wednesday evening, Nov 25th, when her daughter, Dolly Irene, was married to Frank Usher Stevenson, son of Usher Stevenson, of Snider's Corners. Rev. C. H. Lowry, minister of Knox church, Sixteen, performed the ceremony.

The drawing room was decorated with autumn bloom and looked very pretty when the immediate relatives gathered to witness the interesting ceremony and to extend congratulations to the popular groom and the pretty bride, both of whom have a large circle of friends in the district.

Miss Maud Bentley, the bride's sister, was bridesmaid while Joseph Bentley was groomsman.

Following the ceremony a reception was held and the young couple left on an extended honeymoon trip. On their return they will reside in Oakville. Many friends extend their best wishes.

Look Them Over First

The merchant and manufrcturer who advertises actually are placing their merchandise before you for your inspection. They invite your most critical attention and an uncompromising comparison. And their advertisements, so to speak, say to their products "We have introduced you to the public—now stand on your own merits."

If the manufacturer and merchant did not have confidence in their wares they would hesitate to call attention to them. For advertising rigidly tests the maker, the seller and the merchandise. Business so tested, and found not wanting, is prosperous.

It is through advertising that the excellent things of the world are brought to the attention of those who are seeking for the best and most economical way to spend their money

U. C. Young People Meet

The United Church Young Peoples Society held a very successful meeting on Monday evening. ....The devotional part of the evening was led by Rev. G.H. Purchase after the singing of several well known hymns. The newly elected president, Jim Steen, was in the chair during this part of the meeting. Harry Johnston who was last year's very successful president, was in charge of the next part of the meeting.

A very interesting and instructive address was given by Mr. James B. Ross, in which he stated the chief purposes of our young peoples society. He mentioned chiefly the mental, social and spiritual development which these meetings afforded. This was followed by a much appreciated piano solo by Miss Margaret Falconer.

Following this, Howard Purchase spoke to the Young People for a short time on "How to Make Christ more Real in our Lives." He particularly stressed the value of bringing to the light the worthwhile things in life rather than the trivial and less important items. The rapt attention of the young people showed that this address was also highly appreciated.

Mrs. MacArthur gave a short interesting address on some of the important events of the present time

Miss Clift then led the social part of the meeting and everyone apparently enjoyed themselves immensely

This is the second meeting of this society this season and the large attendance showed the interest which is being taken in the work.

While C.H. Caldwell, Meadowvale was walking around the house in his stocking feet he ran a gramophone needle in one of his feet. Dr. Montemurro took him to the Peel Memorial Hospital, Brampton where the offending intruder was removed under a local anesthetic.

S.H.S. Notes

The rugby season is closed as far as Streetsville High is concerned. The boys played four games and won two of them, which is more than any former teams have accomplished.

In last year's hockey club games the boys gave a good account of themselves and finished second to Trinity, the cup winners. This year the boys will certainly make things hot for the cup holders and we hope to add it to our large collection of sports trophies (Hector cup and Softball Challenge cup). The boys have already began practising in back lots and on side streets to develop powerful shots

The fall term exams are over now —thank goodness!—and commencement practise is in full swing.

The program will include the following:—presentation of sports medals, sweaters and crests, presentation of diplomas; parodies to the graduates; a drill; one or two short plays and a few short speeches.

Don't forget the date. Dec. 17th. Keep it open. Thanks.

Bert's Desire

From a window in a little back street in an Ontario town, a small boy gazed longingly on the "ball players" in an adjoining lot. A strange weakness kept him resting on a chair or in his cot, unable to join in the fun.

When the doctor was called, a glance told him the story, and it was not long before little Bert was hurried off to the Queen Mary Hospital for Consumptive Children. Here the great desire of his life seems likely to be granted. Bert has made wonderful progress, and the nurse says hopefully that in a few months more he will be able to try his prowess in the baseball nine —and what greater happiness could befall a little bed-ridden lad than this?

To save many such as Bert from consumption, this great work must go on, helped by subscriptions upon which the hospital so largely depends. A gift from you will be gratefully appreciated. Please send it to Mr. A. E. Ames, 223 College St., Toronto.

THE

TULE MARSH MURDER

STORY OF A MISSING ACTRESS AND THE TAXING OF WITS TO EXPLAIN HER FATE.

BY NANCY BARR MAVITY.

SYNOPSIS

Don Ellsorth's wife, formerly actress Sheila O'Shay, disappears. Dr. Cavanaugh, criminal psychologist, learns that their married life has been unhappy.

Peter Piper, a Herald reporter, while trying to see Dr. Cavanaugh, meets Barbara Cavanaugh and finds she was engaged to Ellsworth before his marriage.

A body found in the tule marsh is identified as that of Sheila. Barbara faints when she hears this. Mrs. Kane, Sheila's maid, is arrested and admits that Ellsworth married Sheila under threat of breach of promise. The breach of promise papers are not in Sheila's safe, but Cavanaugh and Peter find a threatening note signed "David Orme." Peter runs him down at a tourists' camp and Dr. Cavanaugh agrees to examine him.

CHAPTER XXXIV.

Peter closed Dr. Cavanaugh's office door behind him in a state of unaccustomed mental turbulence. He loafed along the hedge-bordered path which led from the separate side entrance of the office to the front driveway, chewing a twig which he had absent-mindedly plucked from the closely-woven leaves of box.

There was something intimidating to ordinary folk about the detachment of science, the impersonal clarity of knowledge. Peter no longer thought of the doctor merely as an expert in a field which interested Peter only as a source of copy on occasion. The psychiatrist loomed before his distorted mental vision as a marionette master pulling a hundred invisible wires. There had been a disturbing quality in his laughter— something Olympian and aloof, as if he alone knew what hidden paths they were following, as if they were all acting out a plot with the involuntary jerks of puppets while he sat behind the screen and held the script that gave meaning to their actions—held it by the power that came from understanding of the mysterious springs of human conduct.

Peter shook his head impatiently and tossed the twig away.

"I'd better go to bed and get about forty-eight hours of sleep," he muttered. "The pursuit of crime is beginning to tell on me."

Nevertheless, he continued to loiter by the side of the hedge. Were all the people in the world more or less "cracked," needing only a push to knock them off the narrow wall of normality, like Humpty Dumpty?

True, Orme might have killed Sheila O'Shay without being insane—and he might, on the other hand, be unbalanced without having killed Sheila O'Shay. They were no nearer to finding out why he had written that threatening letter, why he had changed his name and fled, why that flight had been so inconclusive, so easily abandoned, than they had been on the night when the letter was first found. And whatever Orme's relations with the dead woman might have been, they did not explain Ellsworth's unwillingness to have her disappearance made public, his purloining of the evidence of the contemplated breach of promise suit, nor Mrs. Kane's effort to prevent the identification of the body.

Despite weeks of headlines and front page stories, thousands of words thrown into type and out again, investigations and suspicions, the tule marsh mystery was as much a mystery as on the day when Jimmy first dubbed it "the best murder of the year."

Motive! The doctor was right. Without understanding what pulled the wires in people's heads, clues were nothing but a meaningless jumble. And motives themselves were a queer mixture—even Peter's own.

What these people did and why they did it was, strictly speaking, none of his business. A month ago he did not know any of them, unless Sheila O'Shay's frequently published photograph in rotogravure sections and news pages constituted acquaintance. Yet here he was, losing sleep, forgetting meals, working uncounted hours of "overtime" in the attempt to find out who had killed Sheila O'Shay, and why.

It was partly sheer human curiosity and pride, an unwillingness to confess himself baffled; partly the desire, not only that a solution be found, but that the "Herald" have a hand in finding it—and partly the need of setting Barbara somewhere in clear sunlight, and brushing aside from her, always, anxiety and doubt and trouble and folly.

It was because he cared so much for Barbara that Orme must have a fair show. There must be no lingering shadows, no thrusting of guilt upon a possibly inocent man. If there were any chance of that, Barbara, he knew as surely as if he had known her all her life, would throw caution to the winds, even to her own mortal hurt.

And she had need of caution—that much was abundantly clear. It flashed upon Peter with the force of complete conviction that though Barbara might conceivably have killed Mrs. Ellsworth—because anyone might conceivably do almost anything, perhaps by a fatal accident in circumstances that would not bear explanation—she could not have taken that body to the marsh and burned it.

With a sigh of audible relief Peter seized firmly on the supposition that she was protecting someone else with her quixotic loyalty. She might even have known, or suspected, what was going to happen. But in either case, neither quixoticism nor loyalty would wipe out the ugly, hard legality of the phrase, "accessory to the fact."

Peter's whirring thoughts stopped short, as suddenly as the cutting off of a motor. He had drifted to the corner where the side path joined the main driveway, and saw Barbara herself at the curb, getting out of her car. He stood and watched her with sheer unthinking delight—delight in the sunshine that made of her hair a gleaming cap on her bare head; delight in the childlike unconsciousness and swift, agile grace of her movements. He smiled as he noted that she had evidently forgotten her handbag. She leaned far forward into the car, poised with one foot on the surb, and groped in the crevice between the seat cushion and the back upholstery.

Slowly she withdrew her hand and stood staring with bent head—not at a handbag, but at something that gleamed and flashed with a row of tiny green lights that caught the sun. It was a large amber comb of the Spanish type, flaring fan-shaped to the double row of emeralds that curved, fully six inches from end to end, across the top.

Peter thought that he had cried out, that he had run toward her; but there was only a slight choking sound in his throat, and his hand reached out automatically and clutched the hedge for support.

That comb was famous from a hundred descriptions, familiar from a hundred photographs. The story had been reprinted times without number—how a headstrong Balkan prince had stolen it from his family's royal collection for a woman's whim, and had been sequestered under guard for three years to keep him out of reach of his enchantress when the theft and its motive were discovered; how the woman had worn it triumphantly in her tawny, unbobbed hair ever since, declaring that if they wouldn't let her have the prince, she'd at least have the emeralds, and leaving the royal relatives to sputter helplessly.

It was the emerald comb of Sheila O'Shay.

Barbara held the huge, glittering ornament in her hand for a moment, her head drooping lower and lower. Then her face lifted. Peter saw her gaze dart from side to side, up and down the deserted, sun-drenched street.

He had never seen such utter, trapped terror on a human countenance. Her fingers wrenched frantically at the comb, breaking it tooth by tooth, jewel by jewel into fragments. Some of them dropped to the pavement, but she stooped to pick them up. Then she ran, her two laden hands pressed tight against her breast, to the sewer opening at the corner.

"Don't!" Peter cried out hoarsely, but she did not hear him. He could not himself have told whether he was protesting against her act or against the whole world in which such things could be—an instinctive, horrified denial of his senses.

He saw her kneel in the dry rubbish of the butter and thrust her hands through the storm grating that covered the entrance to the sewer pipe. When she withdrew them, they were empty. She turned then, and ran back to the house as swiftly as she had come. Her skirt and her light colored stockings were streaked with grime from the gutter, but she made no effort to brush off the dust; she did not even look down. With that white tortured face, staring straight ahead, she fled up the driveway, passed within three feet of Peter without seeing him, and dashed into the house.

CHAPTER XXXV.

Sheila O'Shay's body had been driven to the marsh in Barbara's car—the one thing Peter had held to be inconceivable had happened. He saw the jaunty little sports coupe nosing its way through the night with its burden of death. Barbara's white face of terror above the wheel. Had she searched with frenzied fingers for the missing comb, not daring to strike a light? Had she, in the horror of those dark hours, not even noticed that it had slipped from the gleaming copper of Sheila's hair—perhaps not even known that it had ever been there?

A groan broke from Peter's lips. He was dully aware that something was pressing sharply against his forehead. The pain brought him slowly from the clutch of that imagined scene to a consciousness of his surroundings, like one who has plunged into the deep water and rises, by no effort of his own, to the surface. He found that he was leaning against the trunk of a tree, his face pressed close to its rough bark. His breath came in sobbing gasps, as if he had been running to the point of exhaustion.

And then, as suddenly as the turning on of a light in a dark room, he was roused from the numbness of nightmare by a flash of absolute certitude. Barbara's hand might have held a knife or jerked a trigger; but Barbara could not have flung the body of Sheila O'Shay into the marsh and set fire to the grass. She could not have done it, simply because she was Barbara.

If he had seen with his own eyes her figure at the wheel with that other huddled figure beside it, he would still have known that she did not do it—because she was Barbara. He had believed without evidence that this one thing she could not do. The physically impossible—or what looked like it—was often enough accomplished, but there were impossibilities that struck deeper. He had the evidence now, and he defied it. Evidence was as nothing, because no outer facts could give the lie to the central fact that was Barbara.

Cock-Crow

Out of the wood of thoughts that grows by night
To be cut down by the sharp axe of light,—
Out of the night, two cocks together crow,
Cleaving the darkness with a silver blow;
And bright before my eyes twin trumpeters stand,
Heralds of splendor, one at either hand,
Each facing each as in a coat of arms:
The milkers lace their boots up at the farms.

—Edward Thomas, in "Collected Poems."

The Changing Army

The men who served in his Majesty's infantry during and just after the War will be interested to know that one of their pet bugbears is likely to disappear.

This is the puttee, the strip of cloth which the recruit was expected to wrap round the calves of his legs in a neat and soldier-like way. And Heaven help him if the result didn't come up to the sergeant-major's expectations!

New designs for infantry uniform and equipment are now being considered, and one proposal which commands much support is that canvass gaiters should be substituted for puttees. Such gaiters are worn by United States soldiers, and are said to be at once more weatherproof and more comfortable than puttees.—London Tit Bits.

TOO PARTICULAR

The old family retainer was showing some visitors round his master's ancient castle, which had been thrown open to the public.

Coming to the banqueting-hall he said:

"In this very hall, two hundred years ago, the young and beautiful countess was foully murdered."

All the visitors but one were duly impressed, and this one said:

"I thought you told us last week that it happened in the ante-room?"

The guide turned angrily on her.

"I know that," he snapped; "but we can't go in there now, it's being decorated.

What New York Is Wearing

BY ANNABELLE WORTHINGTON

Illustrated Dressmaking Lesson Furnished With Every Pattern

Here's slimming lines for the woman of heavier figure.

And a smart dress that will answer many needs for fall and winter day wear.

The bodice has a deep cross-over vest, one of the best means to conceal breadth. The softly falling jabot lends a pretty effect and contributes much toward its slenderness.

The yoke of the skirt is cut to the smartest depth to narrow the hipline. The seaming, tapering as it does to a deep point, is decidedly length giving.

A patterned sheer woolen in mauve-brown tone combines with plain blending brown shade woolen.

Black crepe satin with white crepe satin and black velvet with lace vest are stunning for this model.

Style No. 3038 is designed for sizes 36, 38, 40, 42, 44, 46 and 48 inches bust. Size 36 requires 4 yards of 39-inch material with ¾ yard of 39-inch contrasting and ¼ yard of 39-inch all-over lace.

HOW TO ORDER PATTERNS

Write your name and address plainly, giving number and size of such patterns as you want. Enclose 20c in stamps or coin (coin preferred; wrap it carefully) for each number, and address your order to Wilson Pattern Service, 73 West Adelaide St., Toronto.

Trapping Season Begins In Northern Manitoba

Winnipeg.—The trapping season "north of 53," has begun in Manitoba. According to the provincial game regulations the season will be open for the trapping of otter, marten, fisher, sable, mink and the various species of fox. For other fur-bearing animals the season still remains closed.

The open season for beaver, which lasts for one month only, will begin March 15. This regulation was put into effect by a provincial order-in-council.

A large number of trappers are said to be scattered through the vast virgin territory both north and south of the Hudson Bay Railway. A considerable number are reported to have gone south from York Factory to trap around the shores of James Bay. Some thirty trappers are reported to be located north and west of Churchill, within a radius of from 100 to 200 miles of the town as well as along the bay coast as far up as Chesterfield Inlet.

The crookedness of a river is but a matter of course.

Cat Adopts Two Rats

Columbia, Mo.—What started out to be an interesting demonstration of maternal instinct has become a scientific experiment in the University of Missouri School of Medicine.

Queen Eugenie, the pet feline, and the best mouser in the animal house, became the mother of a fine litter of kittens about Nov. 1. But the kittens died, and Queen Eugenie was deeply affected.

The other day she reappeared with two baby wild rats, procured from some dark corner of the building. She located them in her box in such fashion that they could not escape, and then with system and dispatch began to feed them as she would have done the departed litter.

In Defense of the Movies

The much-maligned movies have at least one good deed to their credit. Public libraries in Great Britain are reporting that the filming of "classics" sends up the demand for such books. John Barrymore's picture "Svengali" has sent thousands to George du Maurier's famous novel "Trilby," on which it is based, and other old favorites which are coming back to public favor as the result of Hollywood's activities are "East Lynne," "Tom Sawyer," "Resurrection," and "Moby Dick," which gave Barrymore another of his great roles, that of "The Sea Beast."

Nor are the moderns neglected. Thousands to whom John Galsworthy had hitherto been only a name have recently discovered the work of this master of English fiction. This can be traced quite definitely to the popularity of such films as "Old English," in which George Arliss gave such a magnificent performance, "The Skin Game," and "Escape."—"Answers" (London).

Anecdotes Recall Naughty Nineties

Delightful stories about famous people of the nineties—and after, are "as thick as autumnal leaves" and just as colored, in the reminiscences ("Life Was Worth Living") of W. Graham Robertson, the painter. Mr. Robertson—he has a genius for making friends and what is more difficult, keeping them—was for years the close friend of Sarah Bernhardt and Ellen Terry. And at one and the same time, too! Then he knew, intimately, Whistler, Sargent, Rossetti, Burne-Jones, Henry Irving, Oscar Wilde and —well, pretty nearly everybody in the artistic world worth knowing.

One day Robertson found the divine Sarah in the highest spirits, evidently raised by some paragraph she had chanced upon in a newspaper.

"There goes the last of them!" she cried, with a flourish of the paper.

"The last of . . . .?" he gaped, unintelligently.

"The last of the doctors who gave me only one more year to live when I was a girl. There were any amount of them, and now they're all dead and here I am!"

• • •

Another time he was dining with Bernhardt and old Madame Guerard, who always lived and travelled with her. The conversation fell upon the roles in life which each should choose to play.

"I should like to be a queen," said Sarah at once.

"My dear child," protested Madame Guerard, "what people do you think would ever stand you? You would find yourself with your head off in a week."

Ellen Terry had a collection of odd little cottages in unlikely places within reach of London and was perpetually disappearing, all by herself, into one or another of these burrows. One was a tiny public-house (saloon) called The Audrey Arms, and she was obliged by her lease to keep the business going! But she discouraged custom by the quality of the "swipes" she served, and the trade went to another little "pub" in the same row of cottages, which sold much better beer.

Just think of being served with a "pot of 'arf an' arf'" by Ellen Terry! What bliss!

In due course, Graham Robertson was bidden by Ellen Terry to come down to The Audrey Arms for "a breath of fresh air."

"Only one customer dropped in during my visit when we were at luncheon in the bar parlor," he recalls, "and I stepped out to serve him. It was my sole experience as a potman and I trust that I gave satisfaction and good measure."

A friend of Henry Irving's—Walter Pollock — who used to give a wonderfully exact imitation of the famous actor, was paralyzed one night when in the presence of convivial friends, Irving said, suddenly.

"Now let us have that imitation of me that everybody is so fond of."

"Oh, I couldn't . . . "I ....." stammered the unhappy victim.

"Go on, go on," said Irving. "Here," handing him a book, "read a page of this imitating me."

Pollock meekly took the book and began in a half-hearted and shamefaced way, then warming to his work, finished in his best manner amidst the usual applause, chuckles, Robertson.

Irving waited till the laughter had ceased and then said slowly and with perfect sincerity:

"My boy, I never heard you read so well before in my life!"

It is an old trick with reporters, trying to obtain an interview with a celebrity who doesn't appreciate the honor—and there are some who don't—to use flattery by asking their victim for a "message to the people." A certain scribe once tried the dodge on Burne-Jones, the famous painter.

"Tell them," said the great man, "that I hope they are very well, and that I am pretty well"

And off he went.

Burne-Jones, in his younger days, asked Dante Gabriel Rossetti, the poet and painter, why he had introduced some inexplicable object into a picture.

"To puzzle fools, boy, to puzzle fools," came the unexpected reply.

"But," remarked Burne-Jones, relating the incident to Graham Robertson, "I don't altogether recommend the practice."

Whistler had long wished to paint a portrait of Disraeli, and one day he came upon his longed-for model sitting alone in St. James's Park, London, apparently absorbed in thought. Plucking up his courage (Whistler afraid!) he endeavored to recall himself to the mystic Prime Minister and finally made his request. Disraeli remained silent throughout; then, after an icy pause, murmured:

"Go away, go away, little man."

Whistler went, and with him Disraeli's chance of immortality on canvas, adds Graham Robertson.

Ann Pavlowa, world famous dancer, was passionately fond of her beautiful home at Hampstead—adjoining good old Hampstead Heath—with its lovely garden and lake, the latter built specially for her swans. "Ivy House," for so it was named, had once been the home of Turner, the celebrated painter, and Pavlowa would say, "I am glad to be living in a house that used to belong to an artist!" Not because Turner was Turner, be it noted, but because Turner was an artist!

She loved her swans and was quite unafraid of them, recalls Walford Hayden (who for twenty years was with Pavlowa as a music director.) She would seize them rapturously! and play with them by the water's edge for hours and they never injured her in any way. Despite the fact that she had danced "The Swan" dance innumerable times, she never allowed herself to become self-conscious in her love for the swans themselves.

Each time Pavlowa had to leave Ivy House on one of her prolonged world tours, she would go into every room and say god-bye to her birds and flowers, says Mr. Hayden (in his book, "Pavlowa.)) When she would come back into the drawing room she would be weeping. She would sit on a chair and pray, blessing her home in the Russian manner before leaving it.

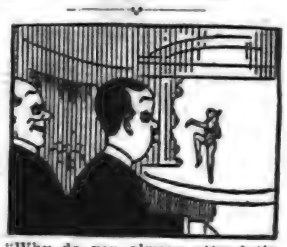
She never failed to observe this ritual—except once. This was on the last occasion when she left Ivy House on her departure for the Continental tour during which she died When leaving the house this time, Pavlowa astonished everybody by her hurry. She seemed to be running blindly away from the home she was never to see again.



Applied Genesis

Little Wilfred had been absent from Sunday school, and the teacher called to inquire why.

"The real reason," said the boy's mother, "is because I fear he is learning things that only tend to make him mischievous."

"Mischievous!" exclaimed the astonished teacher. "Really, I don't understand how Sunday school could have that effect on him."

"You see," explained the parent, "it's like this. The last time Wilfred went to Sunday school he came home convinced that people are made of dust, and I found him trying to draw his little sister into the vacuum cleaner."—Country Gentleman.

"Why do you always attend the opening performance at the theatre?"

"So I can enjoy the show without thinking what the critics have said."

Tilling By Electricity Favored in Far East

Rural electrification in Algeria is being assiduously developed by the authorities. The country depends largely on its vines and its agriculture, especially cereals and olives, and electricity is used for much of the work in this connection. Electric power is also being extended to such operations as sawing, cream separating, dough kneading, and so forth, besides its growing use, generated by large tractors, for harvesting and threshing. One of its most important uses is for deep plowing, so important for vineyards where the rainfall is irregular and insufficient. Formerly the native used to turn only the surface of the soil with hand implements, and was satisfied with very low yields, but now with electric power available the soil is turned to a depth from 40 to 80 centimeters. Algeria is being forced to turn to machinery owing to lack of suitable labor.

Only Turkish-Made Clothes To Be Worn in Turkey

Istanbul, Turk.—Turkish officials from President Kemal down, and their families must wear clothes of Turkish manufacture, the Turkish Cabinet decided in a meeting at Angora.

President Kemal is required to forgo his London tailors and Angora women their Paris gowns as a part of the Turkish Government's new economy measure.

Salaries of officials will be reduced as one effect of the $10,000,000 cut in the 1932 budget and duties on imported luxuries will be greatly increased.

The Human Touch

Sir Alexander Clegg in the Congregational Quarterly (London): Industry can never be shorn of its human touch except at the loss of efficiency. Men are men even when they become to some extent cogs in a machine, but the better the men and the women, the more silently and smoothly run the cogs, and it is the duty of the directors to encourage and contribute to all that promotes the well-being of their workpeople.

Youth Can Teach Much to Grown-ups

New York—Grown people have to keep on learning in order to be of any use to young people with whom they come in contact, declared Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, in an informal address at the fifth anniversary meeting of the Parents' Magazine.

"The things we teach young people are not nearly so important as what we learn from them," Mrs. Roosevelt said. "We must always be prepared to meet each new age as we come to it. That is what helps us to pass on an atmosphere of experience and of a life lived with understanding, which, I believe, is probably the best thing we can do for children."

Mrs. Roosevelt said that her contacts with young people in her own family now range from one of 24 years to a grandchild of one year, which provide her with plenty of opportunities for diversification in becoming adjusted to them.

Bird Song and Weather

The song of birds is affected by weather changes, according to an English naturalist, H. G. Alexander, who has been making a study of the effects of atmospheric conditions on our feathered friends, says Charles Fitzhugh Talman, in his Science Service feature, Why the Weather? (Washington):

"Changes in weather, especially the onset of severe cold or snow, have an influence upon the amount of bird song, but the effects are different for different species.

"Freezing weather reduces the amount of song of the ground-feeding species, such as skylarks and thrushes, while cold winds have the same effect upon more arboreal feeders.

"Some species, including the coal-tit, respond vocally to sunshine, and some, such as the blackbird, are encouraged by rain. The investigator suggests that sunshine or rain may affect the food supply of these birds and thus induce song, but rain stimulates blackbirds more than either thrushes or robins, though the food is very similar."

Sunday School Lesson

December 6. Lesson X—Rome and Beyond—2 Timothy 4: 8-18. Golden Text—I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith.—2 Timothy 4: 7.

ANALYSIS

I. CALLED OF GOD, Rom. 15: 22-29.
II. "SAFEGUARD THE FAITH," Titus 1:
III. "FAREWELL," 2 Tim. 4: 6-18.

I. CALLED OF GOD, Rom. 15: 22-29.

Paul, at Corinth, was preparing for that Jerusalem journey, destined to be so eventful. A friend of his (Rom. 16: 1, 2) was going to Rome, and he seized the opportunity to send a letter to the Roman Christians. The Christian group in Rome originated, probably, among the pilgrims who had been at Jerusalem during Pentecost.

Paul always believed that "every man's life is a separate thought of God." God had a work for each one to do. Having placed himself at his Father's disposal, his own sphere in life had been made abundantly clear to him, Rom. 1: 1. The man who offers his life whole-heartedly to God will soon come to know where his work lies. Having completed his missionary activity in the Eastern part of the Empire, Paul now turned definitely to Rome.

His pioneering soul, however, did not make of the Empire capital the terminus of his ambition. Paul was always "pressing forward." "A man's reach must exceed his grasp, or what's a heaven for!" said Browning. "Or what's an earth for!" Paul would say. From Rome he would carry the gospel to Spain and the western parts of the empire, v. 24.

His vision of world evangelization did not make him a visionary. Men, believing themselves "called" to some great enterprise have sometimes given up all interest in practical affairs. Paul's enthusiasm was never divorced from common sense. He gave careful attention to details. The relations between the Jewish churches of Palestine and the Gentile churches of Asia Minor and Greece were none too satisfactory. The poverty in Jerusalem provided an opportunity of binding the two together. Paul, seeing that, took much pains to arrange a generous collection for the younger churches for the "poor saints which are at Jerusalem," v. 26. The belated folk who still maintain that the minister ought not to talk about money in the pulpit have not so learned of Paul. Missions and finances are inseparably bound together.

II. "SAFEGUARD THE FAITH," Titus 1:

Paul's anxiety concerning his Jerusalem visit (Rom. 15: 31), was only too well justified. When he came to Rome, he came in chains. Freed after his first trial, he evidently undertook another missionary tour during which he visited Crete. The new faith had evidently come to Crete long before Paul's arrival, for its adherents were found in many cities, v. 5. He had been unable to complete the work of organization and he instructed Titus the continue the appointment of overseers, elders, bishops (all of which terms refer to the same office). Without an organized ministry everything would soon fall into confusion and decay, surrounded as the Christians were with false doctrine and the proverbial dishonesty and immorality of the Cretans.

III. "FAREWELL," 2 Tim. 4: 6-18.

Facing his second trial, and from his cold, damp dungeon in the Mamertine prison (if tradition is to be trusted) Paul writes his second letter to his friend Timothy. "The time of my departure is at hand," v. 6. "Departure" means unmooring. The brave mariner is slipping the cables which bind his ship to the shore, and there is "no moaning of the bar" as he puts out to sea.

Memories of the old days in Tarsus come to him—memories of games and contests In life's great arena he, too has played the game. "I have contested earnestly in the good contest, v. 7. "I have not swerved from my appointed course. In everything I have acted upon what I believed to have been the promptings of God's spirit. I have kept the faith, that is, Christ's faith in me. I have not betrayed the trust he placed in me. I have been true to the larger vision which emancipated me from the cold and narrow legalism of my fathers."

His last days are saddened by loneliness. One friend has gone here, another there. Some have even deserted him in his hour of danger. "Only Luke" is with him—"a friend in need." Longing to see his disciple Timothy again, who is far away in Asia Minor, he writes and urges him to come to him, and, if possible, before winter, v. 21. He does not know that before the leaves fall from the trees in Tre Fontane he will have gone to his reward. Although no one stood by him at his trial, he tells Timothy, he was not alone. His Master was with him. He will continue to be with him. "To him be glory for ever and ever." With full sail and a flowing tide, the brave old mariner puts out to sea.

PIONEERS MEET AFTER HALF CENTURY

Half a century is a long way to look back and when Charlie Shaw (right) met Tom Wilson in the grounds of the Banff Springs Hotel last autumn, it was an occasion for both of them. Tom is a well-known character at the famous Rocky Mountain resort. He is the sole survivor of the Canadian Pacific's first exploration party of 1881, and was the first white man to see Lake Louise. Shaw, who makes his home in Keremos, B.C., is the sole survivor of the survey party under C. E. Perry, C.E., which located the line across the Alberta prairies. The pair met, for the only time in their lives till 1931, in 1883, when Tom was working under Major A. B. Rogers, after whom Rogers Pass is named and Charlie was with Sir Sanford Fleming's memorable expedition through the Kicking Horse Pass. What this gallant pair of veterans must have had to say to each other when they renewed their acquaintance! From the days when they toiled over mountain and plain, blazing the way for the great steel girdle which now binds the provinces of the Dominion together, down to the present day, is history. Their cheery determination has been, and is, reflected in the story of the world's greatest transportation system. The mantle of responsibility has passed from Mountstephen to Van Horne and from Shaughnessy to the broad shoulders of E.W.Beatty, chairman and president of the system. Many progressive improvements have been made. But the spirit which sent Tom and Charlie across hundreds of miles of unexplored territory remains unchanged, for the excellent reason that none better can be found.

Walk on the LEFT of country roads

. . . Face the Traffic

This rule is important at all times, but especially so at dusk and at night.

At such times, no matter how careful the driver of a car is, he may not see you until he is very near to you and it may be impossible for him to stop in time to avoid inflicting serious injury.

Should he swerve to avoid hitting you, though you may escape injury others may be hurt.

Of the 524 fatalities on the highways of Ontario last year a large number were caused by persons walking with rather than against traffic.

PRESERVATION OF THE LORD'S DAY

The Sunday lovers of Streetsville will have the opportunity of contributing to assist in the work of preserving this great national asset very shortly, as a canvass will be made in the town under the auspices of the Lord's Day Alliance of Ontario for this work. A well-informed and trained canvasser, will carry on the canvass, and all will be given the privilege of assisting.

Canada owes much to the Lord's Day Alliance, and the preservation of their efforts ever since the organization of that society forty-two years ago. Within a short time, a statement was made in the offices of the Alliance, by the President of one of the large retail associations of Toronto, that undoubtedly if it had not been for the Lord's Day Alliance, Canada would not have had her Sunday as she has it to-day. It was largely through the activities of the Alliance and the Trades and Labor Council of Canada that the present Dominion Lord's Day Act, the finest in the world, was passed in 1906.

The basis of this Act, namely, a non-commercial Sunday, with everyone possible securing a day of rest from their ordinary vocation, is also the basis of the work of the Alliance. While, to be sure, education is the great task of the Alliance, the second greatest task is to co-operate with employers and employees and the officers of the law in securing a clear understanding and willing observance of the law. Except where every other means fails, the Alliance never advises recourse to the law courts, and above everything else, the Alliance never acts as a prosecutor unless it is necessary to support a test case in order to secure a stated verdict.

With regard to the educative side of the work, the officials state that the chief work of the Alliance has been, and is, the development of public opinion, and that it carries on an uninterrupted campaign of education by means of addresses, newspaper articles and the distribution of literature. They also believe that public opinion, as expressed in the Canadian press, is increasingly in favor of the uncommercialized Sunday, and that the Canadian Sunday is recognized generally to be a great national asset.

If everyone will do what they are able, even though that be a small amount, it will greatly assist in the good work which the Alliance is doing.

PEEL BOYS WIN WITH COLTS AT ROYAL WINTER FAIR

Five members of the Peel Heavy Draft Colt Club, sponsored by the Peel Agricultural Society this year, participated in the Provincial contest at the Royal Winter Fair on November 26th, at which the best colts from 15 counties took part.

The Ontario Horse Breeders' Association and the Federal Department of Agriculture co-operated in the prize money awarded to stimulate the breeding of heavy draft horses and to encourage the young men to become expert exhibitors.

Willie Wylie, Norval, won $25.00 with his female colt, which had won first prize at the Brampton Fall Fair in the Boys' Colt Class. Joe Lyons, Streetsville No. 3, won $23.00; Charlie Montgomery, Tullamore, won $25.00; Herb. Herring, Brampton, won $15.00; and Jim Reid, Derry West, won $20.00. All the colts with the exception of Montgomery's and Reid's were Percherons and sired by "Farmer's Pride" the stallion owned by Fred Ellis, Brampton. Montgomery's colt was sired by W. G. GRANT FLEMING, M.D. — ASSOCIATE SECRETARY

OFFENSIVE AND DANGEROUS

The human saliva is always potentially dangerous and is much more to be feared than the body excretions which are so generally shunned because they are more offensive.

The reason for this is that disease germs leave the body in its secretions. Because most of the disease germs which afflict us are harboured in the nose, throat and lungs, it is the saliva which is most commonly the carrier of disease germs.

It is the transfer of germ-laden secretions of the nose and throat, from one person to another, which accounts for the spread of a very large percentage of all disease germs.

This transfer may be direct, as by means of the particles sprayed when coughs and sneezes go uncovered, or it may be indirect, as when common eating and drinking utensils are soiled by the saliva of the user. Again fingers which have come in contact with these secretions pass them on to food which is touched and later eaten, or the germs which are on one person's fingers may reach another individual by means of a handshake.

All who are interested in the prevention of disease and in their own protection are, of necessity, opposed to the habit of spitting, not merely because it is offensive but because it is dangerous. Dangerous it is, due to the fact that the saliva so often contains the germs of disease.

Spitting is largely a habit. One thing that surprises most people upon visiting a sanatorium is the fact that they hear so little coughing. This is so because in sanatoria the patients are taught that most of their coughing is just a habit, and they very soon learn to control and suppress their coughs.

Not so long ago, every man spat when he smoked. This seemed to be part of the smoking, and the cuspidor was deemed to be a necessary piece of household furniture. Nowadays, the smoker does not spit. Spitting was just a habit, and the cuspidor in the home is rarely seen.

Our habits are influenced by public opinion. The fork is used for eating certain foods, and the spoon for others; the knife is never put to the mouth. Why? Because public opinion frowns on the individual who swallows his knife when eating.

The dangerous habit of spitting will not be stopped by laws, but it will disappear when the spitter feels that public opinion is against him, and he realizes that the habit of spitting shuts out from the company of his fellow-men.

If the throat must be cleared, then a handkerchief should be used to receive the saliva in order that others may not be exposed to danger. The careless spitter is responsible for much of the spread of tuberculosis. He who spits carelessly endangers the lives of children. Surely no one would wish to do so if he realized what he was doing.

Questions concerning Health, addressed to the Canadian Medical Association, 184 College Street, Toronto, will be answered personally by letter.

OBITUARY

Susan Allen

On Friday morning, Dec. 4th, Susan, daughter of the late George and Rebecca Allen, passed away to the Great Beyond, after a short illness. She was born in Streetsville and spent all her life here. She was a member of the United Church and a faithful attendant. She is survived by one sister, Mrs. (Dr.) S. H. Smith, and one brother, Hugh, Toronto.

The funeral took place Sunday afternoon. Service was conducted at the home by Rev. Geo. H. Purchase, assisted by Rev. R. J. W. Perry, and interment was made in Streetsville cemetery.

The pallbearers were Dr. Bowie, and Messrs. Wm. Couse, C. H. Falconer, R. H. Greig, T. H. Goodison and A. G. Sibbald.

The floral tributes, which were carried by ladies of the village, were very beautiful.

ENGAGEMENTS

Mr. and Mrs. Alex Nurse, Millbank. Ont., announce the engagement of their only daughter, Verna Ann, to William H. McCaugherty, son of Mr. and Mrs. D. H. McCaugherty, Streetsville, Ont., the marriage to take place quietly in December.

Will Hold Conference

Hon. Thomas L. Kennedy has announced that with a view to developing new solutions to general farm problems, lowering farm taxes and securing better financial terms for the farmers, he is calling at an early date a conference at Queen's Park with representatives from every county council in the older part of Ontario. Notices have gone out to the clerks of all these councils, inviting suggestions on the proposed conference. Colonel Kennedy points out that in every county council there is an agricultural committee which with the co-operation the Department is ready to offer, should be able to play an important part in bringing the farming industry back to the status it once enjoyed.

Constable 25 Years

Four generations ago, Commodore Rutledge, a retired officer of the British Navy, came to Streetsville, and was one of the first organizers of Trinity Anglican Church. Early this summer Percy Rutledge, his great-grandson, put the finishing touches to the wood-work of the new Parish Hall.

Constable Edward Rutledge, who is proud of being the father of the largest family in Streetsville, commented on this circumstance to The Telegram. His son, Percy, the eldest of a family of ten, did much of the carpentry on the parish hall. Mr. Rutledge, who has been for the past twenty-five years a village and county constable, with Mrs. Rutledge recently celebrated their twenty-eighth wedding anniversary. Mr. Rutledge has been responsible for some of the police coups made in the village, his most notable feat being the capture of Norman Neal, better known as "The Human Eel," several years ago. Neal is at present in Kingston Penitentiary for a series of thefts in Toronto Township.

Mr. Rutledge was born at Huttonville, son of the late James J. Rutledge, and has spent all his life in Streetsville. Mrs. Rutledge, formerly Miss Nellie Andrews, is a native of Chelmsford, Essex County England. — — — They were married in Brampton by the Rev. Edwards. Of eleven children born to them, ten are living, five of whom attend the Streetsville schools.

The children are: Percy, Harold, Mrs. Reginald Welsby, Lena, Clarence, Lorretta, John and James, twins, Edwin and Elsa Belle. Mr. and Mrs. Rutledge are staunch members of Trinity Anglican Church, and are both keen Tories.

LET US SMILE

When the guest was just leaving his hotel to hurry to the station he noticed that he had forgotten something. He said to the page-boy: "Run up quickly to room 456 and just see if my umbrella is there. I think it's to the left of the washstand. But hurry up!"

A minute later the boy returned and panted: "Yes, sir, the umbrella's still there, at the left of the washstand."

Small brother—"I just saw you kiss my sister."

Young man—"Here. Keep still. Put this quarter in your pocket."

Small brother—"Here's a dime change. One price to all—that's the way I do business."

S. H. S. NOTES

Practice for the Commencement is in full swing and favorable results have been obtained. The following is a short review of the program:

The main purpose of the commencement is to present diplomas to the graduates who completed their courses last June. These are Jean Hammond, Dorothy Atkinson, John Ross and John Houlgrave. The athletics medals, crests and class prizes will also be presented. As has been the custom a stirring chorus will be sung by the whole school. A number of the girls are staging a wand drill. A short play entitled "Ici on Parle Francais" will be presented by the pupils of Middle School. (This is not a French play, but a comedy based on the words 'Ici on Parle Francais.")

The pupils of Lower School are depicting the chief scene of Dicken's "Christmas Carol."

John Ross, a member of the graduating class, will deliver a valedictory address.

It was hoped that Taylor Statton, a very noted ex-pupil of our school, would be our guest speaker. Unfortunately he is unable to be on hand. Another noted speaker is being arranged for.

Watch for posters and see next week's paper for further news.

Don't forget the date, December 18; not December 17 as stated last week.

This school intends bringing out a Year Book in March, but a short Christmas number of The Journal is being published this month.

TORONTO TP. COUNCIL

Toronto Township Council put in a very quiet session on Saturday, little but routine business being passed.

Mention was made in council of a rumor, apparently starting in Lakeview, that the township has received a Government grant which they have not applied to relief work. L. H. Pallett, Reeve, explained that the council will not have the disposition of the money for some time, as the grant will not be received until a private bill has passed the Ontario Legislature creating a water area in Lakeview. The grant expected will be $7,500 from both the Provincial and Dominion funds, a total of $15,000, to be applied exclusively to the installation of a water system in the district. It is expected that the bill will be dealt with before the end of the year, as the work must be done before April to secure the grant. A letter was received stating that the bill is under consideration.

Instructions were issued the assessors to summons everyone in the township who does not pay dog taxes before Dec. 12th. There are a great many dogs in the township registered on the assessors' rolls for which no tax has been paid, and in the present stringency of funds, the taxes must be paid, or the dogs must be destroyed.

By-laws were passed for the borrowing of $125,000 to meet current expenses, and to appoint returning officers for the coming municipal elections.

A letter was received from a Lakeview organization asking the council to appoint a committee to meet organizations of the district for the purpose of arranging direct relief for the coming winter. The communication advised the council that as the Dominion and Provincial Governments carry jointly two-thirds of the direct relief, that charitable and fraternal associations of the township might well be called upon to provide the remaining third of direct relief expense, leaving the council to provide relief work only. The Reeve, L. H. Pallett, and Thos. McCarthy, councillor, were appointed.

E. A. Orr, former member of the council, and ex-Warden of Peel County, appeared before council, and congratulated the members on their work during the past year.

WHAT THE OLDER BOYS ARE DOING

On Monday night of this week a meeting was held in the United Church for the purpose of organizing an Older Boys' Club. Graydon Clipperton was appointed chairman for the meeting.

The club will be known as the Skoo Cum Teli Cum Club. Officers elected were: Big Chief, Winifred Turney; Little Chief, Harry Johnson; Treasurer, Ronald Bruce; Secretary and Reporter, Roy Hollingshead.

The attendance was not very large, but we expect a better turn-out at our next meeting, which is to be held on Wednesday, Dec. 16. It will be held in the old soap factory, at 8 p.m. All boys who are interested should be on hand.

(This is a club for boys of high school age and any older boys who are really interested in sports of all kinds.)

UNITED CHURCH NOTES

A gathering of unusual interest took place when the ladies of the Women's Association of the United Church held their annual meeting on Tuesday afternoon. The attendance was large and the interest in the work was very encouraging. Instead of having an annual bazaar the ladies pledge a cent a day for the year. At this meeting the result of this plan was announced, making known a marvellous revelation what can be done when there is a united front. The officers and members are more than delighted with the amount realized, especially when we consider the period of depression through which we are passing.

The following officers were elected for the year 1932:

Hon. President—Mrs. D. McCaugherty.

President—Mrs. Chas. Falconer.

1st Vice-President—Mrs. Wick Atkinson.

2nd Vice-President—Mrs. Gordon Bunt.

Recording Secretary—Mrs. D. W. Lindsay.

Corresponding Secretary—Mrs. W. Cooke.

Treasurer—Mrs. J. Caslor.

Flower Committee—Mrs. P. Stevens, Mrs. W. E. W. Steen and Mrs. J. Switzer.

Parsonage Committee — Mrs. H. Cook, Mrs. Caslor, Mrs. A. Bruce.

Visiting Committee—Mrs. J. Wager, Mrs. Langmaid, Mrs. W. Buck and Mrs. T. Gould.

Following the election an interesting and humorous program was put on by the several conveners of the Cent-a-Day plan. Refreshments were served.

WITH THE LONE SCOUTS

History was made in Canadian Scouting on November 17th, last. On that date a rally was held at Markham to inaugurate and "send off" the 1st Markham Troop, recently organized in that town.

This Troop was the direct result of the enthusiasm and grit of two brothers, Muir and Percy North, who in April of this year enrolled as Lone Scouts, and speedily rallied a Lone Patrol around them, and they are now both Patrol Leaders in the new Troop.

The outstanding feature, however, of this rally is the fact that there were representatives of no fewer than three Regular Scout Troops present, which have all been started as the direct result of Lone Scout Activity.

Nine members of the Maple Troop were present with their Scoutmaster, and an even greater number of scouts from the 1st Unionville Troop were there, both of these troops having been formed within the last few months.

Altogether there were over 150 Scouts, Leaders and Friends present and never before have three 'ex-Lonies" Troops met together either in Canada, or, as far as we know, in any other part of the world.

Field Secretary Art Paddon, Captain John Furminger (Commissioner for Ontario Lone Scouts), Scoutmaster Don Hutchison of the 2nd Ontario Lone Scout Troop, and Scoutmaster George G. Emery of the 3rd Ontario Lone Scout Troop drove out from Toronto to wish the new Troop "Good Luck and God Scouting."

Games were played and competitions indulged in, and most of the members of the Troop, from the Scoutmaster downwards, were invested as Scouts, and later refreshments were served by the local Girl Guide Company.

A pleasing incident during the evening was the presentation to the troop by Mr. Mason, the former Lonies' counsellor and friend, of a handsome shield for use in connection with inter-patrol competitions. Mr. Mason was also invested as a Scout at this meeting.

This is the eighth regular Troop which has been organized in Ontario as a direct result of Lone Scouting.

On Saturday, November 14th, last a rally of the 1st Ontario Lone Scout Troop was held in London, under the direction of Mr. Jack Lawton, the Scoutmaster of that Troop.

Unfortunately the weather was rather unfavorable which prevented a large attendance, but nevertheless Mr. Lawton was delighted to meet the Patrol from Lucan under Patrol Leader Frank Zurbrigg, and also Lone Scout Ron. Sage of Ingersoll, who is one of the 1st Troop's keenest members.

The Leaders of the 15th London Troop were also present and placed their Troop Headquarters at the disposal of the Lonies, and they also provided them with supper, which kindnesses were very much appreciated.

In spite of the inclement weather all present had lots of fun and greatly enjoyed the proceedings, aand are looking forward to more rallies of this kind in the future.

We think that this was an experiment which also might be tried out with advantage by some of the other Lone Scout Troops. Why not suggest it to your Scoutmaster? It would give you the opportunity to meet other Lonies in your district.

At the time that these notes are being written the Royal Winter Fair at Toronto is in full swing, and no doubt a number of Lonies will attend this interesting exhibition.

Lone Scout Charlie Roberts of Sparta has won a four days' trip to Toronto to attend the Fair, and is staying at the Royal York Hotel with a party of other boys. We congratulate Charlie and know that he will greatly enjoy the trip.

We have heard of a large number of Lone Scouts in this Province who are now getting busy with their Xmas Toy Shop activities, and some poor kiddies will have a brighter Christmas in consequence.

The Lone Scout Commissioner has received a letter from one little boy who has no father, and who has to work hard to earn a few nickels to feed and clothe himself. He says that last year some kind Lonies remembered him and his little brother and sister, and hopes that Lone Scout Santa Claus will not forget him this year. Don't you think it is just splendid to have the opportunity to do a "Good Turn" to kiddies like this?

Those of you who have already started your Toy Shop activities will stick to it, we hope, and if you have not yet started there is still time to get busy.

Don't forget to let your Scoutmaster know just what you are doing.

Information about the Lone Scouts may be obtained from the Lone Scout Department, Boy Scouts Association, 330 Bay Street, Toronto, Ont. Write today for particulars.

1931 Wheat King

Canadian agricultural exhibits lead the way at the International Livestock Exhibition at Chicago. Here we see Herman Trelle of Wembley, Alberta, with sample of wheat which netted him title of wheat king for 1931. Trelle won crown in 1926 and 1930, and this year's victory gives him permanent possession of the wheat trophy.

Extra Quota Cost To Be Shared

British Millers, Bakers, Consumers to pay, It is Reported

London. — The National Government's wheat quota scheme has been drafted in tentative form by the Ministry of Agriculture, says the Morning Post. Details have been sent to representatives of British agriculture, millers and the wheat trade who will consider the proposals and make recommendations before it is drafted in final form.

Application of the quota, says the paper, will not involve the treasury in any expenditure. Any extra cost will be borne by the millers, bakers and general consumers.

Although details of the scheme are secret at the moment, the Morning Post says it understands it will be operated in conjunction with the marketing scheme. A maximum price for home-produced wheat will be set but there will be no guaranteed minimum.

With the quota scheme in operation, it is expected the wheat acreage of Great Britain will be increased from 1,300,000 to 2,000,000.

With each purchase of British wheat the miller will receive a certificate, the Morning Post says. Millers who buy more than their quota will be able to sell their surplus certificates to others in the trade. Importers of flour also must buy certificates and this, in some measure, will place a tax on foreign flour.

It is believed there is no intention, at least at the moment, of placing an embargo or even a tariff on imported flour, but when the Dominions' quota has been fixed, the question of limiting flour imports will be discussed.

British and Irish millers are opposed to the wheat quota scheme, the Daily Mail says. They have recommended, in its stead, an import tax of four shillings per quarter (eight bushels) on foreign wheat, and four shillings per sack on flour. In each instance, the Dominions would receive a fifty per cent. preference.

Ice-Coated Men Fight Mill Fire

Orillia Loss $30,000—Heart of Town Menaced

Orillia.—In almost zero weather, ice-clad firemen fought valiantly for more than five hours Sunday night in an attempt to save the large D. C. Thomson flour and grist mill, which was razed to the ground.

The fire, which was of a mysterious origin, started before 11 o'clock Sunday night, and by the time the firemen arrived flames and smoke rushed from every window of the large metal covered building.

The loss was estimated by the owner at between $25,000 and $30,000, partly covered by insurance.

When it became apparent that the mill could not be saved, firemen and volunteers fought desperately in the cold to save the adjacent buildings. Situated in the heart of the town, and with a strong west wind blowing, the tall blazing structure provided a serious menace for several hours.

Sparks carried more than a quarter of a mile and set fire to the residence of Rev. Father P. J. Flanagan, of the Church of the Guardian Angels. Firemen succeeded in quelling the flames without serious loss.

Seven lines of hose were played on the fire. The flames could be seen as far as Barrie. Half the townspeople massed in the market square for a greater part of the night.

All Orillia's fire-fighting equipment was brought into play, including motor reels, a horse-drawn wagon and a hand-drawn ladder wagon.

$370,000 In Ginseng Shipped From Dominion

Ottawa—Ginseng to the value of nearly $370,000 was exported from Canada last year to China. Ginseng is the root of a medicinal plant and is highly prized by the Chinese for its healing qualities. Practically the entire crop of nearly 45,000 pounds was grown in the district of Waterford, Ontario, and nearly all of it was exported to the Chinese market.

Huge Air Freighter To Service North

First of Several Planes Planned by Canadian Airways for Northern Areas

Toronto.—A new air freighter, one of the largest in the world, was recently released by the Junkers Corporation, to serve the King William and Boothias areas.

The huge all-metal plane is capable of carrying 5,850 pounds of freight and two persons at an average cruising speed of 100 miles an hour over 500 miles. Equipped with extra wing tanks its range can be trebled. Flying light, it can touch 120 miles an hour or better at maximum capacity.

Built fundamentally for freight purposes, it answers every demand of the duty to which it is being consigned. A top hatch 3 x 6 feet provides entrance for heavy freight loaded by crane similar to loading a ship. Side hatches along the metal walls provide entrance for freight loaded from trucks or a loading platform, and, incidentally, provide for the bulkheading of packages and removal of any package without disturbing freight in any other section of the car.

The new carrier answers the problem of transporting heavy and big equipment into the new mining areas and transporting their production to the rail head. Economical to operate, it has a landing speed of 47 miles an hour, enabling it to operate from small airdromes.

The interior can be readily fitted the passenger service. Below the regular cargo holds are several smaller lockers or compartments which can accommodate more than half a ton of freight or express. A wireless operator's compartment and equipment can be installed immediately behind the pilot's compartment without sacrificing much of the cargo space.

The plane is the first of a line which Canadian Airways hopes to have operating throughout the northern area within a few months.

Stunt Flier Sails For China

Canadian Aviator Seeks Adventure in Manchuria

Victoria.—Capt. R. D. Archibald of Halifax, who, in 1929, flew non-stop the 3,400 miles from Los Angeles to Sydney, N.S., in 30 hours, was among 580 passengers leaving here aboard the Empress of Japan, for Honolulu and the Orient en route to China.

The Canadian flier said he hoped to make a tour of the interior and "hook-up with the army if anything good offers." Capt. Archibald had the idea, he explained, that somebody in Manchuria might be in need of a good air pilot, what, with the depression and everything and the shortage of local talent.

The Nova Scotia pilot, who was for a while a stunt pilot in Hollywood when "Wings" and "Hell's Angels" celluloid epic of the war-time aces, were filmed, admitted he was in search of adventure and might be persuaded to do some military flying in the Far East.

Motor Accidents Show Increase In October

60 Killed, 974 Injured With $120,402 Damage to Property

Toronto.—Motor car accidents in Ontario still continue to take heavy toll of life and property, the report of the provincial motor vehicles branch for October shows.

There were 60 persons killed, 974 injured and property damage amounting to $120,402 was caused. There were 1,026 accidents resulting in personal injury and property damage in excess of $50 reported to the bureau, an increase of 5.4 per cent. over those reported for September, 1931. It represents the largest number reported for any month of the present year.

Reported motor vehicle fatalities for the current year, to the end of October, number 465. Persons injured in the same period number 6,983. In 191 cases, or in 18.6 per cent. of the accidents reported to October, arrests were made.

Of the drivers who replied to the question regarding insurance, 57 per cent. stated that they carried property damage and public liability insurance.

In determining the location of the accidents, the bureau found that 58.5 per cent. of the accidents and 23.2 per cent. of the fatalities took place in cities; 21.6 per cent. of the accidents and 40 per cent. of the fatalities on the King's highways and 13.2 per cent. of the accidents and the same percentage of fatalities on county roads.

25 Pedestrians Killed.

Collision with pedestrians is given as the cause of the most fatalities, 25 in number. There were 231 accidents of this nature and 441 involving other motor vehicles. Railroad train collisions numbered 20 with 9 fatalities resulting.

During October there were 974 persons injured in 697 personal injuries accidents. Of this number 170 were drivers, 389 passengers, 322 pedestrians, 14 passengers on horse-drawn vehicles, 51 on bicycles, 21 motorcycle drivers and seven motorcycle passengers. Of the persons injured, 507 were male and 367 female.

The four most frequent actions of pedestrians involved, in order of numbers, were: children playing on the street, crossing between street intersections, crossing at street intersections—no signal, coming from behind parked vehicle or object. Of 26 violations credited to drivers involved in fatal accidents, 12 were "speed too fast for road and traffic conditions."

There were 41 drivers who did not possess an operator's or chauffeur's license. Three of the 41 were involved in fatal accidents. Of the 1,507 drivers involved in accidents, 1,441 were residents of Ontario. 15 were residents of Quebec, two of other provinces and 49 were residents of the United States. There were 11 hit-and-run drivers, five of whom were apprehended.

Britain's Latest Warcraft

London.—Great Britain's new "flying forts" designed to carry two dozen men each on 1,000 mile non-stop flights were recently put through competitive tests.

The sinister-looking ships are equipped with bombs and machine guns to guard off attack from any angle. They are a marked advance over the former troop-carrying planes.

The new type are 50 per cent. speedier than the old, which cruise at about 100 miles an hour. They permit the transport of small forces over long distances, thus enabling military authorities to reduce outpost stations and depend on airplane reinforcements in time of danger.

600 Pound Copper Nugget Found by Canadian Official

Ottawa.—Thirty miles south of the point where the Coppermine River empties into the Arctic waters of Coronation Gulf and five miles inland, there lies a 600-pound nugget of native copper with the letters "L. T. B." carved deep in it side. They are the initials of Major L. T. Burwash of Ottawa, who discovered the nugget in 1929, while on an exploration trip for the Canadian Government and who has been trying ever since to have it brought out to an honored place in the National Museum here.

Two attempts to portage the huge nugget to the river have failed when deep snow prevented dog teams from operating. This winter a third attempt will be made. Meanwhile Major Burwash feels reasonably sure that the copper rests undisturbed where he left it.

Airplane Birth Raises Nationality Problem

Winnipeg, Man.—Aviation has given rise to many new problems and the latest one is not the least. This it is: If a child is born in an airplane flying between two points, where should the birth be registered? Or supposing the airplane is flying over an international boundary, how can it be said which country it was born in?

The Attorney General of Manitoba, W. J. Major, was confronted with this problem in a most unexpected way, for it appears Manitoba is a pioneer in airplane births. Some time ago a child was born in a plane while the mother was being rushed to a hospital at The Pas.

News of the event reached Belgium through the newspapers. Legal authorities there were designing laws to deal with just this situation. They decided to consult Manitoba, and Mr. Major had a letter from the Advocate of the General Court of Appeal at Brussels asking what locality was given as the birthplace. He thought the mother's home would be the logical place, but wanted to make sure.

The letter calls attention to the difficulty of determining the exact political division an airplane may be in at the time of a birth in the air.

North Africa Opens Gas Stations

Algiers.—Twenty gas stations have been established in Northern Africa by the French government in an effort to attract more aviators and motorists to the country.

Treasure Hunters Of Agriculture

Knowles A. Ryerson as told to Obed Stearns, in "Country Home," Sept, '31.

Men always have wanted more plants than they already had, and they never have been satisfied to raise only those plants which they found growing in their particular patches of soil. Thus they have picked up seeds or lifted up plants by the roots whever they have found them in their wanderings, and tried growing them whever they settled down.

Consider what would be the state of agriculture in America today if men had been content to grow only native plants. The only major crops would be corn, tobacco and possibly cotton; in the way of vegetables, nothing except sweet corn, squashes and beans. Some inferior varieties of rye and rice, a few berries, some native grapes, crab apples, native plums, pecans would be raised. Little else. No wheat: that was brought in from the Old World. No potatoes: those came from South America by way of Europe.

Although the Department of Agriculture had no explorers of it own [illegible] 1892, American in foreign lands, [illegible]ether officials or private citizens, and their eyes open for possible plant introductions long before that time. In 1870, for instance, an American missionary in Brazil wrote to the department extolling the delicious oranges being grown in that country. A first shipment of trees was made, but they all died because of improper packing. They tried again, and at last got 12 trees in good condition, replanted them—and thereby started the Washington naval orange industry. The average annual value of this crop now is $35,000,000.

In order to understand what is now a regular system of exploration, let us suppose that you looked out in your back yard and saw a stranger, in queer foreign garb, down on his [illegible]aches, studying, with apparently fascinated interest, your radish plants. Just so strange and incomprehensible does the plant explorer often seem to the people in whose back yards he must seek out new plants for you to grow. For frequently he is likely to bring back a plant that is as common to those who are growing it as the radish is to you.

For example, in what remote wilderness do you think the late Frank N. Meyer discovered the wild Chinese peach tree? He found it in the garden of the German legation in Peking! It was so commonplace that nobody had ever thought of it before as being worth a second glance.

Meyer was perhaps the most colorful and certainly one of the most useful explorers who ever served the United States government. The greater part of his adult life was spent prowling around in the far, wild corners of the earth, seeking rare and strange plants.

His first work of importance was the introduction of Chinese persimmons in 1905. Studying them, he explored the provinces of Shantung, Shensi, Honan and Chekiang, finally succeeding in importing live scions from the Ming Tombs region northwest of Peking. If you are one of those persons who turn up their noses at Persimmons, you should try a Tamopan persimmon with a little cream for breakfast some day. This is the variety that Meyer brought in.

Turning next to peaches, Meyer here encountered his first real trouble, his first duel of wits with the Chinese. Up in the little village of Fei, in Shantung province, they grew an extremely large and luscious peach, often weighing as much as a pound. But Fei was the only place where these peaches grew, and the inhabitants therefore had a very comfortable and profitable monopoly in the Shantung market. So they didn't take at all kindly to Meyer's attempts to buy a few trees to take away with him.

He argued and pleaded. Finally a native grower offered to sell him his orchard. There seemed no other way to get trees. But when they reached this country, and were replanted and developed it was found that they were not the true Fei peaches after all! The natives won that skirmish, but the government is still after Fei peaches—and will get them in the end.

Such a casual discovery, for instance as a type of disease-resistant spinach, the seed of which Meyer picked up in Liaoyang, has repaid America many times over for sending him on his various expeditions. This spinach was crossed with another variety and the resulting type saved the disease-threatened spinach industry of Virginia and Maryland.

One could go on listing Meyer's introductions: the Chinese pistachio, which now grows luxuriantly in California; the Rosa xanthina, that hardy yellow bush rose which keeps many a New England garden gay when all else fails; the jujube, which gives farmers in the dry sections of the Southwest a fruit crop; and the Chinese chestnut, which is blight-resistant and gives promise of saving our chestnut industry from extinction.

Three times Meyer went out into the Orient. Twice he returned. On his third trip he had a nervous prostration. Although after a time he was able to go on with the search—the only thing in life that mattered—health had definitely gone out of him. Soon it would be time to go back to civilization, and the chances of his ever being able to return to his work were practically nil. He never came back. On the night of June 2, 1918, he disappeared from a little steamer on the Yangtze River.

Others carried on. Durum wheat ranks high in their list of introductions: several million acres are planted annually in different varieties; barleys from Asiatic Turkey and from Egypt are now grown to the extent of about 750,000 acres in regions where rainfall is low; from Russion comes the Swedish Select and Sixty-Day Oats now being grown to the extent of 4,000,000 and 5,000,000 acres, respectively. Acala cotton, found in Mexico, has been developed into a variety which is the foundation of the cotton industry of the Southwest; its annual production reaches a value of $50,000,000.

Of all the plants which reach this country comparatively few prove good enough, after thorough tests, to go to the trade. And the stories of the explorers who found them somewhere across the globe are, in all probability, lost.

But the explorer who achieves honor in the eyes of his fellow plantsmen is well rewarded, for he receives the Frank N. Meyer Medal, which is given for distinguished foreign-plant introduction work. One side of the medal is a reproduction of the white-barked Chinese pine and the jujube, two of Meyer's many introductions. On the other side is a reproduction of the bas-relief which Queen Hatshepset carved on the Temple of Luxor. Whoever receives that medal has, like Queen Hatshepset, given his country something more precious than gold and ebony: the lasting wealth of living plants.

The Service Must Not Suffer

"Whew! What a gale. There will be trouble on the line tonight!" Lineman Taylor of the Bell Telephone staff was right—there was trouble and plenty of it, especially up around Pembroke when the icy blast from the Laurentians swept down across the Ottawa Valley giving warning to all that King Winter was again holding court.

All through the night and during the next day the forces of the Bell Telephone Company battled the storm which had covered the wires with ice and snapped telephone poles like pipe stems. True, by the following night many of the poles were still down but the service continued practically without interruption by means of emergency cable and the tangled wires and broken poles were rapidly being restored to their usual trim, serviceable appearance. Thousands of dollars worth of expensive equipment, and scores of skilled workmen, must be kept constantly available for just such emergencies in order that the universal service of the Bell Telephone Company may be available to all at all times.

A Mender

You came to me world-worn and weary,
Rumpled and tattered of feather,
Whimpering and broken of spirit,
Crying to be put together.

I mended the place that was broken,
I smoothed you, and soothed you, and kissed you,
And when you were gone I was frantic.
Oh, Lad, if you knew how I missed you.

It seems I'm a fixer, a mender,
And when my poor patients are done
They flutter their wings at my window
And I give them back to the sun.

Hospital for Sick Children

67 COLLEGE ST., TORONTO 2
(Mothercraft Centre, Toronto)
(Country Branch, Thistletown)

December, 1931.

Dear Mr. Editor:

Last year the Hospital for Sick Children, Toronto, through the generosity of friends in every line of publicity, was enabled to impress upon the parents of Ontario that any crippled or ailing child was equally entitled to the unexcelled service for which this Hospital is world famous. It was also mentioned that if the "Sick Kids" — as the Institution is affectionately called—were to look after more youngsters, it would need more money for their maintenance.

What happened in 1931 was that more children came to the Hospital, but also about $10,000 less money to maintain them. I spare you the statistics; but I cannot alter the fact that, if the Hospital for Sick Children were not a provincial charity, its debts would not be as burdensome as those under which it seems fated to enter 1932.

The Hospital's immediate neighborhood (Toronto and York County) has kept up close to its average subscription per patient. But outside that area there has been a sad drop. What should be done?

The Hospital for Sick Children is not a local concern. Its aim is that no Ontario youngster shall go handicapped through life either because of deformity or disease. That cannot be accomplished with a cash-box full of overdrafts. Yet that is the position to-day and it is not one which can everlastingly continue. So, Mr. Editor, will you not invoke your readers to lend us a helping hand? Not one of them, I venture, could care to see the "Sick Kids" with a mortgage over their heads.

Faithfully yours,
IRVING E. ROBERTSON,
Chairman of the Board of Trustees

Threescore Years and Ten

Quick, Sir, help me up—and bring my cane!
'Tis cold tonight, but then I like it so.
I heard a sudden tapping on the pane;
Grey Winter's here again, and so I go
To meet him by some gaunt and leafless tree
Where we can whisper underneath our breath,
And once more jest at that pale Enemy
Whom you may know by sight—I speak of death.

Tonight the jaded year grows old with me;
I hear the fierce Hounds of the Wind give tongue—
Not as in Spring when Zephyr's melody
Recalls those far-off days when I was young—
But loud and wrathful, harbingers of snow,
And though 'tis cold tonight—I like it so.

A Whistle to Call the Child

A mother who had difficulty in making her little son hear her when she called him, while he was playing out of doors, now uses a whistle for the purpose. She finds that it is much easier to use the whistle than to shout at the top of her voice, also that it is far more effective. The sound carries further and the little chap enjoys being called in that novel way, and it is less personal.

Daughter—"Why, daddy, you told me to put it where it would draw interest."

Wife—"How do you like me in my new gown? I got it for a ridiculous price."

Hubby—"You mean you got it for an absurd figure."

Ain't science wonderful? One manufacturer asserts that his cigarette is the best because it's toasted and "heat purifies." Another manufacturer who makes a cigar claims it is the best because it has been given a "cold treatment." There you have it, and the public may take its choice and blow smoke either hot or cold.

New Lodger—"Can I have a private bath?"

Landlady—"Yes, sir. We have only one bath tub in the house, but everyone here takes his bath privately."

Willie — "Pop, do angels have pockets in their wings?"

Pop—"No, certainly they do not."

Willie—""Then where will I put my hanky?"

He—"What are all those men doing in a circle with their heads together? Is it a football team?"

She—"No, my dear, just a bunch of Scotchmen lighting a cigarette."

Old Stuff

Brown—"Why do you keep going to the doctor? He said it was no longer necessary."

Jessup—"I'm reading a continued story in one of his waiting room magazines."

Once there was a group of girls and the teacher told them to draw what they were going to be. One was going to be a milliner so she drew some hats; another was going to be a dressmaker so she drew some dresses, and the other did no draw anything The teacher asked her why she did not draw anything, to which she replied: "I'm going to get married and I don't know how to draw that."

We always class the salesman who tries to sell stock that will make you rich, along with the bald headed druggist who sells hair tonic. We can't make ourselves happy by making others unhappy. Some men can't be kept down in the business world and some are like the flapper's stocking—they don't get very high. Courteous people usually are treated courteously. It's easy to make a husband good-tempered, unselfish, and polite. You do it by spanking him regularly, beginning at the age of three. Thrift is like spinach, good for you, but you must cultivate a taste for it.

Stranger — "Why aren't you in school, my little man?"

Child—"Hell, lady, I'm only four."

NEURITIS HAS GONE!

Banished by Kruschen

"I had acute neuritis in the shoulder and left arm, due to exposure in bad weather," writes the Rev. H. E. T. "It was impossible to lift the arm to dress or to use it in any way, and, of course, the pain was dreadful. All external applications were useless. I got it completely normal again by keeping the parts affected warm and taking daily, early in the morning, Kruschen Salts in a tumbler of hot water. It took nearly a month, but every vestige of neuritis has gone."

Neuritis is typical of a dozen other complaints—some minor, some very serious — which all result from impurities in the blood. And it is impure blood, circulating all over the system and setting up inflammation in the tissues, that causes those excruciating pains.

Kruschen Salts can be safely trusted to set the matter right. Because Kruschen contains just what Nature needs to persuade your internal organs back into a healthy, normal condition.

Bert's Desire

From a window in a little back street in an Ontario town, a small boy gazed longingly on the "ball players" in an adjoining lot. A strange weakness kept him resting on a chair or in his cot, unable to join in the fun.

When the doctor was called, a glance told him the story, and it was not long before little Bert was hurried off to the Queen Mary Hospital for Consumptive Children. Here the great desire of his life seems likely to be granted. Bert has made wonderful progress, and the nurse says hopefully that in a few months more he will be able to try his prowess in the baseball nine—and what greater happiness could befall a little bed-ridden lad than this?

To save many such as Bert from consumption, this great work must go on, helped by subscriptions upon which the hospital so largely depends. A gift from you will be gratefully appreciated. Please send it to Mr. A. E. Ames, 223 College St., Toronto.

"A wee nip changes things"

The first nip of cold weather makes washing at home even less attractive than usual. Hanging out clothes in winter is no work for a woman when she can use an up to-the-minute laundry at less cost and get even better work done. This laundry affords a wide range of choice with its eight different kinds of family wash service. The prices on these vary according to the work done —all are extremely reasonable .....

If the manufacturer and merchant did not have confidence in their wares they would hesitate to call attention to them. For advertising rigidly tests the maker, the seller and the merchandise Business so tested, and found not wanting, is prosperous.

ISLINGTON

At the last meeting of Islington L.O.L. No. 2489, the following officers were elected for 1932, District Officers Crisp and Bull officiating:

W.M., E. H. Magee; D.M., R. Hale; Chaplain, T. Forbes; R. Sec., J. New; Fin. Sec., A. E. Mercer; Treas., J. H. Beamish; Lecturers, C. Webb, J. Mark; Marshall, A. Forbes; Tyler, C. Mercer; Committee, Past Masters Hill, Forbes, Beamish, Mercer and Webb; Auditors, H. G. Hill and C. Webb; Immediate P.M., S. H. Mercer.

This lodge aims to have an interesting feature at each meeting as a means of keeping up a real lively interest. At the October meeting Bro. C. Mercer gave a fine lantern talk on Bermuda, and at the November meeting Wor. Bro. J. H. Beamish spoke on the Gunpowder Plot, outlining the political and religious conditions in England, Scotland and France at that time. At the December meeting the officers of Cooksville lodge are invited to instal the officers of Islington lodge, after which a friendly euchre contest will take place between the visitors and the home teams.

Much sympathy is felt for Principal Wallace of Etobicoke High School, and Mrs. Wallace in the death of their six-year-old daughter last Sunday. The funeral on Monday was largely attended.

Rev. Mr. Smith preached on "Salvation" to a large congregation last Sunday morning in the Islington United Church.

In the Presbyterian Church last Sunday evening Mr. W. A. Barber, B.A., spoke to a large congregation, his theme being "God's Plan in this Church Age." Next Sunday evening, Dec. 13, Mr. Barber will speak on the most talked of question in our times: "Is Jesus going to return to this earth again? If so, how, when, where and what for?" On Sunday evening, Dec. 20, he will deliver a Christmas message on "What think ye of Christ?" Mr. Barber, who has for three years been conducting the adult Bible class of this church, has consented to take the Sunday evening services for possibly the next month or two. He returned from Japan about six years ago, where he spent four years during two of which he was teaching in the English High School there, and two years in evangelistic work.

In St. George's Anglican Church Rev. C. W. Holdsworth last Sunday morning spoke on the work of the British and Foreign Bible Society, and in the evening on the "Lord's Day Alliance." Encouraging congregations were in attendance.

Last Friday night the writer listened with pleasure to an address by a member of the Ontario Parole Board, who, by the way, was formerly an Anglican clergyman. He gave numerous instances of men and women reclaimed from lives of crime and restored to a condition of respectable citizenship through the agency of the parole system. His conversation with one young man impressed me as being worth-while enough to pass along. This fellow had appeared before their Board more than once. He said to him, "Did your mother teach you, as a boy, to say your prayers?" "Yes." "Do you say them now?" "No." "Were you taught to regularly read your Bible?" "Yes." "Do you read it now?" "No." "Then," replied the officer, "I'm not surprised that you are here."

ERINDALE

The Erindale Women's Institute held a meeting on Wednesday at the home of Mrs. Geo. Burke, when there was a splendid attendance.

Mrs. W. Cooper, acting president, had charge of the meeting, and Mrs. Hammond, secretary, presented the business. The subject of the afternoon was "Home Economics," the subject being very ably taken by Mrs. Braithwaite, Cooksville. Mrs. Braithwaite interested her audience with her methods of cooking and the splendid recipes she gave. The members were very delighted with her interesting and practical demonstration and much appreciated having her at their meeting. Miss Ann O'Brien rendered two solos, which were enjoyed. Miss May McGill presided at the piano.

Mrs. O'Brien, Mrs. Conover and Mrs. Burke served refreshments which closed a very pleasant afternoon.

COMMUNITY CLUB

The Community Club held a social evening on Friday, Dec. 4th, at the home of Mrs. Anderson May, when euchre was enjoyed by all present. The ladies' prizes went to Mrs. Cliff May and Mrs. Henry May, while Morris Williamson and Harry Lee took the gentlemen's. There were several visitors from Brampton. After the games, the hostess served a dainty lunch.

THE

TULE MARSH MURDER

STORY OF A MISSING ACTRESS AND THE TAXING OF WITS TO EXPLAIN HER FATE.

BY NANCY BARR MAVITY.

—SYNOPSIS—

Don Ellsworth's wife, formerly actress Sheila O'Shay, disappears. Dr. Cavanaugh, criminal psychologist, learns that their married life has been unhappy.

Peter Piper, Herald reporter, while trying to see Dr. Cavanaugh, meets Barbara Cavanaugh and finds she was engaged to Ellsworth before his marriage.

A body found in the tule marsh is identified as that of Sheila. Barbara faints when she hears this. Mrs. Kane, Sheila's maid, is arrested and admits that Ellsworth married Sheila under threat of breach of promise. The breach of promise papers are not in Sheila's safe, but Cavanaugh and Peter find a note signed "David Orme." Peter finds Orme at a tourist camp. Cavanaugh agrees to examine Orme. Peter sees Barbara destroy a jewelled comb of Sheila's.

CHAPTER XXXV.—(Cont'd.)

With a deep, tremulous sigh Peter moved away from the tree and walked slowly up the driveway where Barbara had run a few minutes—or was it hours?—before. Barbara needed saving, far more than he had dreamed. He was admitted, fleetingly, the idea that she, herself, was responsible for Sheila's death, but he knew now that he had never believed it. It had taken the flash of emeralds in the sun to bring that idea into the light where he must face it—face it with all its implications.

His mouth set in a hard, grim line. He knew exactly what he was doing. There was no ignorance of the law to blind him. He knew that he was going to suppress his knowledge of material evidence of a crime. If Barbara was guilty, no wrangling lawyers, no avid press, no stolid jury should tear that bright and gallant spirit to shreds.

If she was a murderess, she was still Barbara! He forced himself to say the word, with dry, stiff lips: "Murderess!" And he heard, as clearly as if he sat in the courtroom, as he had heard it many times from his seat in the press row, the voice of the judge solemnly intone, "And may God have mercy on your soul." Never that—never that—for Barbara!

He fought his way back to self-control, his nails forcing tiny red drops of blood from the palms of his clenched hands. If Barbara was guilty, he would share her guilt. He squared his shoulders as if against the wind. He was accessory after the fact of murder.

This time there was no hesitation on the doorstep before he rang the bell. Peter's training stood him in good stead; the black-and-white automaton who answered the door saw only a tall and rather pale young man whose clothes were badly in need of brushing—several twigs and bits of leaf were clinging to them—but who showed no evidence of excitement. She looked up at him with a tentative half smile of recognition, but he had evidently forgotten her. He fished a "Herald" card from his pocket and scribbled a message on the back:

"Please let me see you at once—it is most important." He paused a moment, and then added: "I am counting on you—we are friends, remember."

He looked up, as if he had just become aware of the figure in the open door.

"Oh, it's you! I hope you found the two bits—though you didn't deserve them that time. Will you take this to Miss Cavanaugh, and tell her I'll wait in the room with the marigolds?"

"There aren't any marigolds—the season's past, sir," the automaton explained meticulously.

"Never mind—we know what we mean. You just cut along."

The automaton obediently "cut," wondering as she mounted the stairs how Miss Barbara had ever discovered such a very nice young man who obviously did not belong in her own social circle.

"He can't have any money—his clothes are a sight—but he does have a way with him. And Miss Barbara can afford to like whoever she pleases," she reflected enviously.

Peter stood anxiously waiting in the small room, where daffodils had replaced the marigolds, but where a little fire still twinkled in the grate. He wished he had warned her to take off that dust-streaked dress before she came down. She might meet any number of servants, and they'd be sure to notice it and wonder. He wished he had told her to destroy his card—but then, the girl might already have read it on her way up. He had thought only of Barbara while he was writing it—he strove now to remember the wording. It was non-committal enough, still, it was better out of the way.

His brain felt paralyzed with the sense of his own incompetence. There were so many things to think of—so many things that he had never had to consider before. Peter found himself wishing that he had committed any number of crimes so that he would have been practiced in technique, would know exactly what ought to be done. Suppose he made some horrible blunder. Suppose he could not save her. Suppose—

"You wanted to see me!"

She was there, slim and straight and child-like between the folds of the curtains. Before entering the room, she turned and slid the folding doors shut. She was immaculately dressed in a straight little blue frock, and she held Peter's card, twisted in a tube about her slim fingers.

"Thank God!" Peter cried.

Barbara summoned a wan little smile.

"You always do have the most astonishing ways of opening a conversation," she said.

"I was afraid you wouldn't change your dress." Peter explained. "And may I have that, please?" He took the card gently from her fingers and dropped it on the glowing coals.

She looked up at him, faintly surprised, as one who has just passed through an earthquake might be surprised at the unexpected falling of a leaf. Unresisting she allowed him to lead her to a chair and place her in it. Peter towered over her, his elbow on the mantel.

"Barbara," he said, "God knows whether I've the wit to be of much good to you, but I think the first step had better be for you to marry me."

CHAPTER XXXVI.

"Oh, Peter!" Barbara cried. Her voice was the thin, small voice of a terrified child at the touch of a reassuring hand in the dark. "If I only could!"

She leaned forward, her hands clasped tightly between her knees, her pinched, white face irradiated with a flood of rosy color. Her eyes, seeking Peter's, were wells of glory.

Peter forgot that Sheila O'Shay had been murdered, forgot that she had ever existed. His world was narrowed to one consuming blaze of divine astonishment.

"But Barbara! You can't mean—" he stammered.

"Of course." Barbara nodded her head twice, with slow emphasis. "I mean just that. I should think you'd have seen it from the beginning."

Peter, still with that look of awed wonder, leaned down to kiss the bright, bowed head. But before he reached her, he forced himself back, holding to the mantel piece as if he feared to trust his own unaided will.

"But listen, you amazing child, you can't mean it!" he said. "You don't know a thing about me, really. I'm just a hard-boiled newspaper reporter." (It was a fixed delusion with Peter that he was "hard-boiled.") "I earn $50 a week, and the only car I own or am ever likely to own is one you'd be ashamed even to collide with. I never thought of it before, but for all you know I might be nothing but a fortune hunter."

"I know quite enough." A shadow of the old gamin smile, hovered at the corners of Barbara's mouth. "Are you trying to persuade me to marry you or trying to persuade me not to—which?"

"If things weren't as they are, I'd try to have too much sense to ask you. But I've got to have the right to help you—to stand by to the last ditch. Of course I'll do that anyhow, but it'll make things simpler. That's why I want you to marry me."

"Oh, no, it isn't!" Barbara's shining gaze was still fixed on Peter's face. "It's because you love me."

"Oh, that!" Peter's scorn was the most sublime assurance. "That goes without saying. Who wouldn't?"

"Still," said Barbara. "I'm glad you said it, even though I knew. I ought to be sorry, but I'm not. I'm glad—glad that I shall have it to remember always. Because I'm not going to marry you, Peter."

"Don't be absurd!" Peter said angrily. "Please, Barbara, get this straight. Even if you hadn't looked at me like that, you glorious child—I don't know how it ever happened, but somehow it has—I'd have wanted you to marry me anyhow. Then, if we got things straightened out and you wanted your freedom, you could have it. Nothing, nothing at all, could possibly make any difference to me, except as it gave me something to do for you. That's the way I feel about it. Now, will you marry me?"

"Don't!" Barbara buried her face in her hands. "You make it so very hard." Then she looked up, her small chin very stubborn, her eyes very steady. "I can't marry you Peter—not ever."

"Why not?" Peter glared down at her belligerently.

"Because—" Barbara took a deep breath, then went on steadily. "I'm going to tell you something I have never hinted to another soul. I told you how Dr. Cavanaugh adopted me out of the orphanage. I rather think that I am really his daughter."

It was so far from what Peter had expected her to say that he could only stare at her in blank amazement.

"But, darling child," he said when he had caught his breath, "can you think for one moment that that would make any difference to me?"

"It would to me," Barbara said, so low that he had to bend toward her to catch the words.

"But it mustn't. I don't care a fig whether your parents had a marriage license or not. As the lawyers say, it's incompetent, immaterial and irrelevant. Dr. Cavanaugh is a very great man—you might well be proud to get some of your heredity from a brain like that. Even if he did your mother and you a social injury by not marrying her, he's done his best to make it up to you."

"Follow the Equator" Is Goal Of Hypothetical Air Trips

Among the possible airplane flights for 1932 being discussed in Europe, the "follow the equator" feat is talked about more than any other. European airmen say the best starting point would be Libreville, French Equatorial Africa. After crossing Africa in two "legs" there would be a long and dangerous flight across the Indian Ocean, with a stop at Maldive Islands for fuel.

Next would come the 7,000-mile flight across the Pacific on a course where shipping is scarce. A pilot might make land at the Gilbert Islands, at Christmas Islands, and at Galapagos. From the latter he could proceed to Quito, in Ecuador. Then would follow a journey across South America to the mouth of the Amazon. His gigantic flight would terminate with the crossing of the Atlantic to Libreville.

Eros Soon to Appear Again in Piccadilly

London.—The long heralded replacement of Eros in the Piccadilly Circus is now expected to be only a matter of days. The base of the famous memorial has been completed, but the bronze basin of the fountain must be erected and other work done such as connecting the waterpipes. This is now going on behind the canvas-covered scaffolding that screens it from public gaze. According to the latest information the little god is certain to shoot his arrows over Piccadilly again before long with the unveiling probably early in December.

Grasses Still Most Vital Living Thing to Mankind

Berkeley.—Grasses always have been and still are more important to mankind than any other living things, finds Morris Halperin, research assistant in agronomy of the University of California. "Evidence for this statement," states Halperin, "is abundant throughout the history of man in all ages and on all continents The geologic age of mammals, the nomadic life of primitive man, the beginnings of civilization, and the existence of modern life are closely interwoven modern life are closely interwoven with the indispensability of grasses to man.

"Every known primitive civilization has been built directly upon one or another of the cereal grasses, supplemented in some cases with pasture grasses. Primitive man, living by hunting, was completely dependent on grassland and became a nomad as he followed grass-feeding animals in their wanderings. Cereal grasses changed man from a nomad to a settler and led to the cultivation of land. Even the calendar and social life were made necessary by the cultivation of cereal grasses.

"In 1700 B.C., the Chinese instituted the symbolic ceremony of sowing five useful plants each year, these being rice, wheat, sorghum, millet and the legume, soybeans. In Egypt, barley and millet were produced as early as 4000 B.C. On the American continent all civilization from Canada to Patagonia is practically synonymous with one grass, maize or Indian corn.

"To-day grasses furnish all the breadstuffs and most of the meat and sugar consumed by man. Grasses also play an important part in building material, reclaiming land, providing turf for lawns and the athletic fields. The greatest portion of the dry land surface of the earth is occupied by grasses"

Amusing Anecdotes

A queer little incident during the run of "Lear" at the Lyceum Theatre, London, in the palmy days of Henry Irving and Ellen Terry, is recorded by W. Graham Robertson, in his captivating reminiscences "Life Was Worth Living." One evening, Ellen Terry—as Cordelia—and Robertson stood together at the wings during the last act when the great actress said:

"Graham, why do men always spit on their hands when they are going to take up anything?"

"They don't," said Robertson, "at least only laborers handling a spade or a navvy gripping a pick-axe."

"Well," said Cordelia, "you come and look at Henry." (Irving was playing Lear).

It was almost time for Lear's entrance, bearing the body of his murdered daughter, and said daughter began to get ready, stretching herself at full length upon a table that she might be the more easily gathered up. King Lear swept down from his dressing room and stood beside her, waiting for his cue. As it came he stooped over Cordelia and whispering "Now then—ready?" carefully spat upon both palms, rubbed them hastily together and, shouldering his burden, trudged with it on the stage.

Tit-bits from the intimate diaries of the late C. W. Barron, noted financial reporter—as recorded in "More The old Barron":

Boston, June 5, 1920. Mrs. Coolidge tells the following story. It is her custom, when going out, to leave her address so that the governor (Coolidge was Governor of Massachusetts at the time) may call her up if he returns. Recently the governor returned home, rang the telephone of the party giving the afternoon tea and said to put Mrs. Coolidge on the telephone.

The conversation was as follows:

Governor: "Mrs. Coolidge?"

Mrs. Coolidge: "Yes."

Governor: "Hop home."

If any body can get that conversation into fewer words or letters without cutting the sense, he deserves a prize, remarks Barron.

Under date, New York, November 16, 1927, is this entry:

George Harvey (former American Ambassador in London) said: "I suppose I have told John D. Rockefeller the story of the minister's call at least forty times and each time he seems to get a new chuckle out of it. He is very appreciative of wit. I tell it that there were rumors about Peacham for many weeks that the minister had had a call to a larger parish, but nobody seemed to get any information and the minister said nothing.

"Finally, the deacons agreed that one of them should call and ask him directly. So the old deacon knocked on the front door and asked the boy who responded to see his father. The boy said that his father was engaged. 'Then can I see your mother?' and the boy replied that his mother was busy.

"Then the deacon, smilingly, began upon the boy and said, 'Can you tell me anything about the report that your father has had a call to another church?'

"The boy said: 'I don't know anything about it, but father is in the parlor praying for light and mother is up in the attic packing the trunks'."

In a talk with Dr. Walter B. James at Battle Creek, Michigan, on October 25, 1922, Mr. Barron quotes the doctor as saying:

"I think the development of women has come largely by discarding their clothing. A father will come to me with a cold and sore throat and pull off clothes like a human onion; they would fill a bushel basket. But his daughter's clothes would go in a quart measure."

Sunned Fish Supply Vitamin D to Foxes

Foxes on the ranches of Prince Edward Island now get vitamin D in their diet through the medium of fish. Twice a week sun-dried herring are fed to them.

The fishermen split the fish through the back, wash them in fresh water, place them in a 5 per cent. salt solution for six hours and then put them in the open air for the sun to do the rest. On the ranches the fish are soaked in water for an hour or so before being fed to the foxes. The plant was tried out for the first time last year and at once proved a success.

The Lion Roars

Dreaming the Lion sits,
While all around
The greedy chorus rings
Of flouting jackal, fleeing hound.

Has he forgot his kingship,
Bought with the price of years?
Is this the end of greatness?
Squander'd the blood and tears?

Sudden the Lion rises,
The Lion roars. . . .
The curs that yapped lie silent,
Licking their sores.

Sunday School Lesson

December 13. Lesson XI—John's Vision on Patmos—Revelation 1: 4-18. Golden Text—Fear not; I am the first and the last: I am he that liveth.—Revelation 1: 17, 18.

ANALYSIS

I. TITLE AND GREETING, Rev. 1: 1-8.
II. THE TRIUMPHANT SAVIOUR, Rev. 1: 9-18.
III. THE FIRST CENTURY CHURCH, Rev 1: 19 to 3: 22.

INTRODUCTION — The images and symbols of the book of Revelation seem to conceal and mystify rather than reveal. They refer, not to events yet to take place, but, according to the view most widely held today, to events in the first century. The book was written about the year A.D. 95, during the Domitian persecutions, in order to strengthen and encourage the oppressed Christians. Its figures and symbols would be meaningless to the Roman conquerors, but perfectly intelligible to the Jews, for whom it was written.

I. TITLE AND GREETING, Rev. 1: 1-8.

The Greeting (v. 4) is to the "seven" churches in the province of Asia. "Seven indicates all the churches there are. The blessing is pronounced by the Lord of the past, present and future. The God who, in the troubled past, has saved his people, is still on his throne." To every Christian, bludgeoned by cruel circumstance, comes the heartening thought, "He thinks of me." He never ceases to love. "Loved" in v. 5 (Authorized Version) should read (loveth).

II. THE TRIUMPHANT SAVIOUR, Rev. 1: 9-18.

On Patmos, a lonely and desolate bit of land ten miles long by six wide, lying off the southwest coast of Asia Minor, and about fifteen miles from Ephesus, is marooned the writer of this book. "On the Lord's day" (v. 10) he is meditating upon Christ and spiritual things. A religious observance of Sunday has been so firmly rooted in him that, away from home and church and friends, he is "in the Spirit" when Sunday comes. The imagery of v. 14 symbolizes righteousness and wisdom. (See Dan. 7: 9; 10: 6.) V. 15 means power. The seven stars (v. 16) tell that all the churches are in his care. The sharp, two-edged sword is his message from which no one can escape. What a heartening message for distracted Christians, then and always. The last word is not with the things which frighten us—but with him who is still in his world, clothed with power, and beyond whose love and care not one of us can wander.

I. THE FIRST CENTURY CHURCH, Rev. 1: 19 to 3: 22.

The letters to the "seven churches" give a glimpse of the way in which the early church kept the faith.

The church at Ephesus (2: 1-7) is commended for its zeal for the purity of Christian doctrine. But hardness has taken the place of love. One might expect that. Whenever a church begins to place its main emphasis upon doctrine, it is in danger of becoming hard and loveless. When religion is reduced to orthodoxy, "love flies out the window."

The church at Smyrna (2: 8-11), passing through great trouble, is told that her experiences will enrich her life.

The church in Pergamos (2: 12-17), a centre of emperor-worship (Satan's throne v. 13) has remained faithful. But she has tolerated immorality among some of her members. She must purge her communion roll.

The church at Thyatira (2: 18-29) is praised for her charity, service, faith and patience. But she has tolerated the presence and teaching of some well known and influential woman who has been turning many believers away from the true faith.

The church at Sardis (3: 1-6), situated among people notorious for luxury and licentiousness, "has a name," that is, is Christian in name, but is dead in trespasses and sins. The faithful remnant shall be robed in white, the color of victory.

The church at Philadelphia (3: 7-13) is small and weak, but faithful. God promises for her a glorious future.

The church at Laodicea (3: 14-22) merits the contempt of God. Its members are "trimmers," neither here nor there," have no strong convictions on anything, complacent, indifferent, proud. God is locked out (v. 20), but in his love and mercy he is willing to put up with smug Christians if perchance he may be able to save them.

Drusilla

By Theodosia Garrison, in The Carillon

Whene'er I have a happiness
I cry its worth aloud
And kindly folk are glad —no less—
To see me gay and proud.
But when I have a sorrow drop
Its dragging weight on me,
I climb to Deerlick Mountain top
And tell it to a tree.

The wise old trees, the strong old trees
That I have known for years
They let me kneel against their knees,
They soothe away my tears.
And when again I come to town
It seems a foolish thing
To weep because no rose-sprigged gown
Is mine to greet the Spring.

Or that my mother chides me sore
Because I needs must run
To hear a singer at the door
Before the chores are done.

The valley lads are silly folk
For all their wooing ways;
They care for naught but mirth and joke
And dancing holidays.
The mountain lads have earnest eyes.
How strange if one should be
As strong, as wonderful and wise
As is a mountain tree!

Canadian Scientists Now Planning for '32 Eclipse

Ottawa, Ont.—Dominion government scientists already are preparing to study in August, 1932, a total eclipse of the sun, the path of which will cross the Province of Quebec. R. Meldrum Stewart director of the Dominion Observatory here, told members of the local branch Engineering Institute of Canada of preparations being made for the observations.

A party will be encamped in a spot selected in Quebec a week in advance of the eclipse, and every member drilled until he is letter perfect in his work, so that full advantage may be taken of the 100 seconds of totality.

Mr. Stewart said the path of the eclipse would sweep down the east side of Hudson Bay, through the Province of Quebec and down into the United States. The path of totality will be 100 miles wide, the western edge passing through Montreal and the eastern limit 100 miles down the St. Lawrence River. If the scientists are favored by a clear day much valuable information would be gathered, he said.

$50,000 Gamsborough Brought $400 at Auction

Chicago—A painting listed as having been done by an unknown artist," purchased by a wealthy Chicago woman for $400, was described by Dr. Maurice Goldblatt, an art authority, as a genuine Gainsborough valued at $50,000.

The purchaser was Mrs. Sol H. Goldberg, wife of a wealthy hairpin manufacturer. She was passing an auction sale of paintings recently when she was attracted by an oil depicting a pastoral scene with a turreted castle in the background. She overbid several other persons. After his examination Dr. Goldblatt said:

"I place it about 1760, in the Iywich period. Then examining the canvas closely I found the master's signature, faint, but true, in the lower righthand corner."

Prepare Plum Pudding Early

Here are Recipes for Various Types of This Favorite Yuletide Delicacy

This is the season for plum puddings and the earlier they are prepared for Xmas festivities the more mellow the flavor.

At one time, boiled pudding were considered indigestible and difficult to make, for the old-fashioned steamer or boiled pudding was served with a thick layer of doughy substance on the outside, due to the fact that it was boiled in a floured cloth. The modern cook steams or boils her puddings in smooth bowls covered with waterproof paper or in a water-tight mould fitted with a tight cover, and serves the puddings as light and dry as a baked one.

When boiling or steaming the puddings, there are certain rules which must be observed in order to ensure light, tender puddings that one will take pride in serving.

1. Both the mould or bowl, and the cover should be thoroughly greased. This is important if you would have a pudding that will retain its shape when turned from the mould.

2. The mould or bowl should be filled only two-thirds full so that the pudding will have ample room to rise.

3. Rest the mould or bowl on an inverted pie plate, a rack or a trivet so that the steam can get all around the pudding. This, of course, is not necessary when the pudding is steamed in a steamer with a well-perforated bottom.

4. The water in the steamer must be boiling when the pudding is placed in it, and must not cease boiling from the time the pudding is put in until it is taken out. If not too large an amount of water is used in the bottom of the steamer a greater "head" of steam will be produced. Then the puddings will cook quicker. Watch, however, that the steamer does not become dry. If it is necessary to add water during the steaming period, be sure that the fresh water is boiling.

5. Puddings that are cooked in a mould, if they are to be kept for some time, should be taken from the moulds and cooled, then put away in a container in a cold, dry place. To use, return to mould and heat in a steamer, or the pudding may be put in the top of double boiler and heated. Be sure that the pudding is thoroughly heated through before serving. From one to two hours steaming will be required for re-heating rich puddings.

6. Most puddings are improved in flavor and texture if they are cooked for several hours. Three to four hours boiling is necessary for a rich pudding. Very long cooking, i.e., 8 or 10 hours, sometimes makes the pudding rather bitter in flavor.

We like strong wrapping paper better than grease-proof paper for tying down the puddings Grease the paper well, stretch it over top of bowl or mould (if mould is not fitted with a cover) then tie down with a cloth. When the mould is fitted with a cover, we stretch wax paper over the top of the mould before fitting on the cover.

Prize Plum Pudding

One and one-half cupfuls pastry four, or 1¼ cupfuls hard-wheat flour, sift with ½ teaspoonful cinnamon, ¼ teaspoonful ground mace, ¼ teaspoonful cloves, ½ teaspoonful grated nutmeg and ½ teaspoonful salt.

Mix with 1½ cupfuls stale breadcrumbs, 1½ cupfuls shredded suet, 1½ cupfuls brown sugar, 1 well-rounded cupful sultana raisins, 1 cupful muscatel raisins, 1 well-rounded cupful currants, 1 cupful finely chopped figs, ⅔ cupful small seeded raisins, 1½ cupfuls finely cut mixed peel, ¾ cupful almonds, first blanched and then cut in slices, 1 cupful glace cherries, cut in halves, ½ up strained honey, 4 eggs, ½ cupful fruit juice, wine or brandy, and between ½ and 2-3 cupful milk. This amount of milk may not be necessary, as the freshness of the fruit and softness of the breadcrumbs make the necessary amount of liquid vary.

Mix in the order given. The eggs should be well beaten. Cover with strong paper, well greased, then tie down with a pudding cloth. Steam six hours in steamer or in a pot with the water three-quarters up the basin. Before serving, steam for two hours longer.

Mix flour, breadcrumbs, spices, sugar, suet and almonds in bowl, add chopped fruit, grated carrots. Beat the eggs, mix with milk and molasses, and add to first mixture Steam 5 hours, then steam 2 hours before serving.

Old-Time Plum Pudding II.

One and one-half cupfuls suet, finely chopped, ½ cupful light brown sugar, ½ cupful seedless raisins, ½ cupful large seeded raisins, ¼ cupful citron peel thinly sliced, ¼ cupful orange and lemon peel mixed, finely chopped, ½ teaspoonful mixed spice, ½ teaspoonful grated nutmeg, ½ teaspoonful salt, 2 cupfuls soft bread crumbs, 1½ cupfuls pastry flour or 1¼ cupfuls bread or hard-wheat flour, ¼ cupful fruit juice, 3 eggs well beaten, and a little milk if required to make a fairly stiff batter.

Mix together the suet, sugar and breadcrumbs. Prepare the fruit and mix with 1 cupful of the flour. Measure and sift together the remaining flour and the spices. Combine with suet mixture. Add well-beaten eggs and fruit juice.

Last add the floured fruit. Mix thoroughly, pour into two large greased moulds and steam for six hours. This will make one pudding of fairly large size.

It has a quaint charm all its own.

Its slimming diagonal lines are so kind to the figure.

Carried out in three blending shades of purple crepe satin as its inspirator, it creates a softened ombre effect, that is delightfully lovely.

And note the youthfulness of the bolero jacket with its tiny puffed sleeves.

Style No. 3367 is designed for sizes 14, 16, 18, 20 years, 36, 38 and 40 inches bust.

Size 16 requires 5 yards 39-inch black, ⅞ yard 39-inch white and 1 yard 39-inch contrasting material.

It is exquisite in black transparent velvet with the upper part of the bodice of gold lame.

Crepe silk and crepe marocain make up attractively.

Write your name and address plainly, giving number and size of such patterns as you want. Enclose 20c in stamps or coin (coin preferred; wrap it carefully) for each number, and address your order to Wilson Pattern Service, 73 West Adelaide St., Toronto.

Yuletide Customs 100 Years Ago

A Word Picture of Our Ancestors' Festivities in 1831

No motors, no telephones, no telegraphs, no electric light, no aeroplanes, no cinemas—surely, lacking all those necessities of modern life, Christmas, 1830, must have been very dull.

Think, too, of the narrow, muddy streets, lighted at night by dim oil-lamps, of the poky little shops. True, the stage-coaches were picturesque, but they were also rather uncomfortable.

Yet if you study the books and newspapers of those days you begin to realize that matters were not as bad as might be imagined, and that in some respects our ancestors of a century ago got more Christmas fun for their money than we do.

Take the theatres. There were plenty of them, the plays were good, and seats were much cheaper than they are today. Also that the public were admitted at half-price after 8 o'clock. The theatres started at six or seven in those days.

Sea-baths in London.

There were no fewer than twenty tea gardens in and around London, with all sorts of amusements, including fireworks. At Vauxhall Gardens, 400 people were employed.

Then there were eighteen public baths in London in 1831, and sea water was laid on at all of them. In that respect our ancestors were ahead of their descendants. Food was plentiful and cheap. Beef and mutton were little more than one-third of their present price, and vegetables were abundant and good. Beer and porter could be had as low as a penny a glass. Spirits were almost equally cheap.

Another cheap thing was travel by river. You could be rowed from London Bridge to Somerset House for 5c. In those days the river was the great channel of communication for Londoners. Saddle horses, too, were cheap. You could hire one for the day for $2.00.

The modern Londoner, transported back to those times, would have found two of his principal amusements sadly lacking—football and dancing. The great football clubs of today had not started, and such football as existed was a peculiarly brutal game, in which both hacking and tripping were legal. Dancing was confined to private houses and was very formal.

But if you wish to get a real idea of Christmas in those days, the best way to do so is to turn to Dickens. He was born in 1812, and the "Pickwick Papers" appeared in 1837.—Tit-Bits (London).

China Censors Films to End Scenes Harmful to Youth

The government has begun a strict censorship of all motion picture films, which must be sent to Nanking for approval before they are shown anywhere in the country. The censorship is not so much moral as national, writes a correspondent of "The Christian Science Monitor." Pictures which include Chinese characters are scrutinized with special care, and no picture will hereafter be permitted with a Chinese "villain." The Kuomintang resents depiction of Chinese opium dens, or similar settings which are believed to give a bad impression of the Chinese people.

A national board of film censorship has been established to pass on all films, Chinese or foreign made. Export has been forbidden of all films made in China which the board considers might make an unfavorable impression abroad. Talking pictures are much more popular with Chinese than silent films ever were, and several Chinese companies are now making talking films in Chinese.

Nita was worried . . . she could not imagine where she had lost her bracelet—in the hotel or on the journey home.

"I can't think what I could have done with it," she kept telling her mother.

"Why not telephone to the hotel," mother suggested. "It's after eight-thirty now and a call will only cost a few cents."

Imagine Nita's joy when the hotel clerk told her that the bracelet had been found in her room and would be mailed to her right away.

Thanks to her mother's suggestion, Nita's anxiety was relieved at once . . . and the cost of the call was considerably less than her taxi fare from the station.

Peel and Dufferin Regiment Pay Goodwill Visit to Streetsville Council

For the second time this year Streetsville has been invaded by soldiers. The first occasion was when the Peel and Dufferin Regiment camped here in August. At that time they came dressed in service khaki and equipped in full battle order to do three days of strenuous training and field manouvres.

The second attack took place on Monday night but was of a more peaceful nature. This time they were dressed in their smart blue patrol uniforms and were armed with messages of good will. The attack was carried out by members of the Sergeant's Mess and was directed against the Village Council which was in session when the invaders arrived. The raiding party was introduced by Councillor John W. Drennan, who outlined the purpose of their visit. Regimental Sergeant Major Palmer then addressed the Council, thanking them and the citizens of the village for the splendid way in which they had been received on the occasion of the camp and for the hearty co operation that had made it such a success. On behalf of the Sergeants mess he presented an enlarged picture of the camp, and also one of the members themselves, to be kept as a remembrance. Reeve, H. W. Hope accepted the picture on behalf of the citizens of the village and expressed the wish that the camp would be made an annual event. Councillors J.E. Bailey and V.C. Johnston also replied, thanking the Sergeants for their kind expression of good will and wishing the Regiment every success

The meeting then adjourned to the home of Reeve Hope, where an oyster supper was tendered to the visitors and Council. The rest of the evening was spent in music and singing.

It has been suggested that the pictures be hung in the Post Office where they would always be on view to the public, if permission to do this can be obtained from the Post Master

Three hundred carloads of people attended Mr. Roy Cook's sale, near Streetsville, last Friday, when his farm stock and implements were disposed of at good prices by Russell and Elliott, auctioneers.

Saturday being Brenda Redick's 5th Birthday, station C.H.M.L., Hamilton, broadcast very hearty greetings to her, sang "Sidewalks of New York" for her, and also said they would be patiently waiting to receive a piece of her birthday cake.

A very delightful surprise party took place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Redick, on Friday evening last, it being their wedding anniversary. A group of their friends, numbering about thirty, dropped in and gave the bride and groom of a few yesterdays a most happy time. Progressive 500 was played, a delicious lunch served, then after a sing song, the happy couple were left with a heap of good wishes for years to come.

TRINITY CHURCH

"The Advent of our King" as one of our hymns suggests employ the thought and interest of the Church at this season. We thankfully remember His first coming "Incarnate", who for us men and for our salvation came down from heaven—and became man—was crucified and suffered and was buried. The third day he rose again—and ascended into heaven and sitteth at the right hand of the Father—who out of his tender mercy didst give His only Son—His only Begotten Son, Jesus Christ to suffer death upon the Cross for our redemption, Who made there a full, perfect and sufficient sacrifice oblation and satisfaction for the Sins of the whole world—yes, we thankfully remember and put our whole trust and confidence in His great redeeming work upon the cross—and there we look forward to that "Blessed Hope and the glorious appearing of the Great God and our Saviour, Jesus Christ, when He shall come again in His glorious majesty to judge the quick and the dead."

The Advent Season is full of this hope and rich teachings. All the Services teach our people to live and look forward joyfully and expectantly to His coming and the call is "Be prepared, be in readiness."

The Services on Sunday laid special emphasis on the Church and its Mission, as one of the active agencies of preparation of the world for His coming.

At the morning service the thought was "As My Father hath sent Me, even so send I you." Laying stress on some features of the work of the church.

In the evening the parable of the virgins was dwelt upon and the rector was assisted by the young men: Jack McClintock read the Psalms, Jack Drennan and Albert Quennell read the 1st and 2nd lessons, Arthur Arch part of the service. The girls in the choir sang beautifully and devotionally the hymn "Pass me not O Gentle Saviour," and the men sang, "Ashamed of Jesus."

On Sunday next the well-known and loved Christmas carols will be rendered and all will try and be present at this bright service.

Christmas Day, Holy Communion will be administered at 8 a.m. and Morning Prayer and Holy Communion at 10.30 a.m. All will want to bring a birthday greeting of "Praise and Thanksgiving" to the "King of Kings."

The S.S. and Young People are preparing for the annual Chrsitmas Tree, which will take place this year on the evening of December 30th. A main feature will be the presentation of "Dickens Christmas Carol" with twenty-two characters.

The W. W. after a year of faithful and splendid work had their annual sale in the Parish Hall, on December 4th afternoon and evening. The day was far from inviting but a good number visited the sale to look over and purchase the many beautiful things on display. Afternoon tea was served and about 70 enjoyed the splendid supper at 6 p.m. Highest praise was given of the supper. At 8 p.m., a splendid and informal programme was given. Two choruses by ten of the younger girls splendidly given, Miss Hilda Haddon, accompanist, Mrs. Wright and Miss Gwen Croxon accompanied by Miss Dorothy Adamson, of Erindale, were well received. Margaret Quennell also sang a solo. Instrumental numbers were given by Miss D. Adamson, Miss M. Crozier, Miss Mary Philpott, Mary Switzer, Mossie Smith, Mrs. Burns, Mrs. Graydon and Dorothy, a duet. This programme of such a high order elicited much satisfactory appreciation.

The women of our congregation are to be highly commended for the splendid work done during the year.

Sask. People Send Thanks for Supplies

This Letter was Received from one Grateful Person Who Was Assisted

Central Butte, Sask.,
Dec. 5th, 1931.

Mr. W. C. Andrew.
Dear Sir:

As one of those who received a share of the good things from the car sent to us by you people in Ontario, I want to say thank you. It seems a very simple thing to just say thank you, but there is no other way in which we can convey to you our true feelings of thankfulness and gratitude for your goodness and kindness to us. I got a very generous share of apples from a barrel on which I saw your name and address so I am taking the liberty of writing to you. I wonder if you know how it feels to sink your teeth into an apple after not having had one for such a long time that you forget what it looks like, and tastes like. When I went into the church on Wednesday this barrel was standing with the top open. I reached for one, and bit into it, and "oh boy", it sure tasted good. We farmers here are all broke, none of us have any money and so we cannot buy fruit. We have had no crop for three years. Drought and high winds which cause the soil to drift are the causes of it. Perhaps you have never seen soil drift and so do not understand it. I farm a half section, 320 acres, a block of land one mile long and a half mile wide. I summer fallow one third of this each year. I plow the land in June and keep it free from weeds by cultivation the rest of the summer. When it rains, the soil particles run together, it then comes up in lumps and so does not blow, but in seasons of drought a dust mulch forms on top and when a high wind comes up it starts it moving, and then good day, there's nothing can be done about it. Sometimes the air is so thick with dust that I cannot see the barn from the house. The wind gets a clear sweep for we have no trees here, just flat prairie. You should see the inside of the houses after one of these storms. Dust on all the furniture, on beds, on clothing, everywhere, everywhere, sure makes the women feel like swearing. In a great many districts here we cannot get water by digging wells, so we use teams, and plows and scrapers and make a huge "dug-out." We get this filled when the snow melts in the spring and that way we get enough water for the stock. This year the wind carried the soil and filled up these "dug-outs", piled it up at the fences to nearly the top of the fence posts, and filled all the ditches on the roadside. We sowed our wheat in the spring and it came up fine, then along came a dust storm and cut it down. Then we got about eight or ten days of calm weather and the wheat had picked up and got away to another start when along came another blow, etc. This happened time after time until the wheat plants got so whipped and beaten that they died. We sow our wheat from two to three inches deep here.

In places the wind blew the soil away until the seed was on top, just hanging by its roots. We got quite a lot of rain in late July. The grain was killed by then but it brought on a weed called Russian Thistle. We cut a lot of this stuff and piled it up. We will try to keep the stock alive on that till spring. I have three milk cows but I get no milk. I had to let them go dry for I have neither feed nor fodder, and although the weather is below zero they are outside all the time, day and night, trying to rustle a living on the roadside, in the field or wherever they can get a bite to eat. I understand there is a story circulated in the east that we are eating mice and gophers. That is not true, conditions are not that bad yet. Perhaps you are hearing a lot about government relief for us. The relief commission gave each family an order for six tons of coal, that helped greatly. Starting in July we were supposed to get an allowance of groceries each month, but we got nothing until the 28th of October when I got a cheque from the relief commission. On the back of the cheque was a list of groceries and things I could get and the price of each, such as, 5 gal. of coal oil, $1.10; potatoes, 40c; matches, 10c; lard, 22c; 8 bars soap, 12c; 1 sack flour, $2.05; 2 lb. beans, 7c; 1 pkg. yeast cakes, 5 lb. sugar, 31c; ½ lb. tea, 15c, etc. The amount allowed me was $7.61 and that is everything we have had, before or since.

There seems to be a general impression that the government is giving these things, but let me tell you there is no gift about it. We have to give a note for every thing we get, whether it be fuel or food. Looks like we will have our belts to the last hole by spring. You will understand by this why your car load of good things is so welcome. In conclusion let me say, that, thanks to you Ontario people our Christmas is not going to be the bare one we thought it would be, and when you sit down to your Christmas dinner, you can do so with a feeling of satisfaction, knowing you have made it possible for us people out here to have our tables loaded on that day. We are already planning apple pies, apple puddings, apple dumplings and I don't know what else. It seems to me that every chair and table and stand in every house is covered with apple recipes.

Let me again thank you.

Yours truly and gratefully,
WM. BEATTIE.

CHRISTMAS MESSAGE

Dear Friends:—

Accept the earnest wish,

THAT the melody of the Christmas Hymns may sing in your hearts every day of the year.

THAT the Happy Bells of the season may continue to ring in joy-giving echoes when other days have come.

THAT the Peace proclaimed by the angels may fill your life with a calm beyond the reach of daily discords.

THAT Good-will toward men may glow in your heart as the days lengthen; kindling into a love like that which burned in the soul of Him whose coming brought all Christmas good to earth, and whose Holy Presence alone and always keeps life glad and strong.

Sincerely yours,
GEO. H. PURCHASE

Annual Hunt of Local Hunters

ANNUAL HUNT, 1931

On Thursday evening, Oct. 29th, the following hunters left Streetsville for Blind River, Algoma: Hugh Tinsley, Fred Buckingham, Fred McCarron, Herman McClintock and Bert and Elmer Fullerton.

There was nothing of special mention on the trip until we landed at the River at 9.46 a.m. Friday morning. Here we were met at the station by a goodly number of the River boys, including James McClure, Leo Pepin and Lester Provencher, and after receiving our licenses and supplies we had dinner at the good old American Hotel and then made ready to go up the Blind River by boat to the steel. Here we transferred our supplies to the six miles of narrow gauge railroad. Instead of an engine and train of cars on the railroad, a lorrie driven by a Ford engine, is the means of transportation. We had a real trip and made the six miles shortly after dark. After a good nights rest we had breakfast and then loaded the supplies on the outboard transport and were soon on our way up Lake Matineuda. We had a pleasant cruise of 12 miles and landed at camp at the head of Moon Lake in good time to shape things up for dinner. We then got the camp in ship-shape for the season; got some wood cut, and then the first of Nov. being Sunday we had an easy day before starting to hunt on Monday. Where we used to have 5 weeks of hunting season, we now have only 25 days, and we are deprived of the use of dogs as well. The hunt sure was different without the dogs as we have been using them since we first went to hunt in Algoma in 1906. Some of the sports are strongly opposed to the use of dogs, but I'll venture to say that if a tab is kept on the number of female deer shipped this year they will far exceed previous years when dogs were used. We take out a license to eat a deer in camp so our first effort was to secure one for this purpose. This was soon done and then an attempt was made to locate Bruin. The weather was mild and we sure thought our chances would have been good, but not one of the party was lucky enough to run up against one of his kind. We sure had a lot of very warm and wet weather, which made it very unfavorable for hunting deer, as we were afraid the meat would spoil. We held up on hunting deer on that account, hoping we might finally be favored with some snow and colder weather. The warm weather continued throughout the season, so we had to do some killing or come home without venison. Well, we managed to land our number and on Wednesday evening, Nov. 25th, the boat came in to take us to the steel. We broke camp about 7.30 p.m. and had a pleasant ride down the lake. A lath mill, that was built here some years ago, is being enlarged and is going to commence operating soon. This will be a good thing for a number of men who would otherwise likely be idle. We stayed at the large boarding house over night and had a good nights rest, and next morning we again loaded the Ford transport and crossed the steel to the head of Lake Du Boyne. We unloaded everything on the dock and waited for Dubie's motor boat and scow. Richard Clegg had a few hair-raising stories to tell Leo while we waited in the old pay office. He sure had some good advice for a hunter who gets turned in the woods. Well, Dubie arrived about 3 o'clock and we were soon on our last boat for Blind River. We arrived in good time for supper and got everything moved to the station. A real treat awaited us after supper. Some of the boys called on Dave Raenville, who used to camp with us, but being engaged with James McLean for the Government, they were unable to accompany us this fall. However, we hope they will again answer the roll call for next hunt. We all met at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Provencher, who sure proved to be ideal hosts for a real evenings enjoyment. James McClure tuned up his violin and accompanied by real artists on the piano, an old-time house-warming was enjoyed by all, Louie Bartlett managing the floor in a real capable manner. A number of the neighbors joined in the party, which sure made an evening to be remembered. Mouth organs helped to fill in at odd intervals and the eats were sure above par. The quartette favored with several special requests and Mr. Manoe made some very complimentary remarks about our senior member of the club, James McClure. After expressing their appreciation to Mr. and Mrs. Provencher for their kindness the guests departed for their respective homes more than pleased with the good time provided.

Next day we got everything straightened out in the way of bills and accounts and prepared to catch the 6.46 p.m. for Sudbury and Toronto. We were given a rousing send-off at the station and all got on board for the final lap of the trip.

We arrived safely at West Toronto in time to catch the Owen Sound train for our starting point.

All considered, we had a good holiday and good luck, but sincerely hope the Government will reconsider the ban they put on man's best companion of the animal kingdom—the dog.

One Who Was There.

HYDRO BY-LAW

The meeting in the Prince of Wales Theatre, Monday night, to discuss the changing over to Hydro power, was well attended, both by ladies and gentlemen. Reeve Hope occupied the chair and gave a history of the local power plant from its erection in 1907, to date, stating why it was built, what it has done, what it could not do to-day, because of the changing conditions, and why he thought Hydro would be much better and cheaper.

The guest speaker of the evening was Mr. Stocking, of the Ontario Hydro Power Commission, who has been with that organization a great many years and is thoroughly versed in every detail. He gave a history of the Hydro and told how in its early stages the municipality that wanted Hydro had to guarantee the costs of installation, but it was not so to-day. He said the Hydro Commission don't care whether they supply Streetsville with Hydro power or not—but if they want it they can have it. Asked if village did not take Hydro now, would the present power plant lose its customers just outside of Streetsville, he said, yes, the Hydro would in time absorb them, when they built more Hydro lines in the district. Respecting motors, washing machines, etc., now being used on the village power, he said some of them would have to be thrown away if they were not made to run on either 25 or 60 cycle. If there was any surplus from the Hydro it would be used to pay off the debentures. The debentures, according to the By-Law, will be issued for the sum of $13,000, by the Corporation of the Village of Streetsville, and with interest, will amount to $1,087.00 per year for 20 years. In order to meet this annual payment the council will have to levy an extra three mills, which means that our taxes will be raised $3.00 on every $1,000 of assessment. If the By-Law don't pass we cannot get the Hydro, for either lighting or power. While the Hydro Commission gave an approximate rate of 5c and 2c, they do not guarantee it. The local commission, in case By-Law does carry, would have to make the rates high enough to make the project pay.

The rate set for street lighting was $1,200.00 per annum, by Hydro. At present the street lighting does not cost anything, as the plant must be kept in operation anyway for other purposes. The printed statement for 1930 shows $1,190 received for street lights; it also shows same amount paid out for street lights. Some people don't seem to understand this, but it is only a matter of book-keeping.

One man said, if it's going to cost $2,000 to put the dam in shape to keep it running, why not go on Hydro altogether? The supposition is, that the dam might go out at any time, and we would be without power for perhaps six months, until it was repaired. But why worry about a mountain before you come to it?

The council should be congratulated for their effort to improve our power system, but some seem to think it is not an opportune time to make the change over to Hydro. We will have to leave it to the property owners to decide. Tenants have no vote on the Hydro By-law, unless they hold a lease of the property for a period covering the lifetime of the debentures.

The meeting was rather one-sided, as some, who are opposed to making the change, were evidently afraid to say anything.

Councillors J. E. Bailey, John Drennan and V. C. Johnston also addressed the audience on the Hydro question. During the year they have developed wonderfully as platform speakers, and we would not be surprised if some of them would be candidates for parliamentary honors in the near future. Councillor Hardy was unavoidably absent.

HIGH SCHOOL COMMENCEMENT

The annual presentation of diplomas, medals, crests, and prizes of the High School will take place on Friday evening, Dec. 18, at 8 p.m. in the Oddfellows' Hall.

An excellent programme of plays, drills, and musical numbers is under preparation. Streetsville people who have always given a full house to the students' entertainment will find this year's concert quite up to par. The Middle School Play, "Ici on parle Francais" is well worth the twenty-five cents admission alone. Then the Lower School lends the Christmas atmosphere with a bright sketch from Dickens. The valedictory by John Ross, winner of oratorical contests, will be of special interest. The musical and stunt numbers will also figure prominently. In addition to the regular presentations, Jack Drennan will present to some of the boys life-saving medals won during the summer.

We'll see you there!

We are pleased to announce that there are no cases of septic throat at Streetsville, and very little sickness of any kind.

WITH THE LONE SCOUTS

For the third time since its organization the staff of the Lone Scout Department of the Boy Scouts Association extend to all the Lone Scouts of Ontario their very best wishes for a Happy Christmas, and in this greeting they are joined by "Lone E" and the editor and staff of this paper.

They hope that you have done your very best to help Lone Scout Santa Claus to perform his gigantic annual "Good Turn", and in return you may be assured that "Santa" will not forget you as he goes his rounds.

Isn't it a wonderful feeling to know that you have made someone else happy by just a little effort on your part?

It is quite an interesting comparison to note that at Christmas, 1929, the Lone Scout Department sent out a Christmas Card to all Lone Scouts of Ontario on the back of which was printed the names of all the Lone Patrols in the province, and the total number of Lone Scouts in Ontario. This number was 125, including two Scoutmasters. We note that four of the Lone Patrols mentioned in that list are now Regular Troops at Paris, Sault Ste. Marie, Cobalt and Beamsville.

A recent census of the Lone Scout Department informs us that there are now about 320 Lonies on the books, and, in addition, five Leaders. In addition to this, nine regular troops have been organized as a result of Lone Scout progress. Isn't this a splendid record of steady growth?

We are glad to note how enthusiastically the Lone Scouts are working on that Disarmament Petition for the League of Nations Society. One Lonie had his form filled in and returned before all the letters had been mailed, and he has since filled out two more and asked for an additional three.

That fellow is a worker, isn't he.

Have you seen the new "Humane Calendar"?

This is a calendar which is published every year by the Toronto Humane Society of 11 St. Alban's Street, Toronto. Each year this calendar contains twelve most beautiful colored pictures of birds, animals, etc., and the 1932 edition contains pictures by Major Alan Brooks of Canadian Animals, and these include the bear, fox, beaver, lynx, wolf, moose, deer, buffalo, etc. Not only is this a very useful calendar, but each one of the pictures is well worth a frame, and will make delightful decoration for your Patrol Den or for any Lone Scout's bedroom.

The price of this calendar is only 50 cents, and we would recommend every Lone Scout to try to secure a copy.

And, talking of calendars reminds us that there is a New Year coming!

What will your New Year resolution be?

We hope that if you are not a Scout it will be a resolution to join the great world-wide Brotherhood of Scouting.

If you are already a Scout, then let your resolution be to make your Scout program for 1932 a really active and progressive one!

Information about the Lone Scouts of Ontario may be obtained from the Lone Scout Department, Boy Scouts Association, 330 Bay Street, Toronto, 2. Write to-day.

Statue 370 Feet High To Be Erected to Lenin in Leningrad

Moscow, Dec. 13.—The Soviet Union will erect the largest statue in the world in tribut to Nicolai Lenin, guiding spirit of Bolshevism through the Red revolution and the early years of the Communistic experiment in Russia.

The statue will be a colossal figure of Lenin, some 370 feet high, according to present plans. (The Statue of Liberty in New York Harbor is 305 feet high from foundation to the torch).

The figure of Lenin will be topped by a lighthouse beacon and will be erected in Leningrad port. The Leningrad factory workers initiated the idea and started raising the fund. The workers will contribute their labor in spare time to aid in the construction.

Lenin, who died in 1924, was a disciple of Marx and leader of the Bolshevik (minority) fraction of the Socialist revolutionary movement against the Czara. His full name was Vladimir Ilyich Ulyanov Lenin. In the years just prior to the revolution he lived abroad, writing and directing the activities of the Bolshevists.

As directing genius of the Soviet republics he lived to see the machinery of Bolshevism put into action, but the nation was still in desperate straits when he died.

The Government recently announced plans for developing Leningrad into a "model Soviet city."

Death From Cold Facing 300

Trapped in Arizona Mission —Three Tons of Coal Available Fuel

Gallup, N.M.—Death by freezing Sunday night confronted 300 storm-trapped men, women and children in the Presbyterian Navajo Mission Hospital at Ganado, Ariz.

Three tons of coal, sufficient to heat the hospital and two dormitories for eight hours, constituted the available fuel. The coal was trucked to the mission from Galup Sunday.

The truckers broke through snow drifts from six to 15 feet deep to take the fuel to the mission. The wind whipped the snow back into the road almost as fast as they could dig it out.

The temperature dropped to 17 degrees below zero Saturday night and indications were that even lower temperatures would prevail. The mercury stood at 15 degrees below zero at 7 p.m.

A caravan of nine trucks each loaded with a ton and a half of coal, which left Gallup early Sunday afternoon, were somewhere on the 60-mile stretch of drift blocked road Sunday night.

All of the wood which could be used for fuel at the mission has been burned. The men, women and children chopped up the remaining portion of a wooden corral Sunday. The wood first was burned when the coal was used to heat the buildings.

What You Can Do

If you cannot sway the crowd
With an eloquence divine,
You can fight, with head unbowed,
In the brave unyielding line
Which seeks ever to withstand
Evil's clamorous demand.

If you cannot rule the land,
Shape her policy and laws,
You can lend a helping hand
To some weak but worthy cause,
Aid the common weal of men
With your deed, your voice, your pen.

Though the ship you cannot steer,
Find her path across the sea,
Read the constellations clear,
Solve the Pole Star's mystery,
You can help to stoke the fires
Which the speeding ship requires.

A.B.C.

"Are you folks saving anything?" "Well, not exactly, but we have quit spending money we haven't got."

Thomas Alva Edison

1847-1931

His genius he was quite content
In one brief sentence to define:
"Of inspiration one per cent.,
Of perspiration ninety-nine."

A humble boast; but humbler yet
We felt, who heard, and knew full fine
One drop of that immortal sweat
Was worth a sea of yours or mine.
—By Jan Struther in the New Statesman and Nation (London).

The nobility of our nature consists in doing good for the good's sake; either from an inferiorly recognized law of pure duty, or from a feeling of the exalted nature and attractive beauty of virtue. It is only these motives which show the character to be itself great and noble; and only these react upon and improve it. — Alexander von Humboldt.

60 Lives Claimed By European Waters

Italian Naval Tug, Cutter and Rum-runner Founder

London.—Sixty lives or more were lost in gales which swept three seas of Europe over the week-end.

Shipping was badly damaged, particularly off the coast of North Africa in the Mediterranean.

The Italian naval tug Tesbo went down off the coast of Sardinia on Sunday with an estimated loss of 30 lives. More than 100 others on the Eesbo were rescued with difficulty by the cruiser Trieste.

The gale that raged off the African coast capsized or damaged numerous craft, including a coast guard cutter which was swept ashore at Bone, Algeria. Twelve perished in that disaster.

The captain and 16 members of the crew of the rum-running steamer Venus were drowned in the North Sea off the Norwegian coast after the ship had been fired upon by a Norwegian coast guard vessel.

Whether the Venus sank because a hole had been shot into it or because it struck a rock was not determined definitely.

Christmas Night on the Plains

The cities hve their colored light and fires,
Their Christmas bells, their music-echoing spires,
And here is utter silence, yet I think
This high arc bent above me, black as ink,
Holds clearer chimes, and that great silver star
Lit by the hand of God, is lovelier far
Than all the flare of fire and colored light
That men have hung upon the earth tonight.

Silver and silence—how they speak His name!
This wide, unpeopled land—this rain of flame,
Belong to Him, who loved the silence so.
A star was His own symbol long ago—
This starlight is so white—these plains so still—
And suddenly the great wide spaces fill
With glory, and a song rings high and clear—
The plains belong to Him, and He is here!
—By Grace Noll Crowell.

A Good Plot

A candidate who credited his constituents with a rather high standard of intelligence took upon himself the duty of explaining to a meeting something of the workings of the economic system. He was led into an involved explanation requiring the use of many unfamiliar and polysyllabic words.

At the end of one particularly abstruse sentence there came a faint inquiry from the rear: "And 'ow much d'ye want for the film right s of that, guv'nor?"

Merely a Mistake

A professor was in the habit of letting his dog sit by his side at meals. One evening when out at dinner, a woman next to him, wishing to attract his attention, gently touched his sleeve.

The professor mechanically transferred a bone from his plate, and said, "Oh, get away. Take this out on the mat."

Owl Laffs

Christmas.

Again we approach what ought to be the happiest season of the year.

Christmas—how it has always thrilled us since childhood! But how about those who have not been so fortunate this year?

Let us spend our Christmas this year in the most unselfish way that we have ever done. If you do not, personally, know some family with whom to share a happy Christmas, make inquiry among your friends and they will give you the name of some worthy one. There are many really needy families in and about your town. This has been a hard year with the poor. In spreading joy amongst the unfortunate, you are also spreading joy in your own heart.

To All the Readers of This Column:

When you have summed up all good wishes expressed by your friends in their greetings to you at this Christmas season, just remember that our wish is that every one of their wishes will come true.

Not just the holly, not just the pine,
Nor flaming of candles, makes Christmas so fine,
But the spirit of Friendship, that reaches afar,
To wish Merry Christmas, wherever you are.

Exception to the Rule

'Twas the night before Christmas, and all through the house, not a creature was stirring, with the exception of——

FATHER, who wants to know what happened to the Christmas tree stand when he put it away last year——

MOTHER, who is trying to answer the telephone and father at the same time——

NORMAN, aged 3, who is calling from the crib and wishing to be informed if that noise he hears is Santa Claus——

AN EXPRESSMAN, aged 150 by the way he feels, who is delivering a rocking horse at the side door——

AUNT AGNES, who has just dropped the library table drawer seeking a pencil to sign the receipt——

GRANDMA, who can't remember what she did with the Bedtime Stories she bought for Norman's stockings and who wanders about like Lady Macbeth——

ANNABELLE, aged 16, who skips endlessly and wants to know if they can't unpack the new phonograph tonight instead of to-morrow so she can ask some of the boys in to dance while father trims the tree——

A DELIVERY MAN, who sounds like a troop of cavalry in the front vestibule and who is with difficulty convinced that he has the wrong house——

NORA, the maid, who has just dropped a plate in the kitchen——

JACK, aged 14, who blows out a fuse while monkeying with the lights for the Christmas tree and throws the whole house in darkness——

RADIO LOUD SPEAKER, which announces, "Christmas Carol, God Rest You Merry Gentlemen, Let Nothing You Dismay," broadcast from Station DIN.

The Season's Wishes

Just around the corner
From Christmas week,
Comes the New Year,
Trying to peek
Into Christmas packages,
Wanting to find
A new sort of wish
In a Christmas rhyme.
Yet what better greeting
Than we are wishing you,
Than Ye Olde Time Merrie Christmas
And Happy New Year, too!

An owl may not be so wise, but at least he knows enough not to go lumbering about, when he can't see where he's going. He's canny enough to sit back and keep still. After eating fresh onions, beware of saying marvelous. The man who can really learn can also forget. As long as woman exists on this sweet earth there will be two vital problems in her life—men and permanent waves. Beware of a woman who will tell her honest age—she'll tell anything. The cheapest commodity in this world is advice. That's why so many people give it away.

For Christmas

And what do I want for Christmas?
Perfumes and jewels to wear?
Nay, such were the gifts that kings bore
Who thought a King was there,
When in the darkness, on the hay,
A Babe in need of comfort lay.

Then what do I want for Christmas?
To watch a Star with you
In wonder, still as the shepherds';
To hear songs fill the blue,
And, dreaming of that Babe asleep,
To have a child's faith, sweet and deep!

The 1932 Eclipse of the Sun

On August 31, 1932, there will take place the comparatively rare event of a total eclipse of the sun visible in Canada. The last such eclipse occurred in 1925, and no further total eclipses except the one next year will cross Canada until 1954 states the Dominion Observatory of the Department of the Interior.

Some New Twists In Old Games

FORFEITS.

With the laughter and gaiety of Christmas parties, games played for forfeits are often voted the most popular. It sometimes happens, however, that when the time-honored penalties have been allotted, it is difficult to think of fresh ones. Here are a few suggestions.

Repeat a nursery rhyme backwards, such as "Three blind mice," etc.

Leave the room with two legs and come back with six. (You bring a chair back with you.)

Kiss the girl you love best without anyone knowing it.—To do this, all the girls present must be kissed, the one most admired, of course, taking her turn among the rest.

Grumble in one corner, sing in another, dance in another and cry in the other.

Make your will.—The victim is commanded to say what he will leave as a legacy to every person present. To one he may leave his hair, to another his eyebrows, another his common sense, etc.

Kiss a book inside and outside without opening it.—This is done by first kissing the book in the room and then taking it outside and kissing it there.

TELEGRAMS.

A game that can be played by any number of people is Telegrams. Pencils and papers are required, and each player writes at the top of his paper eight or nine letters—say, the letters that make TED BROWN. The papers are then exchanged, and each player has to write a telegram, the words beginning with whatever letters are on his or her piece of paper, in the order in which they occur.

Thus, the player who has the paper headed "Ted Brown" might write as his telegram: "Terrible excitement; Dad's Best Rabbits Only Won Ninepence." Five or ten minutes may be allowed, after which the telegrams are read out, and forfeits paid for every incomplete or incorrect message.

SHADOW BLUFF.

A large white sheet is hung on one side of a room, and on a table some distance behind it a very bright lamp must be placed. All other lights are then put out, and half the party pass behind the sheet, while the other half remain in front, trying to guess the originals of the shadows thrown on the sheet from behind.

This is not so easy as may be expected, and wrong answers must be paid for by forfeits.

TIED UP.

Few people will believe you can tie them up with two pieces of string each only a foot long, so that they cannot get free even with the use of a knife or a pair of scissors.

Get them to kneel down, and then tie their right wrist to their right foot and left wrist to left foot. You can then put a pair of scissors in front of them and tell them to cut themselves free.

They will be unable to move their hands or feet; in fact the only movement possible is the one made if they try to get hold of the scissors, and they will fall over, and in that position be quite helpless.

Total of 88,812,211 Bu. Exported From Montreal

Montreal.—When the last bushel of grain for overseas shipment from Montreal this season slipped out of the Harbor Commission's elevators a total delivery of all grain for the year amounted to 88,812,211 bushels, as compared with 80,771,022 last year.

Completing the grain shipments overseas, the Hunstanworth sailed on Dec. 7th for British Channel ports with 121,563 bushels of wheat.

How to play Bridge AUCTION and CONTRACT

by Wynne Ferguson

Author of "PRACTICAL AUCTION BRIDGE"

ARTICLE No. 1

It is really remarkable that the experts still disagree over the bidding of certain hands, but such is the fact. The following hands have been submitted to leading experts and they failed to agree on any of them. It goes to show that there is still very much to learn about Auction and Contract, even by the experts, before they can be certain that their present-day theories are correct. This very variety of opinion, however, helps the game and makes it the most interesting ever played. As long as the personal element enters into Auction as strongly as it now does, there is bound to be this variety of opinion. Here's hoping that it always continues.

Hand No. 1

: Y :
: A B :
: Z :

Hearts—J, 9, 7, 6, 2
Clubs—A, 7, 4
Diamonds—K, 10, 8, 7
Spades—A

Rubber game, no score. What should Z, as dealer, bid with the foregoing hand?

AUCTION BIDDING:

The only question in this hand is: Shall the dealer bid one no trump or one heart? The no trump bid seems the better as it gives partner more accurate information. With this bid, partner will not be deceived but, if Z should bid one heart, there is a very strong chance that the bid will deceive partner and probably result in a big loss. The only argument in favor of the heart bid is that it is a safer bid than no trump because, if Z's ace of clubs and spades are taken out of his hand, he may not be able to score one no trump. This is true but seems to be more than offset by the probable loss resulting from deceit of partner.

CONTRACT BIDDING:

In Contract, where game must be contracted for, it is always better to bid the suit, rather than no trump, in doubtful hands. One heart is, therefore, the proper bid.

Hand No. 2

: Y :
: A B :
: Z :

Hearts—K, Q, 10, 9, 7
Clubs—none
Diamonds—7, 2
Spades—Q, J, 10, 8, 4, 3

No score, rubber game. What should Z, as dealer, bid with the foregoing hand?

AUCTION BIDDING:

There are three possibilities in this hand. Z may bid one spade, one heart or pass. The writer is of the opinion that one spade is the best call. The hand is too strong to pass and the spade bid is preferable to the heart bid as the former suit is much the stronger and the one that should be the trump.

CONTRACT BIDDING:

At Contract there are two choices, either a three spade bid or a pass. The latter seems preferable.

What the Radio Means in the Arctic

Wireless Receivers and Transmitters Make Medical Advice Available

Ottawa.—Within the shadow of the North Pole medical aid can now be received over the two chains of Government radio stations and the private commercial stations which have been established near the Arctic Circle during the past few years.

Radio has become such a boon to the northland that there is hardly a community, fur trader, police post or other settlement which has not a receiver in good working order. All are attuned to receive the latest news.

Influenza epidemics have broken out during recent years among the Eskimos and Indians at various points in the Arctic. With radio an established necessity in the northland, it has been possible for the Canadian Government to warn and give instructions to other communities in the Arctic through broadcasting stations and the powerful transmitters at Ottawa maintained for direct communication with the Arctic.

Advice Radioed.

Accidents happen frequently in the north, and while all police officers, as well as most traders, trappers and missionaries, have some elementary first aid knowledge, it is now possible to treat dangerous accidents with the expert guidance of skilled doctors by means of the radio.

One of the first such cases to be treated was through the radio at Cape Hope's Advance, on the south shore of Hudson Straits.

A trapper had been wounded by one of his traps. He lived in a lonely cabin 50 miles from the radio station. It was his nearest point of contact. Wounded though he was, he harnessed his dogs and set out in the biting cold and wind of sub-zero weather for the radio station where he might obtain aid. He feared that blood poisoning might set in.

When he reached the radio station after hours of painracked travel he was in a bad fix. He was too far gone for the unaided treatment of the operators there, and they immediately called Ottawa.

Here a constant watch is kept for just such emergency calls. Within a few minutes a doctor had been summoned and made acquainted with the case. While the thermometer stood at 30 below zero at that isolated station on the Hudson Straits, an operation was performed by a doctor who was nearly two thousand miles distant!

Both Waves Used.

Short and long wave phone and telegraph radio transmitters are housed at several points in Ottawa for contact with the north. There is one station operated by the Department of Marine which keeps in touch with the entire Arctic. Another operated by the Department of National Defence, has its stations strung throughout the Western Arctic.

It is a usual thing to hear at these Ottawa stations the voice of code signals of men seated thousands of miles distant in the cold Arctic. The signals come rolling in with reports and requests for medical advice.

In the not so distant Northland, but still isolated sections of northern Ontario, there also are radio stations operated by the Ontario Department of Lands and Forests. Even these have their requests for medical aid.

One of the strangest was that for a big Indian brave who had gone insane through the attacks of black flies. He was brought to one of the fur posts in the northern part of Ontario, and there the agent advised medical attention.

The nearest doctor being hundreds of miles distant, the small short wave radio transmitter went into action with the result that a plane came to take the Indian to civilization the next day.

Biggest Market in World Planned in Buenos Ayres

Buenos Ayres.—A huge market place, covering five square blocks, is expected to be erected soon in the western section of Buenos Ayres by a group of Argentine and British capitalists. The project, to be known as the "Great Western Market," will involve an outlay of 20,000,000 pesos ($5,000,000) for the building alone, and it is said that the finished market will be the largest of its kind in the world.

A block of land measuring about 172,000 square feet has been purchased for 3,700,000 pesos ($925,000). The projected market will have direct access to all railroad lines entering Buenos Ayres, and also will have direct communication with the port of Buenos Ayres through the Western Railway's tunnel.

The Great Western Market board of directors is composed of Sir Hilary A. Leng, Dr. Rodolfo Bullrich, Dr. Artuo Condomio Alcorta, John Wilson, Osvaldo Dasso, Luis N. Lugano and Nicholas A. Casullo.

Spain Still Without City Of Million, Census Shows

Madrid.—Spain has just completed another census, which reveals that it has no city with 1,000,000 residents. Great pains were taken to count every one in Barcelona, the largest city of Spain, in the hope that the census would show 1,000,000 residents. But the tabulations developed that Barcelona had failed by 22,869.

Even though the Catalan capital is not in the million class, it has had a remarkable growth. The census of 1920 gave its population as 710.335, and calculations made by the municipal government in 1928 gave it 840,931 inhabitants.

As in most Continental European cities, there is a big surplus of women over men. The difference is 87,138 which means there are approximately 9 per cent. more women than men.

Many years ago Barcelona and Madrid were rivals in the question of population, but recently Barcelona has forged ahead. In 1920 Madrid was still ahead, with 750,896, but in 1928 it already was behind Barcelona, Madrid then having 809,400 inhabitants.

Huron Indians Still Ply Arts

The life and customs of the North American Indian still survive at Indian Lorette, a quaint little village about three miles from the Chateau Frontenac, in Quebec. In that picturesque spot, on the shore of the St. Lawrence, the descendants of the original powerful Huron tribe still ply their various trades. They make snowshoes and bows and arrows, weave baskets and fashion purses and other feminine accouterments from beaded buckskin, just as their forefathers did. Visitors to Quebec always make it a point to visit this Indian settlement.

Another trouble with the country is that it has too many ex-spenders and too few expendees.

IF ANY MAN

How $2000 Brought Happiness

By Gerald Mygatt

The rector was aware that he was repeating the service mechanically.

Only occasionally, he reflected with a certain cynicism, only once in a blue moon, did he really feel like putting his heart and soul into the intonation of those lovely and solemn old words which so irrevocably linked a woman and a man till death.

At intervals, of course, there was an obvious lovematch—ah, how well he could tell!—and then his heart flooded with warmth, and the beauty of the service and its significance seemed to transform themselves into a light within him, and that light, he knew, shone forth.

But most of them were like to-day's. A church crowded with fashionables and semi-fashionables. The rays of sunlight slanting through the stained-glass windows and making faces look purple and red and yellow and blue and green. The fragrance of too many flowers, and the more highly-keyed fragrance of too much feminity in formal array. Nearer, directly before him, a bride and groom, she a vague laciness of satiny white, and he stiff and solemn in his rigidly-worn black. Beyond the bride and groom the usual cordon of pastel-tinted bridesmaids and black-clad ushers, one or two of these latter inevitably winking in attempts to catch the eye of someone who also looked on marriage as a joke.

Well, marriage wasn't a joke.

The rector knew that. He listened to the sound of his own voice, and found himself faintly surprised, as he always was, that the words could come forth in all their solemnity and careful intonation, without any particular conscious guidance. It was habit, naturally. He had married many, many scores of couples.

He didn't know this groom. That is, he had met him only hurriedly. He was young and quiet; more or less penniless, but with a name. A nice chap, rather bewildered by all this pomp.

Even now, standing there stiffly, beads of moisture were oozing out upon his forehead. Nervous, of course. Well, they usually were. Particularly when they were marrying money.

The rector, reciting the words of the service, wondered where the Mattans had found this young man, for find him they certainly had.

There in the front pew sat Jennie Mattan, known in certain circles as "The Lioness." She was plump, but she was also, as the rector had learned from experience, an exceedingly firm person. The boy was not marrying merely the girl beside him. He was marrying a mother-in-law who could easily have been the original of all the mother-in-law jokes.

Well, thought the rector, after all, it was nobody's business but the Mattans'. If they wanted a title in the family they soon would have it. Very likely the marriage would turn out to be a howling success. One never could tell, these days.

Now the rector paused. He always paused at this point in the ceremony. It was merely an instinctive pause, fruit of that instinct for the dramatic which possibly had drawn him into the clergy.

Then he heard his voice, intoning faultlessly: "Into this holy estate these two persons present come now to be joined. If any man can show just cause why they may not lawfully be joined together, let him now speak, or else hereafter forever hold his peace."

A faint stir moved the church, as it always did. Then there fell silence.

One of the ushers, winking broadly, coughed in a burlesque attempt at rude significance. Someone back in the pews giggled.

It was then that a man rose to his feet about halfway back in the church. He stood there momentarily, holding up his hands nervously. He was a middle-aged man, neatly dressed.

"Just a minute," he said.

The rector's jaw dropped open. Heads turned abruptly, with much rustling of silk and a sudden hissing of whispered and startled queries.

The man stood there stiffly. His fingers twitched. He gulped.

"I believe I can show just cause," he stated.

People were standing up now. Women's hats blocked any view of the intruder except for those nearest him. The ushers started bodily down the aisle, their jaws set grimly.

The rector, completely astounded, raised his hand. Never before in his experience or in the experience of any of his confrieres had a thing like this happened. Why, it was unbelievable! It was horrible.

He strode down the aisle. People gave way before his robes.

"This won't do," said the rector, defiantly.

Two of the ushers had closed around the man. The rector turned, swept his arm widely over the congregation. He looked about him, his head lifted sternly. The people, shame-faced, sat down.

"This man must be heard," the rector announced. Now he turned to the man. "If you have anything to say, say it."

The man glowered. "I've said all I have to say, he replied with a certain dignity.

Jennie Mattan, the Lioness, was facing him with her hands on her hips. Her jaw projected forward and her eyes were narrowed.

"You'll tell your reason here and now," she said.

The man smiled knowingly. He shook his head. "I'll tell my reason when and as I choose."

Someone whispered: "He's a blackmailer."

"Throw him out," grunted a man, and the word was taken up: "Throw him out." The ushers looked at the rector. The rector looked at the man, looked at the assemblage, and then inclined his head.

"That's that,' said the Lioness, with vehemence. "Now everybody sit down. The rector paced back up the aisle.

The wedding will go on," said the Lioness, definitely.

They found the bride in the rector's study. "Come back in here," commanded her mother from the door.

The bride shrugged. "No use," she said. "Ralph has gone."

"Gone? You mean Ralph's gone?"

"He took his hat and coat and he went," said the bride. And then, a little hysterically, she began to laugh.

At nine o'clock that evening the groom sat in a room in an inconspicuous hotel and called "Come in' to someone who knocked upon his door. The door opened. In walked the man who had stood up in the centre of the church. The groom reached for his wallet and counted out from it five one-hundred-pound notes.

"Here's the money," said the groom. The visitor pocketed the bills.

"I might as well tell you," he said, buttoning his coat, "that I was tempted to tell the truth there in the church—that I was an actor, paid to speak my lines, and that you'd found me only three or four hours before the ceremony. Frankly, I didn't like it."

"I don't blame you," said the groom. Now the visitor smiled toothily. "She put it over on you at that," he announced. He patted a newspaper that protruded from his coat pocket.

"It's in here," he said, with drama. "Miss Mattan eloped immediately after the ceremony with a man named Snafford, their family chauffeur. How does that hit you?"

"I'm glad she had the nerve," commented the groom, nodding approbation. "You see, she never had the nerve to oppose her mother. Much too much mother. Miss Mattan never told me, of course, but Snafford did. Great chap, Snafford. I liked him. He was waiting there outside the church.

"Well, I'm——" said the actor.

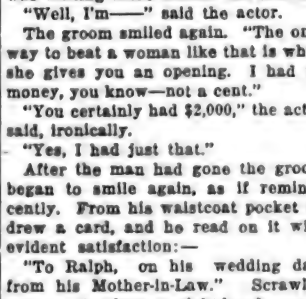
The groom smiled again. "The only way to beat a woman like that is when she gives you an opening. I had no money, you know—not a cent."

"You certainly had $2,000," the actor said, ironically.

"Yes, I had just that."

After the man had gone the groom began to smile again, as if reminiscently. From his waistcoat pocket he drew a card, and he read on it with evident satisfaction:—

"To Ralph, on his wedding day, from his Mother-in-Law." Scrawled across the lower right-hand corner was an admonition, a single short sentence in the form of a command: "Use this $2000 for something that will make you and my daughter happy."—Tit-Bits.



Japanese Politeness

That the Japanese people are extremely polite is a well known fact, but according to a New Yorker who returned recently from a visit to that country, the extent of the politeness is difficult for the average subway traveler of New York to conceive.

Giving an instance, he cited the probable conversation that would ensue should one visit a dentist in any Japanese city. Entering the dentist's office, one makes known his requirements.

"Oh, but why do you come to me? I am a very poor dentist, probably the worst in the city," he will protest.

"On the contrary," replies the patient, "I have heard much of your skill. Won't you please practice it upon me?"

"Your wife seems to have a mind of her own."

"Yes, and although she changes it often, it never seems to leave her possession."

Antique

A professor was spending Christmas in an hotel. At dinner he found himself seated next to a maiden lady of uncertain age.

Eventually she discovered the professor was a collector of old coins.

"I should love to have a coin dated the year of my birth," she remarked. "Do you think you could get one for me?"

"I can't promise," replied the other innocently. "You see, these old coins are only to be found in rare collections."

And yet, meeting her the next day, the professor was unable to understand why he was not recognized.

"It is overlooked that untruthfulness is the worst promoter of confidence at home or abroad." — Dr. Hjalmar Schact.

AMBITION

"Every man is said to have his peculiar ambition. Whether it be true or not, I can say for one, that I have no other so great as that of being truly esteemed by my fellowmen, by rendering myself worthy of their esteem."

These words were used by the great president of America, Abraham Lincoln, a man who started life as a poor boy in the backwoods of Kentucky and until he was 21 labored under every possible disadvantage. Yet he lived to become President of the United States, and a man whose fame has increased with the passing of the years.

COULD NOT TURN IN BED

Held by Unseen Hands

LOCKED JOINTS THAT KRUSCHEN RELEASED

Unseen hands held this woman in her bed. They held her limbs and her joints, so that she was scarcely able to move. They were the hands of the uric acid fiend—and their grip became tighter and tighter every day.

She had almost despaired of ever loosening their hold—when she made what she describes as "a wonderful discovery." She found Kruschen. Read how it helped her:—

"I have suffered terribly for a very long time with rheumatoid arthritis. The pain I've suffered I cannot explain to you! I commenced taking Kruschen six months ago, following directions, and I am thankful to say in less than a week I was able to get a night's rest and sleep. That was something I had not had for a very long time. My joints seemed completely locked and I could not turn in bed for pain. Now I'm able to sleep well, turn with ease, and get about fine, and my joints seem to be quite different. It was one day when I was reading in the newspaper about Kruschen that I decided to try it. And now I shall never be without it. I consider Kruschen is a very wonderful discovery."—Mrs. E. L.

The system of the rheumatic subject is a producer of that dangerous body poison known as uric acid, which is composed of knife-edged crystals. It is bred in accumulated waste matter which the organs of elimination have failed to expel. Kruschen is a powerful solvent of these flint-hard crystals. It swiftly dulls their sharp edges, then flushes them out of the system. Your pains ease; swellings subside; knotted joints become loose.

Better still, Kruschen eliminates the root cause of the evil. Taken regularly, it keeps your liver and kidneys in perfect tune, so that these eliminating organs free your inside from all poison-breeding waste products.

Kruschen Salts is obtainable at all Drug Stores at 45c. and 75c. per bottle.

Cars Wrecked

An accident occured on our main street, near the Post Office, Tuesday night, about 10.45 when the car of Mr. James Moore was very badly damaged, and will cost $200 to have it repaired. Losing control of his car Mr. Kale, Georgetown, suddenly swerved off his course and struck Mr. Moore, who was proceeding down the road. Both cars were much damaged but none of the occupants seriously hurt.

Constable Rutledge was shortly on the scene. We understand that a charge of reckless driving will be laid against the Georgetown man

"May I make a suggestion?"

We all know that the best way to wish a friend a Merry Christmas is to say it yourself — especially in the case of out-of-town friends who appreciate your voice more than any other form of greeting.

BUT — if everybody waits until Christmas Day to make these calls there are bound to be crowded lines and delays.

We telephone operators all wish to avoid that sort of thing. We want to put your Christmas calls through promptly and pleasantly. We therefore suggest that you place your calls as many days before Christmas as you can.

A Christmas greeting is just as timely and appreciated before Christmas as on the day itself; it is spoiled only when it is late. So please be early this year and let us show you how quick and courteous our service can be.

THE

TULE MARSH MURDER

STORY OF A MISSING ACTRESS AND THE TAXING OF WITS TO EXPLAIN HER FATE.

BY NANCY BARR MAVITY.

—SYNOPSIS—

Don Ellsworth's wife, formerly actress Sheila O'Shay, disappears. Dr. Cavanaugh, criminal psychologist, learns their married life has been unhappy. He identifies a charred body found in the tule marsh as that of Sheila. Barbara, his daughter, faints when she hears him tell this to Peter Piper, a Herald reporter.

When Mrs. Kane, Sheila's maid, is arrested she admits that Ellsworth married Sheila under threat of breach of promise. A threatening note signed "David Orme" is found in the murdered woman's safe. Peter trails Orme and arrests him.

Then Peter sees Barbara destroy a jewelled comb belonging to Sheila. Barbara refuses to talk and Peter realizes she is protecting someone.

CHAPTER XXXVI.—(Cont'd.)

"Yes," Barbara said gravely, "he is a great man, and he had been good to me. But, oh!" Sobs rose in her throat, but she fought them down. "You don't understand—you never can understand—I can never tell you!"

"Listen to me," Peter said sternly. "We're talking at cross purposes. You're not being frank with me. I saw you find that comb behind the seat of your car, and destroy it."

Her hands reached out in a gesture of frantic protest, but he disregarded them.

"I said I didn't care what you've done. I meant it. As a matter of fact, I think that you probably killed Sheila O'Shay and that we may have the deuce of a time getting you out of it. Now will you marry me?"

"You think that of me?" Barbara said wonderingly. "You think that I killed her—I, with these hands, committed murder?" She held out her hands, palm upward, and looked at them, curiously. "You think I am a murderess, and that I may be hanged for it, and still—still you want to marry me?"

Peter did not know that he had moved until he reached her and lifted her from the chair and held her close, his cheek against her hair.

"They shan't hurt you, Barbara. Nobody shall hurt you. I won't let them." Staring into the distance above her bowed head, Peter defied the world.

"I think," murmured Barbara, "that it might be worth dying for, to know that somebody felt like that." Then, very gently, she slipped out of those encircling arms. "But I won't do it, Peter. No power on earth—not the power of love itself—can make me marry you. That is the ultimate truth, and you will have to believe it."

Peter looked long and steadily into her eyes, lifted bravely to his, but they did not waver.

"It only makes things a little harder, darling," he said at last. "You know that I'll do whatever I can, anyway. And we mustn't be frightened. I was standing in the driveway when you got out of your car; I'm sure that nobody else saw you. Perhaps, when all this is over and forgotten, you'll be willing to decide differently."

"I can't. Please, unless you want to pain me terribly, don't ask me again."

"But you don't want me not to love you, do you, Barbara?"

Once again Barbara's face was lighted by its elfin smile.

"I don't think there's anything can prevent—either of us," she said.

CHAPTER XXXVII.

Public interest in a murder trial is as unpredictable as the success of a theatrical production, but the trial of David Orme was "sure fire" from the beginning.

"It's got everything," Jimmy asserted with enthusiasm. "Sex appeal, mystery, big money. It's a wow of a story!"

Peter glared dourly at his fellow human being as he fought his way through the crowd in front of the court house. It was a quiet, even a contented crowd, content to stand and stare all day at the familiar outlines of the building—familiar and yet subtly dramatic now because of the drama of life and death opening behind its walls. There was absolutely nothing for them to see, Peter reflected crossly, and yet they thought nothing of waiting there, hour after hour. There were women with small children jammed against their skirts, men carrying their lunches in paper bags. Ropes guarded by policemen cleared a lane to the door; but inside, the crowd poured itself down the corridors from wall to wall. They showed no disposition to make way for Peter.

"I'm sorry, you'll have to let me through," he reiterated mechanically, displaying his press badge and reinforcing it with the sharp prodding of elbows.

"There's too many of these here press fellows; that's what's keeping everyody else out. Where do they get all their pull, anyhow?"

Peter shouldered the speaker aside, forcing his way forward, yard by yard.

"Say, young man, how do you get in to see this boy that's killed somebody? I've been here since six o'clock this morning and I ain't no nearer than when I started." Peter felt the pressure of a hand on his arm and turned to lok down into the face of a neat little old lady, garbed in her "best" of faded black.

"You don't get in," he snapped. "And you wouldn't understand a word of it if you did. You'll learn a whole lot more if you go home and read the 'Herald'."

"Well I never did see the inside of a courtroom," the old lady persisted plaintively. "I thought it would be kind of nice to see it once."

That was what it was to them—a show. It would be equally a show if it were Barbara inside instead of Orme.

A hastily erected fence of unpainted laths walled off the entrance to Department 24. Peter ran the gamut of six policemen, holding fast to his card of admittance: "Press Pass. Admit J. A. Piper representing Herald to all Court Sessions of Orme Trial, Attest A. W. Moore, clerk; Charles Harvey, judge. Seat number 53." It was his ticket to the arena, where the gladiators would lunge at one another with their word-lances, where the judge would loll in his chair—"thumbs up, thumbs down." And outside, the blindly patient crowd, waiting hungrily for its crumbs of vicarious excitement.

Peter flung himself, worn and dishevelled, into seat 53. Inside the courtroom it was very quiet. In one corner a muted telegraph instrument ticked sharply, like the sound of an industrious cricket. Behind the railing which divided the courtrom in half, Peter recognized the roll of fat on the back of the neck of the district attorney, the scrubbed blondeness, like a small boy just out of the tub, of the young defence lawyer, the stalwart, motherless shoulders of Dr. Cavanaugh. Orme himself was overshadowed by the huge figure of the deputy sheriff from the homicide squad who sat beside him. Twelve men and women ranged in two rows along the side wall contrived to look at the same time blank and self-conscious. One of them wore a green hat perched high above her sallow face. Peter decided that a hat like that deserved a peremptory challenge.

"The case of the people against David Orme . . . as alleged in the indictment . . . That he did wilfully and feloniously murder one Sheila Ellsworth . . ." intoned the district attorney.

The judge, with a face all sharp angles, like a cubist drawing, topped by hair that glistened like spun sugar, rapped out questions

"Conscientious scruples against the death penalty in a proper case . . . Any prejudice for or against the defence of insanity . . . The criterion of accountability is this."

Questions. Questions. Questions.

"The people will excuse Mr. Warren. . . The challenge is with the defence. . . The defence will excuse Mrs. Barnes." That was the woman in the green hat. Thank heaven he would not have to face that hat in the jury box day after day!

The personnel in the twelve chairs shifted. The bailiff pulled slips of paper out of a revolving tin box and boomed new names, one by one. Orme—Peter could see him now, over the shoulder of the sheriff—sat with folded arms, staring dreamily into space, his profile motionless in relief against the plaster of the wall. Not once did he glance towards the jury box. The questions and challenges floated unnoticed over his head. Not once did he start at the words, "murder," "Sheila Ellsworth," "hanged,"—words reiterated and hammered on Peter's consciousness until he wanted to strike out against them in unreasonable fury.

The very worst feature of being tried for murder, Peter decided, was the torturing, abysmal boredom of it. If they would only get on with it! The press correspondents slumped in their chairs, jotting down the names and addresses of jurors and crossing them out again when they were challenged. A "sketch artist" in the row ahead amused himself by drawing a libelous caricature of the court reporter. With one accord the men and women in the jury box denied that they ever read anything in the newspapers or had ever heard of the murder of Sheila O'Shay. The faint slip-slip of pencils on copy paper, the chirping of the telegraph cricket sounded as a constant faint overtone to the droning of questions and answers.

There was an indefinable stir, like wind sweeping through a forest.

"Court adjourned until 2 o'clock."

"Order in the courtroom, please! Keep your seats!"

"First juror chosen in Orme Murder Trial"—it would be shouted in "extras" on every corner within the hour. Stumbling and pushing, the reporters crowded the aisle, breaking for the telephones in the witness room outside.

"Bet you two bits they don't get a jury in a week!"

"Not with Judge Harvey—he'll speed 'em. Say, do you remember in the Cogswell case he told 'em he was going to begin trying it by Monday noon, jury or no jury?"

Peter grimaced over his shoulder at the "Q and A" twins of the Herald staff. They sat in adjacent seats, one of them taking down in shorthand the questions and the other the answers to the testimony. Between whiles, they invariably engaged in a spirited conflict over the expected progress of the case in hand. As he turned, Peter for the first time had an unobstructed view of the chairs set back from the table, within the enclosure.

Drunkards at the Wheel

Quebec Action Catholique (Ind.).—At the last term of the Assizes in Arthabaska, Mr. Justice Pouliat sentenced a young man to three years in the penitentiary, after being found guilty of involuntary homicide for having caused the death of a person while driving his car in a state of intoxication and not carrying his licence. The automobile is a great benefit to mankind. But if madmen and drunkards become the absolute masters of the road, the people who have some slight regard for human life will end by refusing to drive in an automobile again. And the highroads, which cost the population so much, the roads whose utility is so general, would in the end be abandoned to a small number of brainless idiots.

Oh, Mr. Porter

"Porter," said an old woman at a country station, "what time is there a train to Greenock?"

"Six-thirty," replied the porter, sharply.

"What?" exclaimed the old woman, who was slightly deaf.

"Six-thirty," repeated the porter, angrily, and turned away.

Not being satisfied, she approached another porter and asked him the same question.

"There's a train at half-past six, ma'am," replied the porter, politely.

"That'll do very well," said the woman. "I just asked that other fellow, and he said next Thursday!"

Easy

An angler had a four-hours' tussle with a huge salmon before he was able to land it. When at length he had made sure of his catch he took it home and related his triumph to his wife, and laid special stress on the time it took and the energy he had to expend before he could secure the salmon. When he had finished he waited anxiously for praise.

For some moments there was silence; then, with a puzzled expression, his wife looked up from her knitting.

"But, my dear," she said, "why didn't you cut the string and get rid of the brute?"

OMISSIONS

An equitable man looks not outward on a defective law, of the mistakes or omissions of which he seeks to take advantage; but he looks inwards upon that law of rectitude which is written upon his heart, and is guided by its dictates.—William Fleming, D.D.

Doubtful Compliment

"Speeding the parting guest," might be described as one of the negative virtues of hospitality. A woman rather overdid the part recently.

She was saying goodbye to some visitors who had long outstayed their welcome.

"It was so sweet of you to let us stay so long," they said, with effusion.

"Oh, I'm so glad you've been," she replied, with obvious relief.—Tit-Bits.

Her Only Hope

"And what if the engine fails when we're up in the clouds?" asked the pretty girl of the pilot as she was about to enter a machine for her first trip.

"Well, if that should happen," replied the pilot, "you just leap out, count ten, and then pull the cord on your parachute."

"But what if it doesn't open?"

"In that case the only logical thing to do is to flap your arms up and down and say, "I'm a bird—I'm a bird.'"

THE SOUL

Your soul makes your body, just as a snail makes his shell. It is enough for us to be sure that whether or not we lived before, we shall live again.

Tricks For the Christmas Party

A Clever Match Trick

The performer of this trick takes a match in each hand and rests the hands palm upward, on the table. Then he closes the hands and asks someone to place a match upon the closed fists. The performer then announces that he is able to pass the match from one hand to the other without opening his hands. He makes a rapid up-and-down movement of both hands. This causes the two visible matches to fall on the table, and he asks for them to be replaced on top of his knuckles. This is done, and another quick movement is made so as to cause the two exposed matches to fall into the hands. The performer then opens his hands and one hand is found to contain three matches and the other only one match. The secret of this trick is that when he let the two matches fall on the table they were not the two from top of the knuckles of each hand, but one from the knuckles and one from the palm of the same hand. The next movement caused one knuckle match to fall into the palm of the hand, so that, unseen by the audience, one palm contained two matches and the other was empty.

To Make a Needle Float

This sounds impossible, but it is easily performed as follows: Lay a needle on a cigarette paper and place it in a glass bowl of water. Carefully cause the paper to sink and the needle will remain floating.

To Lift a Man

It is possible to lift a man from the ground with five fingers. Two persons put their index fingers under the insteps of the person to be lifted, two others place a finger under each elbow, and a fifth puts his forefinger under the man's chin. At a given signal each person lifts his hand and the subject is raised from the ground.

Naming a Chosen Object

Three cards, apples or other objects are placed in a row on the table. The spectators are asked to choose one of the three while the performer is out of the room. Upon his return no one appears to make a sign, but the performer instantly names the chosen article. The trick is accomplished with the aid of a confederate who is smoking a cigar or cigarette. The confederate places his cigar in his mouth so that it designates the chosen article, being either at the left side, right side or centre of his mouth.

Catch the Coins

Two coins are placed on the back of the performer's right hand. The trick is to toss the coins in the air and to catch one at a time as they come down. If the coins are tossed straight up it will be almost impossible to catch them singly. The coins are tossed with an upward tilt of the hand, This causes the coin at the finger-tips to travel much higher than the other, and it will prove quite easy to grab them one at a time as they fall. With more practice the trick can be done with three coins.

A Trick With Coins

Lay a dime between two quarters on a tablecloth, then place a tumbler on the two larger coins. Ask your friends if they can remove the dime without touching in any way either the glass or the coins. They will probably give up the attempt before long, but it is really very easy to do when you know how. All you need to do is to scratch the tablecloth with your forefinger, and the dime will move in the direction of the scratching.

Cut String Restored

A loop of string is held between the thumb and fingers, and a member of the audience is allowed to cut it with a knife. The performer chews the cut ends of the string and they are restored. The trick is done with a short bit of extra string. The extra piece is held protruding from the thumb and fingers while the actual loop itself reposes safely in the hand. When the false loop is cut the performer thrusts the loop and two loose ends into his mouth. He retains the two bits of string and brings out the loop completely restored.

The Button in the Bottle

For this trick you will require a clear glass bottle, a button, a piece of thread, and a cork. Tie the button securely to the thread, place it in the bottle so that it hangs half-way down, attach the other end of the thread to the cork, and cork the bottle tightly. Now how can you sever the thread so that the button falls to the bottom of the bottle? The bottle must not be uncorked or broken.

Nothing more is needed to accomplish this trick successfully than a lens to focus the rays of the sun, which pass through the glass without heating it and burn the thread.

It's snappy developed in woolen with the skirt of plain brown and the jacket bodice of brown and red plaided woolen.

It's interesting in wine-red canton crepe or in black crepe satin.

For Your Tree

You will like to make these trimmings for the tree and they will be very inexpensive, because practically none of the materials used need be new.

Begin some time before Christmas to collect all the white and silver paper possible, and cut it in fringes. These may be (in fact, should be) of varied lengths from a few inches to two feet, and they need not be very even. Gather these into small bunches with thread and tie them in the tree in great profusion.

Also string all the bright glass buttons and beads you can find, and decorate the tree with these fringes also.

When the electric bulbs on the tree are lighted, it will be a pretty sight. But when the two large electric fans which have been placed on each side of the tree are turned on full force, the effect will be magical, for the whole tree will be alive with flickering glint and fairy flutter.

Sunday School Lesson

SUNDAY SCHool—Dec. 4.—Graham December 20. Lesson XII—The Supreme Gift of Love (Christmas Lesson)—1 John 4: 7-19. Golden Text—Beloved, if God so loved us, we ought also to love one another. —1 John 4: 11.

ANALYSIS.

I. THE PROOF OF SONSHIP, 1 John 4:7-8.
II. THE PROOF OF FATHERHOOD, John 4: 9-11.
III. THE PROOF OF THE SPIRIT'S PRESENCE, 1 John 4: 12-16.
IV. THE ULTIMATE SECURITY, 1 John 4: 17-19.

INTRODUCTION—This letter was probably written by the apostle John about A.D. 90. Its main object was to safeguard its readers against certain false teachers. It tells of the revelation of God which came in Jesus of Nazareth, and what it meant for those who follow him.

I. THE PROOF OF SONSHIP, 1 John 4:7-8.

What are the marks of a Christian? Among many others, one answer has usually been prominent—and frequently the first in importance, orthodoxy. Not so does the New Testament teach us. Love is the true orthodoxy. It is the central and determining quality in the character of God. Only the man with love in his heart is a child of God.

II. THE PROOF OF FATHERHOOD, John 4: 9-11.

Love as the mark of a child of God follows from the fact that God himself is love. That quality of God was demonstrated to us by the coming into this life of his son, Jesus of Nazareth. Those who came in contact with Jesus found their lives immeasurably enriched and ennobled. So different were they from their old selves that the only way in which they could describe the change was to say that they were "born again." This new life which they saw in him, and some of the quality of which they gained themselves, they never thought of as a mere human achievement, but as something which they had received. The coming of Jesus "was not merely the gathering together in one personality of possibilities that had lain dormant in the history of his race, but "a direct enterprise of God" for the enlightenment and salvation of the world."—John Baillie. It gave rise to the sentiment in the hearts of Christians everywhere "not of pride and self-congratulation at something our race has produced, but rather gratitude at something it has received. We are moved, all of us, not to applaud, but to kneel; not to clap our hands in admiration, but to fold them in worship. Jesus was God's gift to men. "In this was manifested the love of God toward us," v. 9.

During his life on earth, Jesus taught men to think of himself and God as similar in kind. "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father," John 14: 9. Then, in his death he demonstrated that love was willing to forgive to the uttermost and was so determined to redeem that it persisted even to the ultimate sacrifice. That was the crowning proof of God's love for men.

"God proves his love for us by this," says Paul, "that Christ died for us while we were yet sinners," Rom. 5: 8. Jesus took on his own conscience the sins of countless others and offered himself in sacrifice, v. 10.

Why was this vicarious suffering necessary? Life is full of it, yet we do not understand it. This, however, we know, as Henry Sloane Coffin says, "Men of religious insight in various faiths had discovered this strange principle in life, that the innocent suffer with and for the guilty, and that the voluntary self-offering of the good for the evil reconciles the community with God and works righteousness." Calvary is the overwhelming proof that God is Father-love.

If that is his attitude toward us, then we must have a similar attitude toward his other children—who are our brethren, v. 11.

III. THE PROOF OF THE SPIRIT'S PRESENCE, 1 John 4: 12-16.

Spirit-filled people are the argument that proves God's existence.

What is it to be "spirit-filled"? It is to have a thorough-going belief in a holy and loving God who is alive and active in our every-day world, and who works out his purposes through us. Once a man discovers that he is a partner with God in an ultimately victorious enterprise, religion ceases to be just keeping from doing bad things. He throbs with an overflowing optimism and joy which we, in this day, call "enthusiasm." The Spirit-filled Christian is the "enthusiastic" Christian. "Enthusiastic" means simply "God in one."

Only as God's love is expressed through human lives does it come to its completion, v. 12. The Word must be made flesh in order to come to its finished work in the salvation of men.

IV. THE ULTIMATE SECURITY, 1 John 4: 17-19.

The experience of God's forgiving love kills within the sinner the desire for the old, bad way of living. He turns with enthusiasm to God's way of living. Instead of being against God and therefore afraid of judgment, he is now with God, and therefore looks to the future with glad expectation. Perfect love has cast out fear by swallowing up the cause of it.

Christmas Eve

The swinging bells have settled now
to silence,
And from the byre there comes the muffled sound
Of restless beasts that, weary, shift
their balance,
Knee-deep in rustling straw on trodden ground.

Riding above the hill's dark height,
the moon
Touches the earth with her white
wizardry,
And all the Milky Way is tinsel-strewn
With stars like candles on a Christmas tree.

Surely on such a night, when skies
were clear,
The clarion trumpet called: Be not afraid!
And shepherds, crouching to the ground in fear,
Heard that their Lord was in a manger laid.

And hurrying from the fields and down
the street,
A village street as rough and steep as this,
Came, with a star to guide their stumbling feet,
To where His Mother worshipped with a kiss.

The village sleeps to-night; no angels sing,
No wise men, bearing gifts, come from afar.
But, bright upon our darkness, heralding,
The eternal Incarnation, burns a star.

For not in time alone the mystery
Of heavenly blossom on an earthly stem,
But every cottage shall a manger be,
And every English village Bethlehem.

Santa Claus Calling!

Hallo! Hallo! all children dear
I'm Santa Claus; hark! can you hear?
I've not yet started from the Pole
To give each child my yearly dole,
And so my voice has far to go
O'er seas and lands of ice and snow;
Besides, I'm getting pretty old,
And, what with age and a nasty cold,
My voice has not that robust tone
Best suited for the microphone.
Yet, if you've paid your wireless dues
I'll try to state my candid views,
Of Christmas North Pole Vocal News!
Well, firstly, I must tell you that,
I know you all—Joan, Jane, and Pat,
Tom, Bob, Matilda, Betty, Dick,
Maria, Bertie, Mary, Mick—
And, secondly, your faults as well
Upon my fingers I can tell;
And so, for one short week at least,
No boy must be a little beast,
And pinch his sister's lollipops
And fail to share his acid-drops,
Or tell a cramme: to paps,
Or say "I shan't" 'to dear mamma,
Or splash through puddles when it rains,
And make his clothes one mass of stains,
Or be a greedy little pig,
Or thump a schoolmate not so big,
Or stick a pin into the chair
Of Auntie Jane when she's not there,
Or fail to love his dog and cat,
And wipe his shoes upon the mat—
For if he does these things I'll not Come down his silly chimney-pot!
And you, dear girls, take care you're good,
And do the things you ought and should,
And help your mothers all you can
To scrub the floor and frying-pan,
And stir the pudding good and hard,
And don't forget the spice and lard,
And see that you don't soil your clothes,
Or start too soon to dust your nose,
And don't tell tales or be a sneak,
Or I'll not call on you next week!
But, there! I'm only warning you
What to avoid and what to do,
But, if you rise to concert-pitch,
On Christmas Day there'll be no
hitch,
For you can be quite sure that I
Will pass no decent kiddie by.
Now, off you go at once upstairs,
And don't forget to say your prayers,
And, when they're said, switch off the light
And sleep like top! Good night! Good night!
—A. B. Cooper in "Tit-Bits", London.

Christmas Fruits

When you buy your Christmas supplies of currants, raisins, figs, Brazils, or dates, do you ever wonder where they come from

Dates, from Arabia and Persia, grow on the date-palm. The name is derived from the Greek word "dactylos," meaning finger. Dates, before being pressed, look exactly like human fingers, and the resemblance still remains in those you buy.

"Brazils" are from Brazil. They are the produce of a tree called the "juvia." They grow in a hard shell about the size and shape of a child's head, and each shell contains about fifty nuts.

Currants are a variety of small grapes, dried. The name is our corruption of "Corinth"—where they grow most abundantly.—Tit-Bits (London).

Christmas Briefs

There are two Christmas Islands one in the Pacific and one in the Indian Ocean.

Christmas cards were first seen about one hundred years ago.

Instead of stockings, Belgian children put out their shoes for Santa Claus to fill.

The French Santa Claus is dressed like a Harlequin in the old pantomime.

Santa Claus is another name for Saint Nicholas, the patron saint of children. His day is December 6th. His association with Christmas began when Christmas present-giving came into fashion.

THOUGHTS FROM KINGSLEY

Old decays but foster new creations.
Those who can suffer, can dare.
Pain is no evil unless it conquers us.
God doth not own unwilling service.
Lift is too short for mean anxieties.
Have thy tools ready, God will find thee work.

If You Are Good

Santa Claus will come to-night
If you're good
And do what you know is right,
As you should.
Down the chimney he will creep,
Bring for you a woolly sheep,
And a doll that goes to sleep,
If you're good.

Santa Claus will drive his sleigh,
Through the wood,
But he'll come around this way
If you're good,
With a wind-up bird that sings
And a puzzle made of rings,
He will bring you many things
If you're good.

Chinese Lanterns

Chinese lanterns are very effective for illumination purposes, but they are liable to catch fire, especially if used where any current of air can sway them.

For safety's sake, a handful of sand or earth should be placed in them, around the little tin candle-socket at the bottom.

This not only keeps the lantern steady, but, in case of fire, causes the bottom to separate from the paper, and so make less blaze in the air.

Should the lantern be upset by a sudden blow, the sand will often put out the flame before any harm is done.

The first carols were religious but gradually became debased into drinking songs. The chorus of one of the most popular ran, "Hail, good wassail, hail to thee, honored ever shalt thou be."

"When all wise men have failed why not try an honest fool?"—Hendrik Van Loon.

Christmas Color Schemes

It is never too early to begin devising plans for the Yuletide decorations of our homes. Color and comfort are the first essentials for success. Holly and mistletoe, of course, are pre-eminent in the scheme.

One thing should be kept in our minds. Place these evergreens so that they will be well out of the way of naked lights. Such procedure mitigates any dangers of fire.

Hollyred is a fine provoker of excitement. Mistletoegreen is restful and adds to our stores of energy. Make sure of buying both holly and mistletoe during the early days of December. Never leave the buying later, as they certainly lose freshness.

Tinsel-twine adds a distinctive charm if it is lightly hung around holly.

Lamps are also suited to similar treatment, which results in the production of a lovely seasonable glitter.

Speaking of glitter, frosted messages on mirrors are extraordinarily effective. Whitening mixed with salts provides a reliable paint with which to work the oracle.

Candles are more decorative than lamps, although they cannot be said to produce the same excellence of illumination. But both lamps and candles have their different tasks to perform.

Christmas

Christmas bells are ringing everywhere to-night,
And the snow is falling, pure flakes of white.
Hang your stocking up, dear,
Christmas time is here,
Then drift away to sleep
Before St. Nicholas doth appear.

UNITED CHURCH NOTES

On Friday night last, the Prince of Wales Theatre, was filled to capacity, when the Sunday School of the United Church held its annual Christmas entertainment. The concert was of an exceptionally high standard, showing the result of earnest practice and preparation by the scholars and faithful leadership by the teachers and others who assisted in the training.

Under the chairmanship of the pastor, Rev. Geo. H. Purchase, the program opened effectively with a massed chorus by the school, under the direction of Mrs. Chas. Falconer, assisted by Mrs. Harry Burton. Miss Margaret Falconer, the Sunday School pianist, accompanied the chorus, as well as playing for most of the other numbers during the program.

The first part of the program, following the chorus, was given over to the scholars of the Primary Department. The little folk performed most splendidly, each number having a charm of its own. Much of the credit for the success of the Primary Department endeavours is due to the skilled guidance of Mrs. E. E. King, Mrs. Spears (associate Supt. of the Primary), and all the parents who assisted these ladies. Recitations were given by Russell Wilson, Betty Spears, Doris Amis, Brenda Reddick, Audrey McMillan, Wilma Hamilton, Billy Rice, Stanley Steen, Margaret Amis, Margaret Temple, Eleanor Steen, Marian Steen, Bobby Rice and Vera Steen. Delightful songs were given by Barbara King, and by Bobby and Donald McArthur. There was a fine drill by the Primary boys, and one by the Primary girls in dainty costume.

The large audience was sorry to see the end of the Primary Department presentation, but the members of the Junior and Intermediate School followed with various numbers, offering pleasing entertainment and giving evidence of rare talent. Excellent dialogues were presented by Miss Mary Temple's class (Christmas Miles Stones) and by Miss Jean Temple's class (Grandmother's party); both of which were very well received. In song and by action, Miss Maxwell's class of girls very ably portrayed the visit of the Magi to the Christ Child. Mrs. McArthur's class of boys put on a most humorous, yet well-executed play, "Better than a Doctor", as well as a clever cow-boy drill. The Junior class of boys under Howard Purchase gave a wand drill with musical accompaniment.

These various numbers were interspersed with musical offerings by some of the scholars. There was a musical trio of piano, violin and Cathedral bells most acceptably rendered by Miss Margaret Falconer, Mr. C. Robertson and Jim Steen. Graydon Clipperton, in his usual pleasing style, sang two rousing selections, accompanied by his mother. Miss Mary and Jim Steen also gave a beautiful piano-violin duet.

As a fitting conclusion to a Christmas concert, Mrs. Evans' class of girls presented with symmetry of movement, the tableau "Rock of Ages"; the solo accompaniment being taken by Mrs. Harry Burton, one of the soprano soloists of the church choir.

At various intervals during the program, the chairman read telegrams from Santa Claus, which kept the expectant children in touch with his trip to Streetsville. Soon after the conclusion of the programme, Saint Nicholas arrived in his scarlet garb, and ever-jolly spirit. After a short chat with the kiddies he gave a bag of candy (donated by the Adult Bible Class) to all the Junior members of the school. The final curtain rang down upon a most enjoyable evening with the singing of "God Save the King."

One cannot speak too highly of the efforts put forth by the superintendents, the officers, the teachers, the scholars of the school, and those other members of the church, who assisted in the training, to make the concert a success in every way or forget the manifested interest shown by those present.

ST. JOHN'S BIDS GOOD-BYE TO REV. GEORGE F. BANKS

Rev. George F. Banks said farewell to the people of St. John's Anglican Church, West Toronto, at a large gathering in the church hall Monday evening. To-day he becomes rector of the Parish of Erindale and Dixie on the Dundas Highway, and will hold his first services there on Sunday next. At the gathering in the church hall last evening he was presented with a purse and cordially thanked for his services. Mrs. Banks was associated with her husband in the gathering. Rev. R. MacNamara, rector, congratulated Rev. Mr. Banks on his promotion, but expressed regret that St. John's would lose the services of an able assistant. A number of musical numbers were arranged by the organist and choirmaster, Percy MacDonald.

COOKSVILLE

Miss Ethel Johnston held a very successful miscellaneous shower, at her home, on Wednesday evening, for Miss Verna Nurse, in honor of her approaching marriage.

Following are the newly-elected officers of the Women's Association of Cooksville United Church: President, Mrs. C. S. Jones; Vice- president, Mrs. Jessie Patchett; Secretary, Mrs. Mary McKay; Treasurer, Mrs. Chas. Belford; Pianist, Mrs. John Price; Convener of refreshment committee, Mrs. Chas. Harris; convener of flower committee, Mrs. James Smith; Convener of visiting committee, Mrs. A. Walterhouse.

RHEUMATIC FEVER

Rheumatic fever is an acute infection caused by some germ which is as yet unknown. It frequently attacks young adults, and is common among children.

The onset of the disease is, as a rule, sudden, but it may be preceded by pains in the joints, and by sore throat and general indisposition. In addition to fever, all the symptoms that usually accompany fever are present, such as loss of appetite, thirst, etc. There are, as a rule, profuse sweats.

As the fever develops, one or more of the joints become exceedingly painful, swollen and hot. As one or more joints recover, others are attacked. The disease is seldom limited to one joint; usually several are affected at the same time. In severe cases, rheumatic fever is one of the most painful of diseases.

The seriousness of rheumatic fever is that the heart is frequently involved. Permanent damage to the heart is, of course, serious, and the treatment of the case is mainly directed towards the prevention of such damage, or, at least, towards minimizing it as far as is possible.

There is no difficulty in recognizing the typical case with severe pain in the joints. Unfortunately, however, in the case of children, there may be little or no pain in the joints, and such cases may not be placed under medical care, with the result that the child is not given the complete rest in bed which is essential to the safeguarding of the heart.

In general, rheumatic fever lasts but for two or three weeks, but complications may require prolonged treatment. One attack does not give protection or immunity against further ones; indeed, one attack seems to predispose to others, although this may simply be due to the continued presence of the germ which was responsible for the first attack.

Rheumatic fever is not to be confused with what is commonly called rheumatism. Rheumatic fever is an acute condition, while the other is a chronic condition. Rheumatic fever is essentially a disease of the young; rheumatism, of the older age groups.

There is no sure preventive measure for rheumatic fever. The association of the disease with infected tonsils justifies the removal of the tonsils, and the clearing up of any other focus of infections, such as may be in the teeth for instance. The individual who has had an attack should pay attention to his general health, and avoid exposure to cold and dampness, which are generally considered to predispose to further attacks.

Every case should be under medical care. Convalescence should never be hurried. The possibility of rheumatic fever in children is always to be considered when fever is present, even if there are no joint pains.

Questions concerning Health, addressed to the Canadian Medical Association, 184 College Street, Toronto, will be answered personally by letter.

MARRIAGES

McCaugherty—Nurse

The marriage of Verna Ann, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Alex Nurse, Millbank, Ont., to William H. McCaugherty, Streetsville, Ont., was quietly solemnized at the United Church Parsonage, Cooksville, by Rev. C. Sinclair Jones. The bride, who was unattended, wore a dress of brown lace, with hat, shoes and gloves to match. Her coat was muskrat fur. After the ceremony the couple left by motor for points west. On their return they will reside near Streetsville, Ont.

S.H.S. NOTES

The High School Annual Commencement was held at the Oddfellow's Hall, on Friday, December 16th. There was a good turnout and the pupils and spectators were well satisfied with the performance.

The programme began with a successful rendering of O Canada, by the whole school, followed by "Smile". Rev. Mr. Perry presented the sport medals to those who stood highest in the Annual Field Sports. Rev. Mr. Purchase then presented prizes to those who stood highest in their classes for the fall term. These were I, Eugene Gerhart; II, Ross Hollingshead; III, John McGill; IV, Melville Steggall. Eugene Gernart also received a silver medal for standing highest in the Entrance examinations.

Rev. Mr. McCree presented school crests to those who played on the championship softball team, also to those who headed their classes for the fall term and to Edith Rogerson and Mildred Quennell for points won at the Inter-scholastic Sport Meet at Cooksville.

Lieut. Jack Drennan presented medals and diplomas, on behalf of the Royal Life Saving Society to the following: Proficiency Certificate, Jack McClintock and Alex. Dick; Bronze Medallion, Winfred Turney and Roy Hollingshead; Silver Medal, Unitt Bailey, and Instructor's Certificate, George Dowling. George made a short speech stressing the importance of the work covered by the boys.

Mr. Couse presented graduation diplomas to Jean Hammond, Dorothy Atkinson, John Ross and John Hollingrave. The pupils had a parody for each graduate. The presentations were interspersed with yells led by Roy Hollingshead

Edith Rogerson and Mildred Quennell contributed a snappy piano duet. John Ross delivered the Valedictory Address, summing up the years in which he and his fellow graduates attended S.H.S. Hilda Haddon favoured the audience with a solo, which she rendered in her usual brilliant manner.

The girls of Lower School staged a wand drill which was enjoyed by all. Form I portrayed a scene from Dicken's "Christmas Carols". Erna and Elizabeth Bailey played a lovely piano duet.

Eugene Gerhart and Elmer Workman each gave a recitation.

Perhaps the most interesting part of the programme, was the play "Ici on parle Francais' 'presented by the pupils of Middle School. Those taking part were: John McGill, Ian Johnson, Roy Hollingshead, Edith Rogerson, Iola Hope, Hilda Haddon, Bernice Temple. Each did his (her) best to make the affair a success, whether we succeeded or not is not for us to say.

A Lot of Bad News

Chicken Pox in Christmas holidays! What could be worse? We are very sorry to state that Miss Cliff is leaving us at the end of the present term. Miss Hoople has been engaged to take her place.

Christmas holidays began December 22nd. (The bad news about this is that we return January 4th.)

Still no ice in sight on rink or river.

Good News—Santa Claus will come to-night (maybe). Have you your sox darned?

Toronto Township Council cut their own pay ten per cent. for the year 1931.

W. J. Woods has been elected Worshipful Master of Port Credit Loyal Orange Lodge.

Charles Medcalf, section foreman, was killed by a train while riding his velocipede on the C. N. R. tracks, east of Port Credit.

D. O. Bull, an authority on Jersey cattle has been invited to go to England in 1932 to judge at some of the big cattle shows.

Charles Stevenson, a young Port Credit man, who went north with the unemployment gang, was accidentally killed while at work.

Miss Dorothy Atkinson is home from Listowell for the Christmas holidays. Her aunt, Miss Pearl Goddard, came down with her.

The funeral of the late Margaret Trimble, wife of Edgar Alport, who died in Toronto, took place to Churchville Cemetery on Monday.

Miss Clara Charlton, R.N., Plainfield, N.J., is spending the Xmas holidays with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. R. G. Charlton Streetsville.

The tax arrears in Toronto Township as at Dec. 15th, stood at $164,027, the largest in its history. This looks as though the depression is being felt in this Township.

Streetsville gets another knock by way of increased expenses, in Judge Justin's report on Peel's equalization —a raise of $4,300. The jump brings our assessment up to $240,000.

The new Harmony Orchestra, of Brampton, will play for the Firemen's Ball at Port Credit, on February 5th; also for the Orangemen's dance at Brampton on New Year's Eve.

The nominations for members of the village Council, Public Utility Commission and Public School Board will take place next Monday night at the town hall, at seven-thirty. The Hydro question will be the big subject to be discussed. The question has been pretty well ventilated on the street and in the business places during the last few days, and there is a great diversity of opinion. There seems to be lots of opposition, as the ratepayers are afraid their taxes will be raised, and it will be up to the council to show them that they won't be. We are not offering any opinions on it, but hope to learn more about it.

PORT CREDIT

Two hundred and fifty joyous youngsters were the guests of the Port Credit branch of the Canadian Legion in the Clarke Memorial Hall Saturday night, on the occasion of the Legion's annual Christmas tree entertainment. All the children under 11 received presents from Santa Claus 158 of them, and the older ones enjoyed themselves thoroughly, helping to make the evening a complete success. Lou Magness and the members of the Legion executive were in charge.

NOTICE

Owing to new regulations adopted by the Post Office Department this year, the public are advised that the Post Office will not be open at all on either Christmas Day or New Years' Day. There will be no rural delivery.

It constitutes a most interesting game for every member of the Family and added to this is a generous list of cash awards. Our readers may receive copies of the Lion and full details by addressing the Family Herald and Weekly Star, Montreal.

In vast Heaven, high above us,
Hosts of Glorious Angels sing,
Of the coming of our Saviour,
To this world to dwell therein!

Everywhere, is great rejoicing,
For the coming of our King,
Gives to us, our Soul's Salvation,
Lifts us far, from mortal sin!

Let us kneel in adoration,
Join in songs of praise above,
With—the Cherubim, acclaiming,
All this wonderous Gift of Love.

HYDRO VS. OAKVILLE

By W. G. MacKendrick

The Ontario Hydro Commission in its inception was formed to give efficient service at cost to Ontario users of power and thus to eliminate the profits charged by the power barons.

Some years ago they purchased the Cataract Company and thus eliminated the only competitor they had in this area.

The Hydro now, to suit their own ideas, want to change the efficient 60-cycle power to the wavering 25-cycle, and they further propose to make the consumers double the cost of their motors, not at the expense of Hydro who desire the change, but at the expense of the consumers who do not want it.

We pay the Hydro Commissioners good salaries to give us good service, and I submit that it is neither fair, just, nor honest on the part of the commissioners to seek to make consumers of this area pay twice for motors because the Hydro wants to change to what most consumers think is an inferior light.

The power barons in their palmiest days in Toronto, when desiring customers to change, paid for rewinding their motors. Should their successors, the Hydro, not treat us as fairly as the Toronto Electric Light Company did their customers?

The Hydro Commissioners are seeking to put across a proposition that many term "gouging its customers," not because the customers want it, but solely because Hydro want it. I submit that what Hydro wants it should pay for. Oakville district always had a poor service and when the Hydro took it over we naturally expected a more efficient service, which, however, we did not get. With twenty breakdowns this year, Hydro commissioners seek to excuse this poor service by declaring it is no worse than it was under the profit system. I submit that such a weak paltering excuse is unworthy the high ideals of its founder, Sir Adam Beck.

City people can hardly realize what it means in the country, in homes equipped with electricity, when the power goes off. We cannot cook our meals nor see to read; the refrigerator stops working, the water stops running in taps and closets, you cannot use your washing or ironing machines, the radio is off, and everything is at a standstill; while you sit around with a few candles sputtering in their sockets ruminating on what Sir Adam would have thought of such efficiency from Hydro. Up at the barn the cattle cannot have water because the water pump motor has no juice, they cannot be milked because the milking machine motor cannot run, and 'twould take one man all night to milk the herd by the light of a candle.

In the nine years we have been on the farm we have accumulated fourteen electric 60-cycle motors in our two houses and the barn, and in these hard times along comes Hydro with the suggestion that we should spend from $500 to $700 to have these fourteen motors rewound, to use not what we want but what they want. I see many reasons why we should not pay $700 for a whim of those whom we hired to be our servants but who are seeking to become our masters.

As one of many thousand users of electric juice in this area, all equipped with 60-cycle power, I submit that it is an injustice to seek to force a change at this time on the many who cannot afford it. Let the Hydro give a good service with the power we have; that's their job, and when Canada is again prosperous, if the Hydro can show a change to be in the interest of the area, let them do so. If they cannot show that what they want is for the benefit of this area, let them not forget their position as servants of the people. "He that is greatest among you shall be your servant," is a sound motto for even Hydro commissioners to paste in their hats, because it comes from a very high source.—Oakville Star, Dec. 18.

LET US SMILE

Passing through a military hospital during the world war a visitor saw a horribly wounded soldier from one of the Irish regiments.

"When are you going to send that man home?" he inquired.

"He ain't going home; he's going back to the front," an orderly informed him.

"Back to the front!" exclaimed the visitor, "but he is in an awful shape."

"Yes," replied the orderly, "and he thinks he knows who done it."

Spontaneous Combustion

An insurance man, discussing barn fires, says they are sometimes caused by the friction developed when a mortgage and an insurance policy rub together.

GREETINGS

From ex-President of Streetsville Overseas Veterans Club (Branch No. 139 of Can. Legion B.E.S.L.)

TO COMRADES: First, to those who live in these dear haunts through which the Credit wends;
TO COMRADES ALL—In Canada, or in the loved Old Land, or 'neath the Southern Cross (the circle never ends);
TO COMRADES, TOO, IN CIVIL LIFE—Who bore a burden, as father, mother, wife, and, unmurmuring, did their share;
As came the need and call to do, in many a way, although not khaki theirs to wear;
This greeting speed:—May CHRISTMAS bring to you and yours content and happiness and joy unstinted,
And through the year now near, may life and soul be deepened by the message that first Christmas morn imprinted.
A moment more—in SILENCE — a thought—a prayer—ere these our greetings cease;
THOSE WHO DID NOT COME BACK—God grant to them HIS everlasting peace.

H. Tier; 1st vice, J. Clarke; 2nd vice pres., J. H. Beamish, Secretary-treasurer, J. H. Portch. Reports indicated an unusually successful year, the membership being 147. Walker & Sons Silver Trophy, which was won for 1929 and 1930 by Long Branch Horticultural Society.

Last Friday evening the ninth annual Sunday School entertainment and congregational supper of the Islington Presbyterian Church was held. A goodly number of the parents enjoyed the supper with the scholars, after which an excellent program of songs, plays and recitations was rendered, a pleasing Christmas strain being in evidence. The following were awarded prizes for attendance and repetition of Golden Texts: Gwen Bates, Gordon Pielow, Merle Cassidy, Aldon Cassidy, Sidney Waters, Bill Waters, Eileen Greenslade, Doris Greenslade, Evelyn Pielow, Val Jeans, Billy Jack, Helen Jack, Bessie Currie, Evelyn Michie. Assist. Supt. W. A. Barber, B.A., presented these prizes and Supt. J. H. Beamish acted as chairman.

A very merry Christmas to you Editor, all readers of the Review!

WOMEN'S INSTITUTE

The December meeting of the Streetsville Women's Institute was held at the home of Mrs. Henry Cook, on Thursday afternoon, Dec. 17th. Twenty-two ladies being present. The president, Mrs. Caslor, was in the Chair. After the singing of the Ode and repeating the Lord's Prayer, the business part of the meeting was dealt with. Miss Mabel Graydon sang a very delightful number. The Roll Call was answered in the way of Christmas Gifts, to be given to the unfortunate children of Streetsville at Christmas time. A wonderful lot of toys and candy were received. Our Home Demonstrator, Miss Pearl Church, gave us a very interesting and instructive talk. The ladies were very pleased to have our own home town girl with us, and all join in wishing her every success. After singing several Christmas carols, lunch was served by the committee in charge, and the meeting closed.

The January meeting will be held at the home of Mrs. Dr.) Smith.

WITH THE LONE SCOUTS

"Lone E" hopes that all the Lone Scouts of Ontario will have a very Happy and Prosperous New Year!

What will be YOUR New Year Resolution for 1932? If you are already a Scout, he hopes that you will resolve to make your Scout Programme full of activity and advancement, and if you are NOT a member of the Boy Scouts Association, he hopes that you will resolve to join the great World-Wide Brotherhood of Scouts without delay.

In any case, Good Scouting to you all!

PATROL NEWS.

We are glad to hear from Lone Scout Dalton Woodward of Cannington to the effect that the Lonies in that place have organized themselves into the "Owl" Patrol. If they use the wisdom popularly attributed to that well-known bird, we know that the "Owl" Patrol will be a success. We wish them lots of fun and good luck.

The "Hounds" at Milford still continue to do good work, and they keep "On the trail" through thick and thin. We notice that they turned out in full force to a Remembrance Day Parade recently.

The Patrol at Lucan will soon be a full-fledged Troop, we think. They have already recruited themselves an Assistant Scoutmaster, who has started in to acquaint himself with the Tenderfoot and Second Class Tests. Good work, Lucan Lonies!

SCOUTS BECOME DOCTORS.

Records at Dominion Headquarters, Ottawa, show that 50,880 Canadian Boy Scouts have taken First Aid Training, and 15,631 have qualified for the Advanced First Aid "Ambulance Man" badge.

For quite a number of Scouts this training has proven the first step to a University Degree in Medicine.

The diversified training which the Boy Scout Programme gives to a boy frequently enables him to decide on the career for which he is most fitted.

BOY SCOUT COWBOY.

When unable to capture a horse that had been on range all summer, an Ontario farmer applied to the Ottawa District Boy Scout Headquarters for a Scout roping expert. The boy was taken out to the farm and promptly succeeded in lassoing the horse. This farmer had seen an exhibition of Scout Lariat work at the Ottawa Fair.

FIRST AID FOR DOGS.

Whilst a Lonie's First Aid training is not primarily intended for use in animals it works just as well.

When a Winnipeg Scout's collie was run over by a truck and had a leg broken, his young owner improvised splints, used a handkerchief and necktie for bandages, and carried the dog to a veterinary, where the leg was placed in a cast. We believe that Doggie is well on the road to recovery.

ANOTHER WORLD JAMBOREE.

Arrangements are being made for some 25,000 Boy Scouts from 45 countries to attend the next World Scout Jamboree in Hungary in 1933. The Jamboree will be held at Godollo, the former estate of the late Emporer Francis Joseph I., which has been placed at the disposal of the Scouts by Admiral Horthy, the Regent of Hungary.

We wonder if any Ontario Lone Scouts will be there?

The Camp equipment of a certain Alberta Scout Troop this summer included a cow. She went along to solve the "Safe Milk" problem. We wonder how much competition there was to be the first up in the morning to milk her?

SCOUT STATUES.

Two Boy Scout Statues appear over a corner window of the new Government "Confederation Block" at Ottawa. They commemorate public service rendered by Scouts, including the location of decoration of the graves of the Fathers of Confederation for the Diamond Jubilee of 1927.

Returns which are coming in to Lone Scout Headquarters at Toronto show that these columns are being read with interest by many boys throughout this Province. Application for membership in the Lone Scouts average one per day.

If you are not already a Scout and would like to be one, why not write at once to the Lone Scout Department, Boy Scouts Association, 330 Bay Street, Toronto. They will be glad to send you particulars. Lone Scouting is intended for boys in small towns and villages and on rural routes, where there is no regular Scout Troop.

October Production Of Gold $4,927,663

Ontario Leads As Largest Producer — Quebec Lower

Production of gold in Canada during October amounted to 238,397 ounces, which is the equivalent of $4,927,663. This is a slight decline from the September total of 240,222 ounces, or $4,965,385. It is, however, an increase of 27.6 per cent. over the output of October, 1930.

During October, Ontario mines produced 181,871 ounces, made up of 95,580 ounces from Kirkland Lake; 80,568 ounces from the Porcupine area and 5,723 ounces from other sources. The return (less exchange) to Ontario operators for gold produced was $3,759,607 in October.

Quebec operations yielded 25,783 ounces as against 26,692 ounces in September; British Columbia production totalled 14,789 ounces; Manitoba, 9,476 ounces, while the Yukon and Nova Scotia produced the remainder.

The Canadian output during the first 10 months of the current year was recorded at 2,201,286 ounces, or 30.7 per cent. above the total for the corresponding period of 1930.

Auriferous quartz mines account for approximately 85 per cent. of Canada's gold production. Alluvial gold mines, recoveries from blister copper and basic bullion produced from Canadian ores by Canadian smelters, and estimated recoveries from ores, matte, slags and concentrates exported to foreign smelters, make up the remainder of the total.

British Broadcasting Company To Curtail Programs

London.—The British Broadcasting Corporation is cutting out radio talks on books, plays and films. After the New Year no reviews or criticisms will be broadcast and individual books, plays or films will be referred to only incidentally in talks on literature and the drama.

The decision was reached following complaints by publishers, theatre and cinema producers that "one man" criticism of productions depending on their success upon public support may not be justified when broadcast to about 5,000,000 listeners.

"Tendencies in the arts rather than personalities in current production," will be broadcast in future.

To Search Arctic For Missing Scientists

Royal Canadian Mounted Police and Department of the Interior Co-Operate in Seeking for Krueger Party Among Far Northern Islands

As soon as travelling conditions in Canada's far northern islands permit the Royal Canadian Mounted Police will resume the search for Dr. H. K. E. Krueger, the German scientist, and his Danish assistant, Mr. R. A. Bjare, who have been missing since 1930 somewhere northwest of Ellesmere Island in the Canadian Arctic sector. Through the co-operation of the Department of the Interior and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, arrangements for the continuation of the search have been completed and with improved travelling conditions two parties will leave Canada's farthest north post of Bache Peninsula, Ellesmere Island, in an effort to re-trace the steps of the missing scientists.

Last summer, while the S.S. Beothic was on its annual voyage carrying the Department of the Interiors expedition to the posts in the CCanadian archipelago, repeated inquiries were made at the various points visited while R.C.M.P. patrols were also active. Dr. Krueger and his assistant, accompanied by three natives left Bache Peninsula in March, 1930, to carry on scientific investigations in the area north and west of Ellesmere Island. Two of the natives returned to the post on April 11 bearing letters from the leader of the expedition in which he stated that if the party did not return in August, as they originally intended, they would likely do so when travelling conditions improved later in the year. These communications were also accompanied by a sketch map of the route the party intended to follow. This may will be the basis for the proposed extensive search.

Craig Harbour, Ellesmere Island, and Cape Sparbo and Dundas Harbour, Devon Island, were points at which news of the Krueger party was expected, but these were visited by the 1931 expedition on board the Beothic without results. At Aobertson Bay, North Greenland, the Department of the Interior's expedition made arrangements for a number of Eskimos to cross Smith Sound to Bache Peninsula early in the year to assist the R.C.M.P. detachment in the proposed patrols.

Corporal Stalworthy is in charge of the R.C.M.P. detachment at Bache Peninsula, the other members of which are Constables Hamilton and Munro. As at present arranged two search parties will leave Bache Peninsula in March next year. Corporal Stalworthy and two natives and their dog teams will compose one party, while Constable Hamilton will also lend a similarly equipped expedition. One party will travel to the north around Axel Heiberg Island and the other will work to the south. Dr. Krueger was known to hold the theory that the mythical Croker's land was somewhere north of Axel Heiberg in the Canadian sector. Amund Ringnes, Ellef Ringnes, King Christian, Cornwall and possibly Borden Islands will also be visited by the police in the hope of finding traces of the missing scientists. Although wireless messages are broadcast from the south to the police officers in the Far North there is no means at the post of replying, so that no word of the success of the search is expected until the annual ship goes north next summer.

Life in Northern Alaska Happy

Beyond the Arctic Circle in the village of Wiseman, Alaska, with a population of only 127, is the farthest-north settlement in that region. The people live simply and have attained a higher state of happiness than is to be found in the more thickly populated sections of the United States, according to Robert Marshall, son of the late Louis Marshall. Robert Marshall recently returned from a fifteen months' trip in Alaska, where he was engaged in investigations of forest conditions and in sociological studies.

Mr. Marshall, in speaking before the student body of the New York State College of Forestry at Syracuse, N.Y., said that for years the white trail of the dog team and sled has been the only link with Wiseman and the outside world, but now an airplane landing near the village has been established.

According to the young explorer the country is inhabited by men who were lured by visions of gold. Some found their treasure-trove, spent it and remained; others failed in the quest, but unable to shake off the spell of the Yukon, have remained, preferring Alaska to a home in the States. Mr. Marshall states that the people of Wiseman are happy, healthy and free from class distinction and devoid of race prejudice. Eskimos and whites intermingle as equals. Many of the native people are very intelligent and all are trustworthy. The business is principally gold mining, trapping, salmon fishing. Crime is seldom encountered and the voters are more interested in their social affairs, particularly in the candidates ETAOINUNU, is, bmm dancing, which always follows an election, than in the candidates running for office. Every holiday is an occasion for an all-night dance in which the oldest and the youngest participate.

Golden Era For World Forecasted By Noted Economist

If World Governments Act Now—Advises International Parley—Otherwise Chaos Will Follow

London.—In a copyrighted exclusive interview with the Associated Press, Sir George Paish, noted British economist, declared on December 19th, if world governments take the proper fork, the greatest era of prosperity in history is just down the road.

On the other hand, he expressed the view that if they continue on their present course, the international economic and credit fabric will go to smash within two months.

Continuing, he outlined to the Associated Press, the following steps, which he believes should be taken to assure the one and avert the other. They were:

1—An international conference to consider rehabilitation measures.

2—Revision of Germany's reparations payments to insure eventual repayment of her commercial debts.

3—Federal and state temporary bank guaranty acts in all nations.

Credit Breakdown Feared

"I haven't any doubt but that we are going into the greatest period of prosperity the world has ever seen," he said, "if necessary measures are taken. I'm sure that there are enough reasonable people in the world to see that these measures are taken, and that by 1933 we will see a very different situation.

U.S. Should Call Conference

Any great power could call such a conference, possibly as an outgrowth of the 1932 disarmament parley, he said, but the United States is in the best position to do so because it is detached from the principal arena and is able to form equitable judgments.

In reference to reparations and war debts he blamed governments, not bankers, for the present morass.

"The banks did not create the impossible reparations payments," he said, "or the situation of reparations and inter-allied debts extremely difficult, or the tariff barriers of all nations which have blocked effectively the currents of commerce.

"Indeed, but for the willingness of the bankers to grant credits there would have been a collapse when the Great War expenditures ended. No one can do the impossible, not even the bankers. It is impossible to continue when the whole world is overborrowed, including the people of the United States."

Turning to the United States, he said credit must be made available to insure the free movement of trade and the Federal Government must guarantee the solvency of state banks.

World Should Stand Behind Banks

"Internal credit corporations in the United States help out," he continued, "but they don't meet the situation. They are to enable institutions to realize on their good assets and for getting money, but they are not for the purpose of making good losses. It is the losses, not the lack of liquidity, that threatens stability.

"I am thinking not of America only, but of the banks of all countries. The governments of the world should stand behind the banks to prevent the machinery from breaking down." He cited the French Government's backing of the Bank of France as an example.

As hopeful signs on the horizon, he said Russia and Asia were awakening and demanding a higher standard of living, for which the material resources of the western world would be enlisted to play a great role.

Publisher Opens Penny Cafeteria

New York, N.Y.—Bernard MacFadden, publisher, announces he intends to establish the first penny restaurant ever operated in New York, as a measure of relief for those in need. The dining institution, he said, will be run as a cafeteria, with each article of food costing one cent and a five-course meal for a nickel.

MacFadden said that the only reason why any charge whatever is being made for the food served in the restaurant is because he does not wish those who are to be served to feel that they are receiving charity. The food to be served will consist of soup, one cent; bread, one cent; coffee, one cent; and various vegetables at one cent per portion.

The new restaurant will be established in the downtown section of Manhattan, and will have a seating capacity of about fifteen hundred persons, he stated.

Cattle on Indian Reserves in the West

Science Seeks to Aid Fog Visibility in Air

New York.—In all forms of transportation, but particularly in aviation, fog is proving to be one of the hardest natural hazards that must be overcome before safety approaches present standards of power and speed. Science is now endeavoring to solve this baffling problem by taking experimentation from out-of-doors into the quiet, darkened laboratory, where the hindering, variable conditions present in natural surroundings are brought under minute and much desired control. Promising results are at hand.

Playing Card Industry Thrives

Berlin. — Other German industries may be hard hit, but the playing card makers are busy. Latest figures place the year's sales at 10,400,000 decks, of which 2,000,000 were sold abroad.

Business is so quiet you can hear the passing of dividends.

Run-Off Conditions in Quebec

The Dominion Water Power and Hydrometric Bureau, Department of the Interior, reports that run-off in Quebec during October was below normal except in the eastern portion of the province. North of the St. Lawrence the run-off was only about 80 per cent. and the precipitation only about 60 per cent. of the October average; in the Eastern Townships the run off was under 70 per cent. and the precipitation about 55 per cent. normal, whilst further east and south of the St. Lawrence the average runoff and precipitation were roughly 50 per cent. above normal. In the northern portion of the province records on the Harricanaw River at Amos indicated approximately average conditions of flow and rainfall.

The Ring-Fence of Empire

London Daily Mail (Ind. Cons.)—The negotiation of a general scheme of Empire preferences is the more important because there is a distinct tendency throughout the world for countries to enclose themselves in systems of tariffs which act as ring-fences. Some of these countries are self-dependent, or nearly so, and could dispense with foreign trade in an emergency. But if the ring-fence system is to be maintained or further extended abroad then for the very existence of Great Britain some sort of fence must be put up round the Empire. Within its territories everything that civilized man requires can be produced.

Canadian Salt Best On Market

Washed, Refined, Iodised, Never Touched by Human Hand

Ottawa.—According to a recent report the salt mines of Canada not only produce the finest and purest salt in the world, but contain sufficient quantities to supply the needs of this country for hundreds of years to come.

Imported salt is declared not as good as Canadian salt, as it is packed under conditions not as scientific as the plants in Canada where no human hands touch the salt from the mines to your table.

In the case of iodized salt, which contains a definite, minute quantity of iodine, the quantity of iodine is approved by the Provincial Board of Health of Ontario, whereas imported salt may have iodine added to it in a haphazard manner.

For their own protection, and for the suport of Canadian employment, used in developing Canadian resources Canadian buyers are urged to buy salt mixed and packed in Canada.

Flowers And Sleep

No adequate reason is known, experts of the American Medical Association state in reply to an inquirer, for the almost universal custom, even in hospitals, of taking vases of cut flowers out of a sick room at night. Probably the habit is a mere superstition, formed long before modern medical science was developed and when some mysterious effluvium was supposed to flow out of all dead things, even out of cut flowers. If is true, the Association's experts admit, that cut flowers may give off a little carbon dioxide gas, either at night or in the daytime, but this gas always is present in the air anyway and can do no harm, even in a small room. If the odor of the flowers or the pollen dust which they may give off are bad for the patient at night, it seems logical to assume that these things would be just as bad for the patient in the daytime. One hospital authority mentions in support of the custom of removing flowers the possible psychological effect on the patient of having apparently fresh flowers brought back in the morning, which rather feeble reasons seems to be the only one that anyone can find. Apparently even the superstitious-hating medical profession stands convicted of clinging to at least one custom which has nothing but superstition behind it.

Interesting Notes on Bird-Banding

Bird banding has afforded much new and valuable scientific information concerning Canada's native wild birds and any person who finds a banded bird is requested to help in the advancement of this work by reporting the details to the Commissioner, National Parks of Canada, Department of the Interior, Ottawa. An interesting fact brought out by a recently reported banding operation is recounted here.

Official band 182287 was placed on a purple finch by Mrs. Frank Hubbard at New Haven, Connecticut, on March 23, 1926. The finch was next found, with a broken wing, by Miss Blanche Spurr at Deep Brook, Nova Scotia, on July 4, 1931. Miss Spurr took the bird home and placed it in a large screened-in-porch, where, with care, the finch recovered its power of flight sufficiently to be released on August 16, 1931. As the finch was still wearing the band when it was liberated, it is possible that it may be again reported.

Says Canada Strong in Day of Trial

Bank of Montreal Heads Review Situation at Bank's Annual Meeting

In the speeches of Sir Charles Gordon, president, and Jackson Dodds, joint general manager, at the annual meeting of the Bank of Montreal, comment was made on the inherent strength being exhibited by Canada in the face of world depression, especially in regard to the banking structure of the country. Sir Charles, while declining to prophesy as to the immediate outlook, said that taking the long view "There is every reason to look forward with confidence to emerging stronger and more prosperous than ever from the conditions that now prevail," and Mr. Dodds remarked, "It would be rash indeed to speak with assurance of the prospects of the coming year, but it is surely permissable to say that when international confidence and co-operation are restored, and commerce in consequence improves, Canada will be among the first to benefit."

Sir Charles Gordon made particular reference to the manner in which the low price levels have affected farming, lumbering, mining, and newsprint manufacture, remarking in regard to the latter that there was reason to believe that a better condition was being ushered in by the profit arising from the premium on New York funds and from consolidation of companies for the purpose of reducing overhead expense and effecting more economical distribution of the product.

While expressing the opinion that Canada's large foreign obligations would tend to prevent an early return of the Canadian dollar to par, he said he had no doubt that it would return to par. As factors already working to that end he remarked that the adverse balance of trade in the 12 months to September 30 had been reduced to $35,000,000 as compared with $100,000,000 for the previous 12 months, and that in the five months to October 31st last there was each month an excess of domestic exports over imports, so that it would seem that the country had reached the point of an adjusted foreign trade.

Jackson Dodds, joint General Manager with W. A. Bog, in presenting the balance sheet reviewed the progress made by the Bank during the fiscal year. Remarking that "we should be thankful that we in Canada are as well off as we are," he said business, nevertheless, was at a low ebb, and a halt must be called to mounting expenditures by federal, provincial and municipal authorities, as these only aggravated the situation. Referring to the fact that the downward movement of prices had reached record levels during the year, he pointed out the impotence of a Central Bank in maintaining a stable price level as demonstrated by United States experience. Concluding, he urged the adoption of a policy by which as many unemployed as possible will be made self-suporting by placing them on the land.

The Hundredth Girl

It Seemed Suspicious—But He Believed in Her Absolutely.

By A. G. Greenwood

"That's it," thought Eddie Scott, eyeing the pretty young girl, as she left his shop clinging to the arm of the fat, florid, middle-aged fellow who had just bought a very expensive engagement ring, "ninety-nine girls out of a hundred will sell themselves for a life of luxury."

He was enlarging on this cynical theme when into the shop stepped a tall, slim girl, whose Robin Hood hat revealed a mass of dark curls.

"Good-afternoon," she said nervously. "I—I was wondering if you would care to buy this?"

Eddie took from her outstretched palm an ear-ring, consisting of a miniature eye, enamelled in natural colors, with a pendant pearl in the shape of a teardrop.

"I found only one," she explained; "and one ear-ring isn't much good, is it? Yesterday I was unlucky. I had my bag snatched. Nearly two pounds gone!"

It was some time before Eddie realised that in the case of ninety-nine such customers out of a hundred he would have asked questions. This girl was the hundredth. Questions didn't occur to him. He merely observed that the pearl was worth a couple of pounds, and then sympathized with her about the bag-snatching.

They chatted for a little, and it was only when at last she said "Good-afternoon" that he remembered to ask her name and address.

"A mere matter of form," he added; but he felt he couldn't let her vanish and be utterly lost in the world.

"Mary Ridley," she said.

Eddie repeated the name as he scribbled at her dictation in his order-book:

"Mary Ridley, No. 6, Fairfield Road. I know it."

Swiftly he preceded her to the door and opened it. A fog had come on.

"It looks pretty thick," he said. won't you wait? Please do. It looks hardly safe—especially with all these bag-snatchers about."

"Well, p'r'haps I'd better—just a few minutes."

So Eddie got a chair for her, and they talked till Eddie, glancing at the clock, ejaculated:

"Four! Would you think it frightful cheek if I asked you to have a cup of tea?"

The fog was friendly. At five o'clock it was thicker than ever. At six he reported that, though artichoke soup may be nicer than the pea variety, it is just as thick. And before it had lifted they had arranged a country tramp for Sunday.

Tramping with Mary across a wind-swept Surrey heath. Eddie found her glorious; seemingly fragile, yet careless of the miles and the hills; obviously dainty, yet heedless of the mile and the rain that fell towards evening.

On that walk he discovered that Mary lived with an elderly invalid cousin, a martinet, and was scarcely ever free except on Sundays, when another relation spent the day with Cousin Victoria.

"Will you meet me next Sunday?" Eddie asked before saying "Good-night."

The universe seemed sinking in the balance because she didn't immediately say "Yes." But she did, finally.

Eddie carried that queer pearl ear-ring in his pocket on that second tramp, and wondered if, one day, he could have a fellow made, and she would accept—well, the three of them. This time she did not keep him in suspence at Earlsfield Station at the end of their tramp.

"Next Sunday at ten?" said he.

"If you like," she answered, eyes shining. "Good-night."

But on Monday, as he glanced as usual at the Agony Column of his daily paper, Eddie read:

"£10 reward. Lost recently in the West End, an ear-ring, consisting of an enamelled eye and a pearl in the shape of a teardrop. All communications to S. D., Donnelly's Hotel, Bloomsbury."

With the ear-ring in the palm of his hand, he read the advertisement again. Unlikely there could be two pairs of ear-rings of such unusual design. At the thought he felt uneasy, and for the first time Mary's initial remark, "I found only one," occurred to mind. Had she picked it up? Didn't she know that findings aren't keepings? What had he better do? See her?

She had told him not to come to the house or write, because of her old cousin. But this was a business matter, and an urgent one. He ought to go. He went. But no Mary Ridley lived at No. 6. So she had given a sham address. No wonder she would not let him see her home! But what was all this leading to? To the conclusion that she wasn't straight Ridiculous! Of course she was—as straight as a die! There was some perfectly sound explanation. He must wait till they met on Sunday.

He waited for her outside Earlsfield Station on Sunday morning—waited till one o'clock—but she did not come.

Had she seen the advertisement and taken alarm? Was she afraid to meet him? Miserably, he decided that it was up to him to communicate with the advertiser at Donnelly's Hotel, Bloomsbury.

He rang up. It was Mrs. Dowson he wanted, said the girl in the office. She would be back on Monday evening.

On a postcard that came by the first post on Monday morning Eddie read:

"So terribly sorry I couldn't keep appointment, but my cousin was suddenly taken ill, and I couldn't possibly leave her. I tried to 'phone you, but could get no reply.—Mary."

That evening Eddie went to Donnelly's Hotel. He was shown up to a private sitting-room, where he found a florid-looking, middle-aged woman, smothered in jewels.

Eddie explained his mission, and showed her the ear-ring. She pounced on it. Hers? Yes. She'd know it among ten thousand. Questions poured from her. He explained.

"You mean,' 'said rhe, 'that this girl picked it up somewhere and sold it to you? That's a crime, you know."

"I'm sure it wasn't," said Eddie. "I'm certain she has a perfectly good explanation.

Mrs. Dowson glowered, then said:

"Give me her name and address."

"I—I'm afraid I can't," Eddie said awkwardly. "She gave them in confidence."

"Oh!" was her comment. "Well, you'll have to give them to the police, you know."

"The police?"

"I shall put the whole affair into their hands. I'm not at all sure that I believe your story. Maybe you picked the ear-ring up yourself and kept it till a reward was advertised—or perhaps the girl's your accomplice."

"That,' said Eddie, "is a lie. She's as straight as——"

The door was burst open and in rushed an excited waiter.

"It ees fown!" he announced, and held out a salver on which lay the duplicate of the ear-ring Mrs. Dowson still held. "Be'ind se divan in se lounge among se fronds of se palm, madame!"

Mrs. Dowson snatched up the ear-ring.

"Tell me," she cried, panting, glaring at Eddie, "all you know about that girl!"

When the waiter had gone, Eddie said:

"Tell me what it all means first. If you mean to harm her——"

"Harm her!" echoed Mrs. Dowson shrilly. "I believe her to be the daughter of the only man I ever loved! You know me. Everybody knows Sophia Bell!"

To Eddie the name sounded vaguely familiar. In the nineties it had been famous. Sophia had been a musical-comedy star.

"I gave poor Andrew one of my ear-rings on the day I sailed for New York," she babbled. "A love-token it was—a pledge. But—I failed him. He was a painter—making nothing. I behaved shamefully. I admit it. I married an American. For years I lived in New York. He died. I came back to England a rich widow But I never found Andrew. All I discovered was that years ago he had married somebody else. I never forgave myself."

She wept. Then, recovering:

"Surely,' she demanded, "the girl gave some clue to her identity?"

"She gave an address which was—was incorrect," admitted Eddie; "and a name, Mary——"

"Ridley?" quavered Mrs. Dowson.

"Yes, Ridley."

The manager of the hotel was sent for. A page brought the "London Directory." In vain they went to three different Fairfield Roads.

"I must find her," said Mrs. Dowson, sobbing. "Driver, is there no other Fairfield Road?"

"Dessay it's Phayrefield Road you want, ma'am," answered the man, and spelt the name. "That's Balham wye."

He was right. Mary herself opened the door, staring at excited Mrs. Dowson and anxious Eddie.

"The "first-floor front" happened to be vacant, and there Mrs. Dowson, clutching Mary's hand, told her story.

"Your father had treasured the ear-ring, Mary?"

Yes; Mary had found it locked away amongst his papers after his death.

"You shall come and live with me, Mary," declared Mrs. Dowson. "You will have your own dress allowance and be your own mistress. I'll buy you a car; you shall have lovely frocks, all a girl could set her heart on; we will go to the Riviera, the Lido—everywhere; you shal have everything."

To Eddie the little room seemed suddenly to have grown very dark and cold. His dreams were over.

"And I shan't forget the debt I owe you, young man!" cried Mrs. Dowson, turning to Eddie. "When first he brought me your ear-ring, Mary, I thought it was my own——"

She went into details, and ended up:

"He wouldn't hear a single word against you, and flatly refused to give me your name and add: ss even when I threatened him with the police."

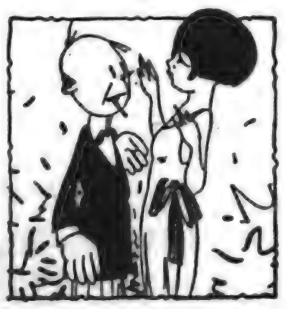
"Thank you," Mary said, smiling, and went to Eddie and held out her hand.

He took it, gripped it, and thought: 'This is good-bye."

"And now, Mary,", declared Mrs. Dowson, "you must get ready at once to go back with me to my hotel."

To Eddie's amazement Mary sorrowfully shook her head. There was her old cousin, so strict, but a darling. It would all be so lovely, but it was impossible—quite impossible.

Eddie breathed freely again, until Mrs. Dowson broke in. The cousin should go to a nursing home, have every attention, every luxury.



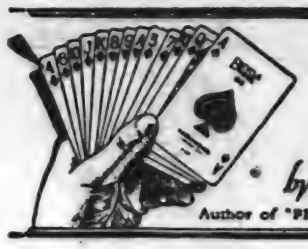
"I'm sorry,' 'admitted Mary presently, with an unsteady smile. "I—I'm afraid I wasn't being quite straightforward. I see I was using Cousin Victoria as—as an excuse. I couldn't accept—for my own sake. I'd never be happy. Since I was sixteen I've worked. I like working. I'm proud of keeping myself and depending on nobody——"

"Mary! My de-ah, you don't realize——"

"Oh, I do! You want to be wonderfully kind. It is kind—breath-takingly kind. Many girls, I expect, would have jumped at your offer. I—can't. Why, rather than sun-bathe on the Lido, I'd —I'd——"

She hesitated, gave Eddie a glance that thrilled him and seemed to say "It's 'yes'," though all that she said aloud was:

"Why, I'd hike in the rain on a Surrey heath any day!"—Answers.



He—"Bird migration is a wonderful thing. The humming birds have started on their long journey over the sea."

She—"I wonder when the geese go."

How to play Bridge AUCTION and CONTRACT

by Wynne Ferguson

Author of "PRACTICAL AUCTION BRIDGE"

ARTICLE No. 2

If there is one thing about Auction and Contract that is certain and undisputed, it is the fact that no perfect system of bidding has been or is ever likely to be invented. Almost any system, if clearly understood by partners and intelligently played, will produce good results. The only difference between systems of bidding in both games lies in the difference in the skill of the players advocating the different systems. The only thing that makes one system preferable to another is the fact that it is more easily understood and applied by the average player. The writer has known of many match games between experts advocating different systems and, as a rule, such matches have been more or less even. And it is very lucky that there is no perfect system of bidding. If there were, the game would soon lose its fascination and charm. No one likes to feel that the other fellow knows as much as he does and, if the bidding were perfect, no one could put anything over.

What really makes Auction and Contract so fascinating, however, is its uncertainty. Every bid, practically, is in the nature of a speculation or a gamble for there is no guarantee that the cards will not be so distributed that your bid, no matter how sound, cannot be made. For example, suppose you bid one heart, holding five hearts headed by the ace, king, queen and an outside ace. No one will say that such a bid is unsound under any system, and yet you arre doubled and lose your contract by three tricks. There were seven hearts in one hand against you. A bad break but no one can say you made a bad bid.

The following example hands apply equally well to Auction or Contract. The dealer bid one spade and second hand, holding the following:

Hearts—Q, J. 9, 8, 6, 4, 3
Clubs—6
Diamonds—K, Q, J. 6
Spades—A

correctly bid two hearts. The dealer's partner, holding the remaining six hearts, doubled and defeated the contract by three tricks. These are bad breaks of course, but show what happens even to the soundest of bids.

Here's the other angle: winning by bad bidding. The dealer holds a strong no-trump hand but only two little spades. Instead of bidding one no trump, he bid two spades and was doubled by second hand. He then bid two no trump and made three odd. Second hand and his partner had a set-up spade suit, but failed to lead it because of the dealer's bluff bid. A fine example of winning by bad bidding.

Stil lanother example. The dealer bid one no trump and second hand, holding the following:

Hearts—10, 7
Clubs—7
Diamonds—A, K, Q, J. 10, 7, 5
Spades—Q, 8, 4

bid two spades on the theory that the dealer's partner, if he held a stopper in the spade suit, would undoubtedly bid two no trump. It happened just as second hand had planned. The dealer's partner bid two no trump, second hand doubled and defeated the contract by two tricks, making seven diamond tricks right off the reel. These examples of winning by bad bidding are given as a warning. Never try stunts of this kind fo rthere's nothing to such bidding. If you win once, you aare encouraged to try again, and you cannot help butt lose out in the long run. Learn some system well and understand it thoroughly. Once you have mastered it, stick to it and you will get results. The system you choose is immaterial, but the application is everything. Let your partner know what he can expect of you and don't disappoint. Be dependable first, last and all the time.

The following problem was submitted by a correspondent, with the statement that he was unable to solve it and asking for assistance:

"Thanks for the lift," said the woman, as she climbed from the plastic surgeon's chair. "I love you," is still the sweetest sentence in any tongue, but it is no longer a life sentence. If the present hat styles result in no falling off in the marriage license rate, that will be final proof that love is blind. A woman you know brags that she always says "just what she thinks" is no great shakes of a thinker; she ought to study up more pleasant thoughts, or stop talking so much. It takes hard work to make easy living. Physicians say one million women are overweight; these, of course, are round figures. A good citizen is one who wants to give back to the world some of the good he has got out of it. Old-time "innocent amusements" are still innocent, but they are no longer amusements. It is always well to remember that an ounce of keeping your mouth shut is worth a pound of explanation.

It was Sunday morning in a church school. "Will you please tell me," said a member to the teacher, 'how far in actual miles Dan is from Beersheba? All my life I have heard the familiar phrase, 'from Dan to Beersheba,' but I have never known the distance."

Before the answer could be given, another member arose and inquired, "Do I understand that Dan and Beersheba are the names of places?"

"Yes."

"That is one on me. I always thought they were husband and wife, like Sodom and Gomorrah."

Somehow, the fact that a man would have made you miserable for life is no consolation for not having married him. Recipes come in books, but cooking, like love, just comes natural. Little men who get into important positions seldom miss an opportunity to determine their size. A milliner usually tries to keep prices under her hat.

The ambitious wife of a millionaire gave a big dinner party. Her husband, who had made his money as the inventor of a patent rat poison, was silent during the dinner. As the ladies left the room, his wife found an opportunity to whisper to him: "Why on earth don't you talk?" "Talk?" he replied. "Why, what's the use of it? Not a single person here knows anything about rats."

The quitting whistle had blown when Murphy shouted, "Has any one seen me vest?" "Sure, Murphy," said Pat, "and ye've got it on!" "Right and I have," replied Murphy, gazing solemnly at his bosom, "and it's a good thing ye seen it, or I'd have gone home without it."

British Periscopes Best in World

Experts of Other Nations Admit Supremacy of British roduct

London.—When the submarines of foreign nations are out at practice, the observers spotting the supposed enemy must peer through British periscopes, says Pearson's. The reason is that British periscopes are miles ahead of any manufactured abroad.

The United States have just placed a big order with a British firm for periscopes, to be fitted into their submarines. France used to buy our periscopes, but is now barred from doing so by a decree prohibiting the purchase of foreign war materials. But, while France makes her own, she works under the supervision of British experts.

Japan's whole submarine flotilla is "periscoped" by Great Britain.

Before the war we were fighting neck and neck with Germany for preeminence in this high-skilled trade, but since then British design has been vastly superior.

The latest advance in periscope manufacture is in the measure of light that can be gathered into the lenses. It is not only necessary nowadays to control torpedo fire, and watch enemy vessels, but also to observe aircraft. And, in all these vital essentials, Britain's periscopes are best.

Knowledge

Knowledge will stoop and lead you to the stars,
And witch you with her mysteries—till gold
Is a forgotten dross, and power and fame
Toys of an hour, and woman's careless love,
Light as the breath that breaks it. He who binds
His soul to knowledge steals the key of heaven.

Castoria

made especially for

CHILDREN

CHILDREN usually hate to take medicine but every child loves the taste of Castoria. And mothers like its action—so gentle, yet so prompt and effective.

Castoria is a never-failing comfort to children and mothers alike because it was formulated expressly for children—to correct their little ills and upsets.

The beauty of it is you can give Castoria to children of all ages with equally sure results. When baby's cry warns of colic, a few drops of Castoria has him soothed; and free from pain, he is asleep again in a jiffy.

In an older child when coated tongue or bad breath tell of constipation, a more liberal dose is usually all that is needed to cleanse and regulate the bowels.

Your doctor will tell you Castoria deserves a place in the family medicine cabinet until your children are grown. He knows it is safe for the tiniest baby; effective for a child in his teens.

Postmaster Staley reports this year's Christmas Mail the heaviest he has ever known, the last two days receipts being exceptionally large and it required extra help to handle all of it.

This is truly a green Christmas the ground in this section being absolurely bare, and no probability of any snow.. There is no skating either and the weather is just like springtime.

JUDGE JUSTIN'S REPORT ON PEEL'S EQUALIZATION

The anxiously awaited report of Judge Justin, fixing the equalized assessment of the County of Peel, was completed yesterday. There are changes in every municipality from the last assessment determined by the county council. Reductions are made in Albion, Caledon, Chinguacousy and Toronto Gore, and increases in the other five municipalities, Brampton, Bolton, Streetsville, Port Credit and Toronto Township. The large increases are in Port Credit, which goes from 750,000 to 1,145,000 and Toronto Township from $5,598,300 to $7,115,000. While changes are general the total reduction is only $80,112. Following are the amounts fixed by the council and those reported by the Judge. The 1930 are the council's figures and the 1931 those of the Judge.

	Council's Figures 1930	Judge's Figures 1931

Toronto Twp.	5,598,300	7,115,000
	$19,937,600	$19,857,488

COMMUNITY CLUB

The regular meeting was held at the home of Miss Irene McCarron on Dec. 9th. It was an Xmas meeting and there was a splendid turnout of members. Several needy families are to be remembered at Xmas time as well as several "shut-ins". It was suggested that Mrs. John Bonham be Santa Claus. The gifts were soon distributed. The hostess served a dainty lunch, assisted by Mrs. Will McCarron.

The next meeting will be held at the home of Mrs. Will Cooke, the first Wednesday in January.

The Club is planning a social evening between Xmas and New Years. Particulars later.

The community club will hold a social evening, Wednesday, Dec. 30th, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. John Bonham.

Members please provide lunch.

The regular meeting of the Club will be held Wednesday, January 6, 1932, at two o'clock at the home of Mrs. Will Cook. This will be the first meeting of the New Year so let us start a good record by every member being present.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S SOCIETY

(Too Late for Last Week)

The Young People's Society of the United Church met Monday evening. This was missionary night. The Topic was the life of Dr. Grenfell, Mr. Howard Purchase took charge of the devotional exercises. Mr. Jas. Steen was in the chair during the business part of the meeting. Miss Margaret Cook then took charge of the meeting. The life of this noted man was ably given by Bert Cook, Edith Rogerson, Edna Stephens and Rev. Mr. Purchase. Mrs. McArthur, who always leads in the discussion, on current events, was ably assisted by Mary Temple, who spoke on the Manchuria question. The musical part of the programme was rendered by the following: solos by Howard Purchase and Graydon Clipperton; duets by Gordon and Alice Steen. After the programme, Miss Cliffe introduced a surprise, which was very interesting and amusing.

TULE MARSH MURDER

STORY OF A MISSING ACTRESS AND THE TAXING OF WITS TO EXPLAIN HER FATE.

BY NANCY BARR MAVITY.

SYNOPSIS.

Don Ellsworth's wife, formerly the actress Sheila O'Shay, disappears. Dr. Cavanaugh, criminal psychologist, learns their married life has been unhappy. He identifies a charred body found in the tule marsh as that of Sheila. Barbara, his daughter, faints when she hears this.

When Mrs. Kane, Sheila's maid, is arrested, she admits that Ellsworth married Sheila under threat of breach of promise. A threatening note signed "David Orme" is found in the murdered woman's safe. Peter Piper, a Herald reporter, trails Orme and arrests him.

Then Peter sees Barbara destroy a jewelled comb which belonged to Sheila. Barbara refuses to talk and Peter realises she is protecting someone. Orme's trial for the murder of Sheila O'Shay comes up.

CHAPTER XXXVIII.

"Here, Harry!" Peter thrust his pages of notes into the hand of the nearest of the Q and A twins. "Take care of this for me, will you? Phone it in to the office and tell Jimmy I'll be around to write the rest of the story in half an hour. And if he tells you to remind me there's a one o'clock deadline, you tell him if I miss it he can fire men, and to go to—anywhere you like."

Peter nudged his way up the aisle and vaulted the low railing to the enclosed area, his eyes fixed on a small black hat just visible above the back of a chair.

"Barbara!" he exclaimed. "Why did you come? How did you get in?"

The little figure in the big chair faced him calmly.

"Father got a pass for me," she announced. "He's to be an expert witness, you know, and I've never seen him in action. I told him I thought it might be interesting." Peter wondered if he would ever in the world get over being astonished at Barbara. Except for the tired lines about her eyes, she was as nonchalant as if they had met in the lobby of a theatre instead of a court-room.

"But you musn't stay. You musn't," Peter said in a low tone. "It's too much for you to stand. And it won't do anybody a particle of good."

"Won't you sometime ask me something that I don't have to say 'No' to, Peter?" For one moment her upturned face was full of appealing wistfulness; the next, it had hardened into a look of weary fortitude. "How can I possibly know what will do any good, unless I stay to find out?" she said.

Peter's impressions of the succeeding days of the Orme trial were like a series of island mountain tops emerging out of the sea. There were waste stretches which he did not remember at all, although at the close of each court session he hammered out in the Herald local room that series of courtroom stories which laid the foundation for his reputation as one of the most brilliant "special" writers in the country.

If Orme was not guilty, Barara must be. If Orme was found guilty, Barbara would walk with firm light steps into the arena and let her body and soul be torn while the newsboys shouted "Extra!" and the crowd licked its lips outside, rather than allow him to suffer unjustly. Peter, slumped in seat 53, his eyes fixed on the small black hat just visible above the chair-back where Barbara sat beside Dr. Cavanaugh, felt his brain clamped in a tight inescapable circle of thought. And yet some other portion of his mind functioned independently, automatically recording names, addresses, incidents, pictures.

He seemed to have spent an endless lifetime alternating between the court house and the Herald office. He could scarcely recall a time before the trial began; he could not look forward to the time when it should be ended. He sat through the droning hours with half-shut eyes which yet saw with minute detail eery aspect of the court-room. And out of the welter certain scenes were stamped, bright and clear, in his memory.

The first of these was Don Ellsworth on the witness stand—Don Ellsworth facing with dilated, desperate eyes row upon row of press correspondents, each scribbling intently on pads of copy paper. He no longer had the look of a sullen, violent boy. The thing that he had fought and hated more than anything else in the world had happened, and he faced it with tense composure. He stared before him like a man in front of a firing squad, standing rigidly erect until he had twice been told to be seated in the witness chair.

"Will you just relate in your own way, Mr. Ellsworth, the circumstances of your wife's disappearance from your home?"

"I was first aware that she had gone on the morning of March 19," Ellsworth spoke in a hard, mechanical voice, as if he were reciting a lesson by rote. "My wife's maid came and told me that—"

"Never mind what anyone told you. Just relate what you did."

Ellsworth's eyes flashed briefly from the rows of reporters to the lawyers' table. Peter was suddenly reminded of a bull being pricked by the lance tip of the toreador. Don opened his lips to retort, but thought better of it.

"I went up to my wife's boudoir. I found that the lights had been left burning. So far as I could tell, none of her clothes were missing except an evening cloak and the dress which she had worn at dinner the night before."

"And what did you do then?"

"Nothing. I waited, thinking that some natural explanation of her disappearance would be forthcoming. When she had not returned after several days, the police were notified. That is all I can say of my direct knowledge."

"Have you ever seen the defendant, David Orme, before?"

"I think not."

"I will ask you to read this letter, introduced in evidence as people's exhibit A. What is your interpretation of this letter?"

"I object, your honor. What the witness thinks the letter means is incompetent, immaterial and irrelevant."

"If the witness knows any circumstances which will explain the letter, he has the right to state them. You may answer the question," the judge rapped out with metronomic precision.

"I had some reason to suppose that Mrs. Ellsworth had done Orme—or he thouhgt she had done him—some injury."

"What reason?"

"She had also done me what I consider a grave injury and I imagine I am by no means the only one to suffer at her hands."

"Your honor, I object. I move the answer be stricken from the record as unresponsive."

"It may be stricken out."

"I withdraw the question. Did your wife ever speak of Orme to you?"

"She did."

The bent heads of the correspondents rose like a field of flowers turned upward by the wind. There was a faint, rustling sound of suppressed excitement.

"Will you kindly relate the substance of such conversation or conversations?"

"My wife told me that David Orme was the name of the latest of her husands—previous to myself!" The dry bitterness of the voice smote the court-room like a blade of ice.

"Had you any reason to suppose that your wife might have left the house voluntarily with her former husband?"

"I object!" Graham, his round, boyish face crimson, popped to his feet as if sprung out of a box. "What the witness supposes his wife might have done is incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial and calling for the conclusion of the witnese." The words were like the spatter of a shotgun.

"Your honor!" the district attorney boomed reproachfully. "Surely the witness may relate any conduct on the part of his wife directly bearing on the circumstances of her leaving the house!"

"Reframe your question."

"Did your wife do or say anything to indicate that she was in communication with Orme?"

"My wife's former husbands were not a common topic of conversation between us." Again the air was cut by that sword of ice.

A gust of laughter ran through the courtroom—the nervous, explosive laughter that is released from intolerable tension.

"Silence in the courtroom, please!"

"Your honor, I move that the answer be stricken from the record as unresponsive."

"It may be stricken from the record. Answer the question, yes or no," the judge said with bored severity.

"She did not."

"That is all, Mr. Ellsworth."

"You may cross examine."

"I understood you to say," Graham began cheerfully, "that you looked through your wife's clothes on the morning when she was first missing. Doesn't that indicate that you thought she might have packed her clothes before leaving?"

"I object," rumbled the district attorney," on the ground that the question is leading."

"Objection overruled. The witness may answer," the judge said with his usual curt weariness.

"I was taking the possibility into account."

"And yet you did nothing—nothing whatever—to discover your missing wife's whereabouts for three days? Weren't you, to say the least, somewhat anxious to know what had become of her?"

The forced control of the man on the witness stand was suddenly shattered. His hands gripped the arms of the chair as if he would tear them from their supports.

CHAPTER XXXIX.

"If you want to know what I thought, I'll tell you," Ellsworth said in a loud, rapid voice. "At first I thought it quite likely that she had run away with some one. If I had known that Orme was about I might have suspected him, but as a matter of fact, I did not speculate. I did nothing about it because if that was the case it released me from a situation that I regretted with all my soul. But when I thought it over, I knew positively that that was one thing she wouldn't do. My wife was a very emotional woman, but she would never have deliberately given up sure money for the sake of any emotion. She might have relished the excitement of meeting Orme again, but she would never have given up her financial position as my wife to go back to him."

Graham and the district attorney were both frantically striving to make themselves heard above the storm. The gavel of the bailiff thumped like a tomtom."

ROUND THE CORNER

By Ursula Bloom

It was a wise head who wrote the old proverb about the course of true love never running smooth. George Greyson reflected it, as he eyed Rosemary from under his lids. He loved her, yes, he really did love her; ash-blonde hair, grey eyes, and that little three-cornered mouth of hers. They had been half engaged for over a year, ever since that moment when they had met at the tennis dance. He had seen her dressed in Columbine, a fairy-like, fragile little thing, with pink and green ballons swirling about her. He had summoned up the courage to kiss her, and she had not rebuffed him. He had felt ecstasy and triumphant pride swelling together within him. Adorable little thing! When he was able he would buy her a ring.

Ever since then they had been meeting every other evening, walking in the park together, sitting on two prim chairs and glancing at each other, and saying all those romantic sweet nothings that lovers do say. Or they had been to the pictures, and had sat there hand in hand, thrilling with the sentimental parts, joying in the love of it.

Now, to-night, this had happened.

George supposed he had not been feeling too good-tempered when they met. He had had a bad day at the office, hot weather, and the chief with his rag out—one of those days when everything goes wrong. Then he had been afraid that he was going to be late, and had bolted his supper, and had waiter in the park, walking up and down, and every moment had made him more indignant with himself for getting there late!

When she had arrived, she had not been hurrying—just strolling along leisurely.

"You've kept me waiting," he had announced, and she had replied, quite calmly:—

"Oh, have I?"

That was all. Yet, from that little "all" everything had started. Now they were sitting on two chairs, hot and angry with each other.

"I never thought you'd be such a beast," she flashed, "saying all those unkind things."

"Well, what about you? The truth of the matter is that you have got used to me. You haven't been as nice as you used to be for ages."

"You're being stupid. You can't go on being sloppy for ever."

"Sloppy!"

He echoed the words irately.

There came silence. He was wondering if it would be a terrible comedown to suggest a compromise. He was contemplating the best way to approach it, when she said, angrily:—

"I think I'll go home; if you are going to sulk it isn't very pleasant for me."

"I wasn't sulking."

"That's it, contradict me."

Almost viciously he made a grand movement and hailed a taxi-cab. That would surprise her. He did not often rise to taxis, but he would take her home in style. The end should be a triumphant one.

She showed little surprise as she got inside and sat down with her face averted from him. That in itself was disarming.

George gave the man the address and got in beside her. He was thankful that the journey was not a long one. They bowled along.

"It's not as hot as it was,' he said at last. She ignored him. He repeated the modest remark; "Not as hot as it was. . . ."

"Well, I don't care I like the heat," she snapped

"I've never seen you so thoroughly beastly," he announced.

"Well, then, it's a new side of my nature. I don't know what has come over you to-night. I suppose this is the end?"

The longing to plead with her suddenly disappeared. "I suppose it is," he said, with an attempt at cheerfulness.

"I never thought it would end like this."

"If you hadn't been so snappy it wouldn't have done."

"You've never cared for me," she protested. "A good thing we found it out before we were married. A nice thing it would have been after."

"Yes, wouldn't it?"

She turned upon him furiously. "I'll never speak to you again as long as I live," she declared. "Never! This is the end."

"Granted," he sniffed, and sat back. Well, he had got one in there.

The taxi rolled on. He had not been noticing where they were going, because he had been entirely preoccupied with his own quarrel, but now it struck him that the streets were looking queerly unfamiliar. A short cut perhaps. He refused to take any notice. He had an idea that she was crying, something bright and glittering in her eyes! No, he would not notice. On they went.

On the box the old taxi-man crouched over his wheel. He was thinking of last night, of the fare he had had—a fat old gent, with white whiskers and all got up like a dandy. While carnation in his buttonhole, shiny hat and all. "Brixton," the old gentleman had said, "and a fat tip if you get me there quickly." The smell of his cigar had been good as a meal. The taximan had gone along to Brixton, and had had luck. He knew the way well, for he had had a mother-in-law who lived round there, and who had kept a little fish shop, and many a time he had gone down for the little dainty she had put aside for her daughter. Years since he had been that way, and rather pleasant to be going over the remembered ground again with the old gent with the shiny hat and the carnation, puffing at his strong-smelling cigar in the back of the car. Then, when they had got there, out the old gent had got, sprightly and agile enough, and he had stood on the edge of the pavement and had counted out the money, fat tip and all. It had been a fat tip, too!

Then he had done an amazing thing. He had taken off his hat; he had folded it and put it in his pocket. He had taken off his whiskers and had done the same. He had turned a laughing woman's face to the driver of the taxi-cab, and had turned and strode inside the house.

The driver would never forget it. All day long he had been thinking about it. All day long he had thought of the smell of the cigar, and the old gent who had taken off his hat and his whiskers and had laughed up at him impudently.

One of the others had told him about it at the rank when he was waiting for a fare.

"You got hold of Ella de Wrench," he said; "she used to be on the stage, did male impersonating. They say she goes on doing it in her private life. She's a caution."

All the same, he could not forget it. He was mooning along and thinking about it when suddenly . . .

"Hi," said George, furiously, his head out of the window, "where do you think you are driving us? What are you doing? I said Battersea."

The taximan came out of his day-dream.

"Blimey! I was thinking of last night's fare—a caution that was—and I've brought you to Brixton."

"Well, you just jolly well take us back—and at your own expense," said George, and he slammed up the window.

The taximan turned the cab slowly. At the corner of the street was the house where he had left her—cigar and white whiskers and all.

"Dashed annoying," said George.

Rosemary came out of her handkerchief and glanced at him.

"What's happened?"

"Why, the moony old fool has brought us all the way to Brixton. Heaven knows what he was thinking about."

He thought furiously that now they would have to prolong this awkward tete-atete. He fumed to himself.

"What was he thinking about?" she asked. "Perhaps he had had a row with somebody, too."

George caught the inflection of her voice and was suddenly ashamed.

"I—I never think rows are worth while," he commented, "one does say such nasty things; all the same. . ."

"You said some very nasty things," she said.

"So did you."

There was a silence for a moment as the cab rolled along the street.

"I'm sorry, if you are," she said at last, very softly indeed.

"Darling. . . ." He caught her to him, just as the cab struck a pot-hole in the road He caught her to him, and kissed the little upturned face. The cheeks were quite wet, her eyes were brimming.

"Oh, George," and she clung to him. "Oh, George, darling, I feel so awful about it. I didn't mean those things, really I didn't . . . please, George. ."

"Sweetheart," and he kissed her again and again, "darling little sweetheart After this, dearest, we will have to be properly engaged, because I am not risking any more disputes. We will buy a ring at once. We will put the banns up."

"Oh, George!"

He held her to his heart. "Fancy, if the moony old fool hadn't driven us to Brixton we shouldn't ever have had time to make it up. We should have parted, perhaps for ever."

"That would have been too awful," she said, and she lifted her lips and kissed him timidly. "I'm not angry that he went to Broxton, are you?" I've got rather a weakness for the place, couldn't we live there when—when we are married?"

"And may it be soon," he whispered.

The taxi jarred to a standstill by the kerb of a Battersea flat. Slowly they got out.

"I'm sorry about that there," said the taximan—and he scratched his head. "I don't know what made me think like that, day dreamin' and all that. I do hope it ain't caused you no inconvenience."

"On the contrary it is one of the best things you ever did," said George, "and I'm going to pay for it."

The taximan watched him as he counted out the change. He watched George as he turned and linked his arm in Rosemary's, and then did a little gavotte of their own on the pavement and into the house.

"Blimey," said the taximan, and his eyes grew round with amazement; "if that there ain't another comic fare. Who'd ha' believed it?"—Tit Bits.

"Thinking of me, dearest?" "Was I laughing? I'm so sorry."—London Opinion.

Controls Air Lines

ACROSS THE WAY

BY IRENE STILES.

The little typist, working in the third window on the fourth floor of the building opposite the hospital, finished her letter with a flourish. A man went to watch her as he went his rounds in the men's wards, prepared to smile.

It was hardly necessary to pause, he reflected. He knew so well what she would do. She would open a drawer, take out her powder-puff, and powder her impudent little nose. Then she would perhaps throw some laughing remark to the girl who worked nearest her. In any event, it would be some minutes before she started work again.

Yes, as it happened, the little typist only sat back and sighed. The man opposite was so surprised that he paused longer than usual, until the bright face at the window turned away.

"That young man certainly knows how to stare," Judy Carstairs said to her companion.

"You should feel flattered, dear," said Miss Macintyre.

Judy shook her head.

"His eyes are too critical; besides, the wretched creature always manages to look across when I am powdering my nose. You know, that building opposite has blighted my life."

Miss Macintyre was horrified.

"Oh, you shouldn't say that. Don't forget it's a hospital. Don't forget the good work they do."

"Yes, I always do try to remember that, but I can't help regretting the pleasant green squares we used to look upon. You weren't here, so you don't remember what this place was like a year or two ago. It was a pleasure to work here then."

"And now?" ventured Miss Macintyre, timidly.

"It's a penance," said Judy solemnly, "and that's final."

"Heavens, what's go you down this morning?" demanded Miss Macintyre in alarm.

"The building opposite," said Judy tersely.

But that, though indirectly true, was not so entirely. Judith would hardly admit it to herself, but it was the man opposite who had upset her. He stared so often and so hard that she had been bound to notice him, but she was often forced to wonder whether he had really noticed her.

And because she was not sure she was angry with herself for being so interested in him, angry with herself for liking his fair, thoughtful young face, his serious, frowning brows, but she was angrier still with him because he never smiled.

He seemed very remote and abstracted in his work across the way. The boys in the men's ward smiled at her, and were only too happy if she smiled back. The boys in the men's ward waved to her, and were delighted if she waved back. The old men sat by their windows in the sun and nodded to her.

They were all pleased to see her—all except the serious young man. He just stared and frowned, almost as if he was not pleased with what he saw. Thus it was that on this bright morning Judy also frowned over her typewriter.

She was still frowning when a note was brought to her by one of her own firm's messengers.

"A young man left it for you in the hall, miss," said the departing messenger.

Judith looked down at the note with puzzled eyes. When she had read the address she was more puzzled than ever. It was addressed to "Miss Busy Bee, care of Messrs. Harford & Harford, Third Window, Fourth Floor, Facing West Central Hospital."

It was a joint invitation from some of the boys in the men's ward, asking her to tea the following Saturday. There was to be a concert, and if she could join in, so much the better. They had watched her so often, and she had smiled at them so often, that they all felt they knew her. She looked so happy that they wanted to know her better.

Judy, surprised and touched, decided to go. If she could cheer those boys up she would. Besides——

The Saturday afternoon concert proved to be the usual hospital affair, replete with kind old ladies exercising somewhat doubtful talents. Judy couldn't help being the star turn.

When she had finished her first piece at the piano, no one would hear of her leaving the instrument. Some students, who had gathered in the doorway, ran forward every time she tried to escape, and held her down.

She played popular dance tunes and all the old favorites she could remember. She sang an old-fashioned love song and had half the ward singing with her. It was towards the end of this song that her voice faltered and her energetic little hands played not so surely. She saw the fair young man pause in the doorway.

When she had finished the song he spoke to the students, and a number of them turned on reluctant heels and went away; but he remained, frowning.

She felt suddenly nervous, or she would have gone up to him and asked him why he did not like her song.

She often went over to the hospital after that, but though she made friends with all the patients and many of the students, she never made friends with the serious young man with the serious eyes.

"I don't think he approves of me," she told the rosy-faced boy with the broken leg. "He always stands and glowers at me when I'm playing—that is, if he deigns to notice me at all."

"Oh, he approves of you all right. He wouldn't come round at all while you're here if he didn't. He's always very busy. But then he takes his job very seriously, you know. He's very young to be house-surgeon. He was a student less than two years ago, you know, playing Rugger in the hospital. A team. He told me that when he heard how I broke my leg."

The next week was Hospital Week for the West Central Hospital, and excitement ran high. Students paraded the streets in white coats or fancy dress; smiling nurses collected at corners. On the Tuesday there was a door to door collection, and the students raided the offices of Messrs. Harford & Harford.

Judith watched eagerly from her window, trying to recognize some of the fantastically dressed figures. After long minutes she began to think that her own room on the fourth floor had been forgotten; then the door opened and someone came in. He came straight across to her seat by the window as if she were the only person he wished to see.

He smiled. Standing before her, shaking his collecting-box, he seemed younger and gayer than she had ever seen him.

"You're not supposed to do this sort of thing, surely," she said, when she had recovered from her surprise, she fumbled in her bag for half-a-crown, which really was the most she could afford, and as she fumbled she read the legend: "Peter Maddox, House Surgeon's Collecting Box."

"I came across more to see you than to collect," he was saying. Her heart leapt, and she raised starry eyes to him.

"I wanted to see you about our luncheon-hour concert on Thursday.

Her heart sank again.

"It's going to be just an impromptu affair on the first-floor roof garden. I suggested that it was no use having a modern building if we didn't make the most of it, so we are going to have a short concert there at lunch-time, when everyone will be out and about. They'll get an awfully good view from the street, and we'll have people down in the streets collecting. Don't you think it's a good idea?"

"Splendid!" said Judy. "Of course, I'll do everything I can to help. I expect I can get some extra time off for something as important as this. Will you be there?" she added, as if as an afterthought.

"Of course, if I possibly can. I shall want to see the concert. And to see you," he added.

But on Thursday, even when the concert waged wildest and most hilarious, Peter Maddox was nowhere to be seen.

"Why doesn't he come?" Judy kept asking herself. "Why didn't he come?" she finally asked one of the students.

"I believe he's busy with an operation now, or going to be very shortly," he replied; then he looked at his watch. "Why, we're due down there at three o'clock, aren't we?" And more than half of the students fled, leaving Judy and about four others to clear up.

"Ever seen the operating theatre from this point of vantage?" asked the student who had spoken first.

"No," said Judy, "nor from any other point."

"Well, it's just right here at hand, if you want to look. It's that next bit of low roof that backs on to here. It's lower than the rest so that they get daylight through the roof. Gosh, girl, you should see the lamps they have in there!"

"I wish I could see them," said Judy.

"Follow me, child," beckoned the student, "and you shall see all."

"But we can't go in," she objected, "it isn't a proper visiting hour."

"Oh," said the young man, "it's much more exciting out of visiting hours. Besides, we are only going to take one short peep through the window."

Judy followed the young man meekly along a ledge to a small side window, where there was another accommodating little ledge to hang on to.

One short peep it was for Judy. Everything in the operating theatre was in readiness, and amid that glaring whiteness and careful cleanliness there was the man Judy loved. Masked and rubber-booted, he seemed more remote than ever.

Perhaps it was a sudden feeling of hopelessness and helplessness which overcame Judy, or perhaps it was the sickening reek of ether which clung stickily about the air. Her grip on the ledge slackened. She felt faint. She fell.

When she recovered consciousness, her broken arm had been set, and her whole body ached with bruises. She was a little light-headed from the chloroform they had given her, and it was some moments before she realized whose was the face that bent above her.

Still light-headed, she raised an inquiring finger and touched the corner of the house-surgeon's mouth.

"What a serious young man!" she said.

"Something to look serious about, this!" he muttered, but smiled back at her, nevertheless.

"You don't seem nearly so remote when you smile," she said. "You should do it more often."

"Remote—I—remote?" He threw back his head and laughed. "Why, it was you who seemed so remote. You smiled at everyone except me."

"You used to glare at me when I powdered my nose."

"Why, I loved to see you powder your little nose! You all seemed so carefree over there. Everything seemed so serious here. I'd work much better after I'd watched you for a minute. And why do you think I came across collecting. It was just that I couldn't bear this sense of your being just across the way, always just out of reach."

"And now I've come across to you," she said, "and you'll have to smile at me because I'm a patient."

"I'll do more than smile," he said, as he bent over her again.

"Accidents have their compensations," murmured Judy happily; after he had kissed her.—"Answers" (London).

New Hardy Rose Produced in Dominion

Montreal.—A new rose has been produced at the Experimental Farm, sufficiently hardy to withstand the climate as far north as Ottawa without protection. It is a cross between an unnamed double white variety of the Rugosa type and R. spanasisima hispida. In the report of the Dominion Horticulturist for 1930, which is issued by the Department of Agriculture at Ottawa, the rose is described as having a handsome bush with distinct foliage, the leaves goldish green with seven leaflets. The flowers are large single, pale pink on opening, fading to white. The plant blooms until the middle of June.

In the Air

A well-known bishop was giving a religious address from the London broadcasting studio. His peroration concluded: ". . . And if we obey these laws . . we shall all meet in Heaven"

The listeners were surprised to hear, almost without a pause—"I don't think!"

It seems that the bishop, immediately on concluding his address, turned to the announcer and said, "I don't think I spoke too long, did I?" but the announcer did not "fade out" until the words: "I don't think——" had been transmitted.

Daughter—"You'll have to give me away when I marry Tom."

Father—"I have already told him how extravagant you are and he isn't discouraged yet."

"I think Elsie's boy is a credit to her." "Well if I know Elsie, she'll need every penny of it."

"Did you ever hear of the straw which broke the camel's back?" asked the guest at a country inn. "Yes, sir," replied the landlord. "Well, you'll find it in the bed I tried to sleep on last night."

Try These

New Wine in Old Bottles

Have you tried the amusing game of making new endings to old proverbs? "It's a long lane"—says one, "that has no picture palace," continues another. Or, "Where there's a will—there's litigation," and "People who live in glass houses—should pull down the blinds."

What are your new endings for "Too many cooks——" "The early bird——" "When the cat's away——" and a host of others?

Party Problem

Can you make any sense out of these four lines?

dingstnthsmidtwlghtdm,
Whlstbrdsnwldswftvglcrclngskm
lghtwndsnsghngsnktllrsngbrght nghtsvrgnplgrmswmsnxxdlght.

It only needs the addition of one vowel to make four lines of quite good poetry. The letter is "i." Put it in the right places, and the lines then read:

Idling I sit in this mild twilight dim,
Whilst birds in wild, swift vigil circling skim,
Light winds in sighing sink, till rising bright
Night's virgin pilgrim swims in vivid light.

Conundrums

Why is a wet blanket like a train?—Because it is usually seen upon a line.

What does your butcher weigh — Meat, of course.

Why is a clock like a discontented worker?—Because it never passes a day without striking.

Why is a careful housewife like a dog trying to bite its own tail?—Because they are both trying to make both ends meet.

What has a foot and a brow, but no leg and no face?—A hill.

Why is a false friend like the letter P?—Because, although the first in pity, he is the last in help.

"I admire a man who says the right thing at the right time." "So do I—especially when I'm thirsty."

There came a knock at the door. The cottager opened it. "Good morning!" said the shabbily dressed visitor. "Is it here that you are offering a reward for a lost dog?" "Yes," said the cottager anxiously. "I'm offering ten shillings. Can it be that you have news of my poor little Fido?" The other shook his head. "No, not yet," he replied. "But as I was just going in search of the dog I thought you might let me have a little on account."

A sportsman who was a very bad shot but very free with his tips, was one day accompanied by a keeper who was anxious to keep on good terms with him. Soon after they were posted a rabbit appeared about ten yards in front of them. Bang, bang, went the sportsman's gun, but the rabbit darted away. "Did I hit it?" asked the sportsman. "Well, sir," replied the keeper thoughtfully, "I couldn't exactly say you hit 'im, but I never seed a rabbit wuss scared!"

Sunday School Lesson

December 27. Lesson XIII—The Spread of Christianity in Europe—Isaiah 11: 1-10. Golden Text—The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ; and he shall reign for ever and ever.—Revelation 11: 15.

For six months we have been following the studies of the spread of Christianity after the departure of Jesus. In the resurrection the little band of followers became aware of the living and eternal Christ and they went everywhere spreading the message and the power of his gospel. As we have looked again upon the faith and the courage of these early followers of Christ, and realize something of the price they paid in new outlooks and heroic endeavors, risking and sacrificing all that they had, we feel that we have entered into a rich heritage indeed. We are constrained to ask ourselves whether we have been as faithful witnesses.

The past Quarter's lessons have shown us Christianity moving out into new areas, the extension of the missionary activity of the church to include Europe. Help the class to see the enlargement of view as well as of area that has taken place. This part of the review you might gather up under the heading, "Jewish vs. Universal Christianity." Recall with the group the Judaizing tendency of a certain group. They regarded Christianity at first as exclusively for Jews and within the Jewish church. When did this idea get its first challenge? Recall Peter at Joppa. But who was the real champion of the larger view? It was Paul who "tore the gospel from its Jewish soil and rooted it in the soil of humanity." Call to mind his experience on his first and second missionary journeys and his call into Europe. Review the circumstances of his preaching in Philippi, Thessalonica, Berea, and Corinth. Note especially that Paul was demonstrating all the while that Gentiles could enter into the faith and life in Christ equally with Jews and it was not necessary for them to accept the unfamiliar ceremonial of Judaism in order to be good Christians. But it was very hard for the Jews to see this, as is evidenced by the bitterness with which they opposed Paul and the Gentile mission. The matter of consequence is that the Christian gospel demonstrated itself as a universal gospel rather than for a merely Jewish sect.

Notice what were the implications of this. Racial equality was recognized or prepared for, and the way opened for racial understanding. In Christ there was to be no East or West. Paul was the world's greatest pioneer under Christ into this field. Have the class attempt to estimate what we owe to Paul in this.

Another topic for discussion might be "Three Jerusalem Councils." Have some one tell of the first, where Paul and Barnabas came to report on the Gentile response to the Gospel and to get the council's approval and assurance of a tolerant attitude toward Gentile Christians. Some one else may tell of Paul's last visit to Jerusalem and the attitude of the council and of the Jewish community. Then have another tell of the Jerusalem Conference in 1928, when representatives from all the continents took counsel together on the basis of racial equality and human brotherhood. How far was Paul's thought of the universality of the gospel vindicated by this last conference? How much of the old racial antipathy and sectarian narrowness has still to be overcome?

Another interesting topic for discussion here would be Philemon's Reply to Paul's Letter, taking for granted that Philemon was as good a Christian as Paul believed him to be.

"I'm going to ask the boss for a raise in salary the first of the year."

"But suppose he refuses?"

"Oh, well, I'll ask him again next year."

Quebec Beckons Winter Sports' Devotees

Winter sports in wide variety; excellent accommodation and good company are the order of the day for those who make Canada's ancient Capital, the historic city of Quebec, their winter headquarters. Here, overlooking the mighty St. Lawrence River and set in surroundings of unsurpassed beauty, is a city whose history rivals that of the most storied capitals of Europe. On the site of the residence of the French Governors' stands the great Chateau Frontenac, the Canadian Pacific Railway's world-famous hotel, the hub of all activities. True to its long-established reputation, the great hostelry is giving special attention to the entertainment of its patrons and several innovations have been added to the program for their comfort. In addition to the toboggan-slide on Dufferin Terrace and the hotel's great rinks, curling rinks will be the mecca of the followers of roarin' game. The inner room of the Terrace Cafe will be devoted to a golf-school under a capable "pro". There will be badminton, dancing every evening, and a costume-ball is being planned for Washington's birthday, February 22. Thus the guest that this hotel of hotels will always be assured of plenty of amusement. Skiing, tobogganing, skating, snowshoeing and sleigh-drives will all be under the capable direction of Jack Strathdee, well-known winter sports' director, who already has a number of successful winter seasons at the Chateau Frontenac and elsewhere to his credit. Pictures show: the great hotel; The C.P.R. dog-sleigh and team; two fair skiers at the foot of the Champlain Monument just outside the Chateau Frontenac; and inset "Jack".

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Mr. H. W. Hope, Reeve,
Streetsville, Ont.
Dear Sir:—

I believe I understand perfectly just how you feel about the installation of Hydro-Electric for the Village of Streetsville. I am writing you so that you will be in a position to inform the electors on the following question.

One of the residents of your village telephoned me asking for the following information:—

If Streetsville signed a contract for a certain amount of power with the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario would they have to pay for the same whether used or not!

You will be billed by the Hydro-Electric Power Commission on the highest peak load reached for twenty minutes during the month. For instance—suppose the factories in your village took one hundred and fifty H.P. during the day and at 5 o'clock the factories shut down, that power is then available for Street Lights and Resident Lighting without further adding to the peak as you can use the peak load for twenty-four hours.

If you become one of the Hydro municipalities you will have all the auditing done in connection with Hydro by the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario without extra charge, also engineering services will be taken care of by the Commission, if requested to do so.

The Hydro-Electric in the province is owned by the people of the province and is run at cost as no dividends are to be declared. Therefore, any profit that may be made by your Municipality from the sale of power only goes to reduce the cost of the same to them.

It has yet to be brought to my attention of any village, town or township that has any criticism to lay against Hydro. I am, Sir,

Yours truly,
R. M. PARKINSON, Manager,
Toronto Twp. Hydro-Electric Comm.

COMMUNICATION

Editor of Review,
Dear Sir:

In reply to the printed statement in the Review of Dec. 17th, 1931, to which I, as Reeve of the Village, take exception.

There will be no addition to tax rate on account of the new or old debentures, these will be paid from the funds received from the users of electricity.

There has never been any money paid from taxes in any municipality, where they have taken on hydro.

As the street lighting, the village has been paying for this in the taxes which is the right thing to do. Why should any one pay for street lighting in their electric light bill, this is a benefit to all taxpayers and therefore they should pay for same. As to statement that this is a matter of book-keeping, if you will be good enough to look at the report of the village for 1930 you will note the detail statement showing receipts, such as taxes, etc., following down you will come to Receipts for the Electric Light Plant and there you will find $1190.00 credited to the plant for the payment of wages, debentures, etc. You would readily see that if this was not done there would not be enough revenue to take care of the expenses, you would have to raise the rates or take the same from taxes. Then if you will follow on down you will see a charge of $1190.00 under the heading of Expenditure of the Municipal Government in the way of fire, water and street lighting. Let me make this clear, this is an expense of the town and is paid for out of the taxes. Now if you will again read on down the report you will come to the Expenditure of the Electric Light Plant and in that you will not see any charge of this amount, you will see all expenses such as wages, debentures paid, etc.

I hope this will clear up the statement which is very misleading. You will see elsewhere letters from other Municipalities which will also prove my statements.

H. W. HOPE, Reeve.

Bolton, Ont., December 14th, 1931.
Reeve Hope,
Streetsville, Ontario,
Dear Sir:—

Learning that Streetsville contemplated entering the great Hydro family, I am making bold to let you know how this public utility worked out in Bolton. I was reeve in 1913, when Bolton embraced hydro, am secretary of the local commission at the present time and have been in fairly close touch with its workings from the beginning. We took over a small water-driven plant, added to and rebuilt the system. The rates charged consumers have been ample to pay for superintendence, clerk hire and to meet the payment of debentures and interest, and in addition lay by a surplus of something like eight thousand dollars. This surplus was used last year in improving the system, stringing heavier wire and putting the equipment into first class condition. No further expense in this way may be expected for some years to come. While the council, of course, had to issue the debentures and guarantee their payment, they have never been asked to pay a cent in any way. Although we signed a contract for two hundred and fifty horse-power we have never required that amount and have never been asked to pay for more than we actually used. In fact our dealings with the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario have been of a most satisfactory nature in every particular. When we entered into the first arrangements with the Provincial Commission there was no opposition and it can truthfully be said that at the present time there is not a dissatisfied consumer. It is recognized by all that only through the Hydro System of Ontario could the people of a village of the size of Bolton secure this great boon of electric power for their industries, their streets and their homes. I neglected to mention that our rates have been gradually lowered to consumers, and following the practice of the Provincial Commission of supplying power at cost to local public utilities our council each year receives a cheque for a tidy sum as a rebate on the cost of their street lighting.

Should the electors of your town approve of Hydro, and it works out as well with you as with us, I am sure they will never regret their decision.

Yours sincerely,
F. N. LEAVENS.

The local newspapers not possess a sufficient number porters to send to every church vice in the range of its circulation and it must needs depends upon person to send in the news. pastors or leaders of the congregation do this and their items are printed. VILLAGE NOMINATIONS

The annual meeting for nominating candidates for Village Council, Public School Board, etc., was held Monday evening at the Town Hall, with Dr. Smith, Village Clerk, in charge.

Following is the list of those nominated:

For Reeve

Dr. T. I. Bowie, H. W. Hope and O. R. Church.

For Councillors

W. A. Hardy, J. E. Bailey, J. W. Drennan, V. C. Johnston, F. Ward, W. S. English, C. R. E. Evans, W. C. Andrew, J. E. Dowling.

For School Trustees

S. S. Rice, C. G. Quennell, J. H. Atkinson and James Rutledge.

For Public Utilities Commission

C. H. Falconer, James Dandie, I. J. Ardagh.

After nominations closed, Mr. T. H. Goodison was voted chairman, which position he has filled a good many times. Speeches were made by many of those nominated and the speakers were given good hearing. The most prominent subject was, of course, the Hydro Electric By-law and it was pretty well thrashed out. The chances are that it will be a pretty close vote. There seems to be lots of opposition, chiefly because the taxpayers do not seem to understand it, and are still afraid it will increase their taxes.

Mr. Hope, the Reeve, gave an account of the year's work of the Council and spoke at length on the proposed Hydro By-law. Each member of the present council made a short speech, as well as did some of those nominated for honors for 1932. Dr. Bowie's theme was the power plant. He did not like to think the Council wanted to scrap it, because he was the instigator of it and had a lot of hard work getting the people to vote for it, and also getting the plant built. He told how the dam could be raised sufficiently to produce enough power to serve the village without going onto Hydro and advised the taxpayers to seriously consider the matter before casting their ballots next Monday.

There is a contest for the Reeveship between the present reeve, H. W. Hope, and O. R. Church.

The three Public School Trustees, Messrs. Atkinson, Quennell and Rutledge, were re-elected for 1932 and 1933.

Only Mr. Falconer qualified for the position of Local Hydro Commissioner. There may need to be another nomination

Those in the field for Councillors are three old members, Messrs. J E Bailey, J.W. Drennan and Victor Johnston, and W.C.Andrew, J. E Dowling and C.R.Evans.

Toronto Township

Reeve Leslie H. Pallett has been returned by acclamation for 1932.

There is a contest for deputy-reeve between Wm. Dennison and R. S. Whaley, while the following are running for councillors: G. S. Bonham, T. H. Graham, G. M. Harris, T. J. McCarthy, R. D. Salmond and W. D. Trenwith.

The Streetsville bowlers had a very successful dance Monday night in the Odd Fellows' Hall, when there was a splendid attendance and everybody enjoyed themselves immensely. The music was supplied by the Martin-Ramsay Orchestra of Brampton.

Congratulations are due to Mr. and Mrs. Will Cook of the ninth line who celebrated on Monday of this week the twenty-first anniversary of their wedding. They entertained a few of their friends. The Review wishes them many more years of happy wedded life.

Clarence Cook, M.A., Professor of Science and Mathematics in the Royal Military College, Kingston, and wife and family spent a few holidays with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Cooke, who recently moved into their new home at the south end of the village.

The choir of the United Church presented the cantata, "His Natal Day," at the United Church, Clarkson, on Sunday evening. The choir turned out in full force and sang to an appreciative audience. Mr. Len Pope, the local choir leader, directed the choir in training in a most capable manner. Rev. R. A. Spencer, father-in-law of Mr. Pope, is the minister of the Clarkson Church.

Boughem—Brownlee

At Woodbridge on December 15th, Rev. John MacKenzie officiated at the Presbyterian manse when Irene, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. R. T. Brownlee of New Toronto, became the bride of Richard Boughem, son of Mr. and Mrs. R. Boughem, of Bolton.

NINETY-SEVENTH ANNIVERSARY

St. Andrew's Presbyterian Sabbath School, Streetsville, will hold anniversary services on Sunday, Dec. 27th, when Rev. W. M. Kanniwin, D.D., of Toronto, will preach at 11 a.m. and 7 p.m.

A first-class program by children of the Sunday School, consisting of a pageant—"The Seven Ages of Giving," predicting the Christmas Spirit—in two scenes; solos, recitations, etc., will be given in the church on Friday evening, January 1st. Tea will be served from 6 to 8. Admission 35 and 20 cents.

Mr. Victor Hall is a candidate for the office of Deputy Reeve of Trafalgar Twp., and respectfully solicits the support of electors.

CARDS OF THANKS

Mr. and Mrs. O. R. Church and family wish to thank their many friends for their wonderful acts of kindness to them during the serious illness of their daughter, Beatrice. We are glad to state she is convalescing.

MANITOBA LETTER

348 Colony St., Winnipeg, Man.,
Dec. 19, 1931.

Dear Editor:

A very merry Christmas to you and yours and all your readers.

It does not look the least bit like Christmas here—was raining yesterday. But it does look very much like Christmas when walking up Portage and seeing all the spruce trees ready to do duty in thousands of homes, and so many stores have trees in their windows all trimmed, and see the kiddies admiring them. They sure are beautiful. And to see all the preparations going on. There are large spruce trees all the way from Main up to Colony Street, each side of Portage; all lighted at night with electric lights; then strings of bulbs across the street at intervals and strings of spruce from one large spruce to another. It just looks as if the stars had fallen down and lighted on the city trees. I saw Santa come into the city; it surely was most wonderful—and such a crowd. I think there were as many old people as kiddies, all were young again just for the time being. Eaton's toyland is very wonderful, just alive with artificial life. Christmas carols are being sung on the streets. The Hudson Bay Co. has a choir of one hundred voices, lead by W. Davidson Thomson, leader of Knox Church choir. Carol singing every morning from half-past eight until nine o'clock until Christmas day. There are large crowds every morning.

Work has started on the new auditorium, three shifts of men, working day and night, which has provided work for a number of men, and a few hundred have been sent into the Riding Mountain Park.

James Woodsworth has just returned to Winnipeg after being away four months. His wife went with him. He is going to lecture on his impressions of Europe.

Mayor Webb was returned again to the mayor's chair by a very large majority. He will be kept more than busy to find out how to handle the unemployed. A farmer said in to-day's Free Press that he came into the city to get a man. After a lot of talk one man said he would go. He was to get ten dollars a month and his board. After only one day's work he said he did not see as he had to come to do chores when he could get a meal and bed and do nothing. He came back to the city, and he persuaded one of his men to leave also. So there are men who are able to work but will not as long as they can get on the relief squad.

The other day a mother and little daughter got on a street car. The conductor asked the age of the child. The mother said four. The child spoke up and said I am six. "Fare," said the conductor.

UNITED CHURCH CHOIR REPEATS CANTATA

Streetsville United Church choir of twenty-two members presented the Christmas cantata, His Natal Day, by Norman, in Clarkson United Church last Sunday evening. The choir, under the leadership of Leonard Pope, was highly commended by the minister, Rev. R. A. Spencer, and officials of Clarkson Church.

The cantata, although lengthy, was well rendered. Solo parts were taken by Mrs. Harry Burton, Miss Ruth Ross, Mr. Graydon Clipperton and Mr. Leonard Pope. A mezzo-soprano solo by Mrs. Wick Atkinson was exceptionally well rendered, as was also the tenor-alto duet by Mr. Root and Miss Mable Graydon. The chorus numbers were very good and showed the result of earnest and co-operative practise.

LIEUT. J. SYDNEY RANKIN KILLED BY FUMES

Well Known Hockeyist Found in Walkerville Garage

Overcome apparently by carbon monoxide fumes, Joseph Sydney Rankin, 44, Walkerville, was found in a garage at his home on Christmas morning.

Following an autopsy performed by Dr. Gordon Little, the coroner decided an inquest was unnecessary.

Rankin, widely known in Western Ontario hockey circles, was preparing for a motor trip to Brampton, to spend Christmas Day at the home of his mother-in-law, Mrs. P. Speirs, when he was overcome. The engine of the car was still running when he was discovered.

He had been both hockey player and referee in various centres. Rankin was a native of Stratford.

Lieut. Joseph Sydney Rankin was awarded a Military Cross and decorated by the Prince of Wales. He belonged to the 102nd Batt. Can. Infy. 2nd Cent. Ont. R. He was awarded the Military Cross and decorated for most conspicuous gallantry and devotion to duty in the two operations at Bourlon Wood and Blecourt on Sept. 27th and Oct. 1st, 1918. He led his platoon splendidly to his objective capturing many prisoners and machine guns and inflicting very heavy casualities and then personally undertook a night reconnaissance in the outskirts of Fontaine, whence he returned with more prisoners and valuable information. On Oct. 1st he again showed excellent leadership capturing his objective with large numbers of prisoners and machine guns. He did splendid work throughout. (This last paragraph was taken from the military report presented to him by the Prince of Wales.)

He survived by his widow, formerly Alma Hanen, of Brampton, and one son, Jack, of Montreal.

MARRIAGES

Barker—Kirby

A pretty wedding was solemnized in St. Peter's Anglican Church, Erindale, on Saturday, December 19th, when Mary Edna, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. Kirby, Erindale, became the bride of Mr. Vernon Barker, son of Mrs. Barker, Cooksville, and the late Mr. J. M. Barker. Rev. George Banks officiated.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, looked lovely in a blue georgette gown with hat to match and carried a large bouquet of roses and fern. The bridesmaids, Misses Gladys Kirby and Helen Wilson, wore frocks of blue with corresponding hats and carried 'mums. The best man was Mr. Delmar Barker, brother of the groom. The wedding music was played by Miss Dorothy Adamson.

After the ceremony a reception was held at the bride's parents' home where thirty guests were present. The room was prettily decorated with pink and white streamers and wedding bells.

Mr. and Mrs. Barker later left on a short motor trip. On their return they will reside in Toronto.

COMMUNICATION

To the Electors of the Village of Streetsville:

After being prevailed upon by a number of electors I consented to present myself as a candidate for councillor for 1932.

My chief object in so doing is to keep down the tax rate.

Last year's reeve had to admit at nomination meeting that the profits from the electric light plant, amounting to $2600.00, was used to pay taxes, as was also the $7500.00 still owing the bank.

This revenue of $2600 if not used for village purposes would mean 7 mills extra in our taxes, as every $350 spent on the town means one mill in taxes. If we lose the revenue from our plant, how are we going to take care of the taxes if the rate is not raised?

Hydro will not allow $1.00 of surplus to be used for village purposes.

Some will try and make you believe that our plant is of no value and that it has never paid its way. A few years ago there was an expense incurred of some $7000.00 in installing an extra waterwheel, etc. This debt was paid off in three years without issuing debentures and out of the profits of the electric light plant.

In spite of the fact that last year's council lowered the rate to ½c a K.W. so as to enable some of our village fathers to get 800 K. Watts at the same rate as the ordinary consumer gets 100 K.W., the plant showed a revenue of $1800. This along with the $800 in the waterworks department makes up the $2600 earned by the plant this last year.

Ladies and gentlemen, if elected, my first duty will be to present a by-law to the council changing these rates so that the ordinary consumer will get a greater benefit. I am in favor of doing away with the present service charge and having a meter rental only.

I will endeavor to solve the problem of taking care of the plant during low water periods.

I will endeavor to procure gas which will not cost a cent to the corporation to procure and install. I have already interviewed a gas company and they have signified their willingness to supply us.

I am not opposed to Hydro, but do not think it is an opportune time to change when we have so efficient a plant and also owing to the present depression.

One reason Mr. Hope is so anxious to procure Hydro for the town is that he will be able to save $1000 a year by securing it through the village to supply the sash factory.

There are other matters that I could deal with but time or space will not permit.

I solicit your vote as councillor for 1932.

Wishing you all the compliments of the season.

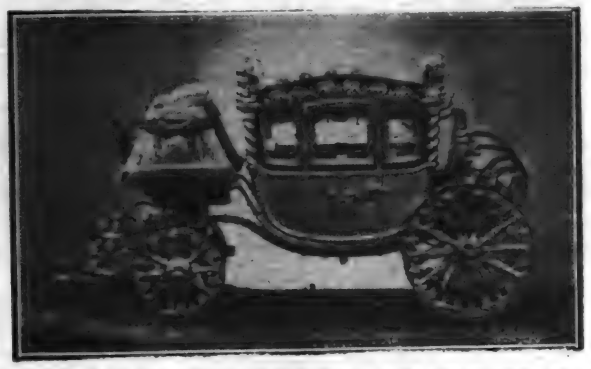
W. C. ANDREW.

BEWARE!

If you would allow me space in your valuable paper, Mr. Editor, I will endeavor to remind the ratepayers of Streetsville of the warning they received from a previous ratepayer re the by-law to install a second waterwheel in the power plant a few years ago. They held a deaf ear to his warning, with the result that the extra wheel was installed and the money spent with very little improvement in the situation. The real trouble then was the same as now, shortage of water supply; and it stands to reason, two wheels would run the water out of the pond quicker than one wheel. They are now asked to vote again on practically the same issue. So beware!

The power plant will supply a good light with its proper load. It is now overloaded by the use of current for electric stoves and appliances other than light. Given a fair chance the plant will light the town as well as ever it did. Any person requiring more current can receive it from the Hydro as some are doing now. The Hydro boosters tell us the rates will be lower, but we have no guarantee of that. The Hydro lines are in good repair now, but the time is not far distant when maintenance will be as big a problem as was the construction of the lines.

Streetsville will be expected to assume the maintenance of the power line as soon as it requires repairs and anybody will have some idea what an extra outlay this will mean. Again I say, Beware!



A RATEPAYER.

WITH THE LONE SCOUTS

Scholarship Opportunities For Lone Scouts

Lone Scouts all over the Province will learn with great interest of the Competition arranged by the Fisher Body Craftsman's Guild, sponsored by the Fisher Body Corporation, division of General Motors, which is open to all Canadian and American boys between the ages of 12 and 19.

The prizes are four $5,000 Scholarships, which will carry the winners through any four year university course of their selection, and in addition there will be district prizes ranging from $100 in gold and a free trip to Detroit, down to $15—a grand total amounting to $75,000.

This is a veritable challenge to Scout Ingenuity and love of "making something," for the competition consists of building a model coach in the replica of the State Coach of the Emperor Napoleon of France.

The purpose of the competition is the encouragement of interest in fine craftsmanship and the development of craftsmen capable of applying such art to the designing and making of automobile bodies, furniture and other commodities in which the commercial art of our day finds a place.

As far as Scouting is concerned it is interesting to note that the building of these models touches the requirements of no less than eight Canadian Scout Proficiency Badges, and so much value is placed on this project that our Chief Executive Commissioner, Mr. John H. Stiles, has consented to act as an Honorary President of the Canadian Section of the Guild.

Enrollment, for which there is no charge, can be made with any dealer in General Motors automobiles, or by applying direct to Fisher Body Craftsman's Guild, Oshawa, Ont.

On receipt of the enrollment at Guild Headquarters the applicant will be sent a membership card, bronze button, booklet of rules and set of colour prints and instructions.

Seven Canadian districts have been formed for the purpose of this competition and one of these comprises the Province of Ontario.

Two Age Divisions.—The competition has been divided into two divisions, Junior, for boys 12 to 15 inclusive, and Senior, boys 16 to 19 inclusive.

Lone Scouts who are interested in Handicraft work are urged to enroll in this competition, and to obtain all particulars about it as it constitutes a unique opportunity for your self improvement which possibly will not again occur during your boyhood.

Lone Scouts are reminded that the new 1932 Canadian Scout Diary is now available. This book is a mine of Scouting information as well as serving the purpose of an ordinary Diary.

Every Lonie should possess one of these and they may be obtained from Lone Scout Headquarters for 20c each, post paid. Order your copy to-day.

Information regarding the Lone Scouts of Ontario may be obtained from Lone Scout Headquarters, 330 Bay Street, Toronto 2. —"LONE E."

High Seas in Mid Atlantic

When the north Atlantic waves are whipped to cold green fury, by the gale, this expanse of sea, known to mariners as the western ocean, surpasses anything else Neptune has to offer. This is a view from a liner during a recent gale when great ships were delayed 24 hours and beaten from their course.

Infant Mortality Declining in West

Correspondence Educational Service Big Factor in B.C.

Ottawa.—Increasing use of the prenatal and post-natal correspondence educational service operated by the Provincial Department of Health in co-operation with the Canadian Council on Child and Family Welfare, was a contributing factor to the record low infantile death rate in British Columbia, Dr. H. E. Young, health officer for that province, said in an address here. Dr. Young was a delegate to the meeting of the child hygiene section of the council which was attended by every provincial health officer in the Dominion with the exception of Nova Scotia.

British Columbia had reduced its infantil mortality from 54 out of 1,000 in 1921 to 43 in 1930, the lowest in the Dominion and among the lowest in the world, it was stated. Reports from other provinces disclosed an increasing spread in public education on infantile health matters.

The correspondence system provides for all who apply for it a series of letters extending over a period of nine months prior to the birth of the child to twelve months after. It was estimated that 20 per cent. of the mothers of the 243,000 children born in Canada last year had taken advantage of the form of motherhood education. The system was organized in 1926 and 1,100 mothers took advantage of it the first year. Last year the number had increased to 60,457.

The course is administered by the council and at the expense of the Canadian Life Insurance Officers' Association.

The Drawback

A minor actress was given a small speaking part in a curtain-raiser. She spoke with a pronounced lisp, apparently unaware of the fact, and the writer of the playlet worked in a lisp in the few lines that were given to her. After the first rehearsal he asked her how she liked her part.

"Fine," was the reply, "but there'th one thing I think rather thilly. Why do you make me play it with a lithp?"

A wide-spreading, hopeful disposition is our only true umbrella in this vale of tears.—T. B. Aldrich.

South Africa and the Gold Standard

Cape Argus.—It is unfortunate that there is so little prospect of the early return of Great Britain to the gold standard, as that would settle the whole trouble. But that event can only take place after prolonged international negotiations with a view to putting the gold standard on a better footing. It must not, however, be overlooked that the British Government is resolutely determined to restore the trade balance, and when that is accomplished the British pound will be for all practical purposes stabilized, and the risk of linking up with sterling would be less serious than it is to-day. South Africa is involved in a world crisis of which the difficulties in Great Britain are a mere symptom. While, therefore, the importance of sticking to gold if we can should not be underrated, it would be unwise for the Government to be unduly influenced by any concern for economic independence. The lesson of the present crisis lies in the revelations which it affords of the financial interdependence of the countries of the world. And the Government may ultimately have to choose the lesser of two risks.

Many Killed During Dense Fog Over England

London.—England recently experienced one of the densest fogs in recent years. Numerous accidents at sea and on highways and railroads with a loss of approximately twenty lives testified to unusual intensity of atmospheric conditions.

Two persons were known dead and about 50 Christmas shoppers were injured in a train wreck at Dagenham Dock. A freight train which struck a passenger train carried a cargo of benzine which fortunately was not ignited. Two coaches, occupied mostly by women and children, were telescoped.

The crew of fifteen of the trawler Girdelness were believed lost when the ship went ashore and was broken in two by an explosion near Thorshavn, Faroe Islands.

For the first time in 1931 not a single incoming air liner was able to reach Croydon airdrome. Visibility was about 10 yards.

New Figure Reached In Tobacco Production

The production of Canadian leaf tobacco has made a new record this year. According to a preliminary estimate prepared jointly by the Dominion Department of Agriculture and the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, the crop this season is 48,230,000 pounds. The highest record in the past was 43,910,000 pounds in 1927, while the next highest was 41,976,000 pounds in 1928. Last year the crop amounted to 36,716,000 pounds. The present year is thus over 30 per cent. above last year and approximately 9 per cent. higher than the record.

The most notable features of the season of 1931 are the tremendous increases in the production of bright, flue-cured and Burley tobacco. Preliminary estimates indicate a crop of over 21,000,000 pounds of the former and over 18,000,000 pounds of the latter, compared with 12,384,000 pounds and 13,287,750 pounds, respectively, in 1930. The entire increase in flue production has taken place in the New Belt, that is in the Counties of Oxford, Norfolk and Elgin. There has been a proportionate expansion in the district, with the bulk of the crop being grown in the Old Belt of Kent and Essex. The growing of dark air-cured and fire-cured tobacco has continued the downward trend noted last year. Cigar leaf is about the same, but Quebec pipe tobaccos show decreases. Production in British Columbia has more than doubled, both Burley and bright flue sharing the increase. Of the total production, it is estimated that 40,860,000 pounds is from Ontario, 7,180,000 pounds from Quebec and 190,000 pounds from British Columbia.

Canada's Ports for Canada's Trade

Montreal Presse (Ind.): The transportation problem in Canada will be solved only when we take measures to dispatch our merchandise destined for export, especially grain, and to distribute merchandise entering from abroad, by the transportation route and the ports of the Dominion. If we were to make certain, for example, that our ocean terminals were used for the dispatch of the 54,000,000 bushels of Canadian wheat which left New York in 1930, the situation would be much improved. Common sense, logic, and our own interest demand that we should help our own country before playing into the hands of the Americans, who are well known to be our most redoubtable rivals in the commercial field.

Quebec Leads In Population Gain

B.C. Highest Percentage Increase—Only Two Provinces Show Decrease

The largest absolute gain in population during Canada's past ten years was made by Quebec.

British Columbia made the largest percentage gain.

This is revealed by the 1931 census, the preliminary figures of which give Canada a total population of 10,358,778. The actual increase in all the provinces is 1,565,829, and the whole percentage increase is 17.82.

All provinces show increases excepting Prince Edward Island, which records a minus of 575, and Nova Scotia, recording a minus of 11,810.

The Toronto Globe finds that the rate of population growth in Ontario has been well maintained during the past decade. Of the eighty-two electoral districts in the province, it appears that all but twenty-five show an increase. The larger increases have been, of course, in the districts with city population, and this daily continues:

"Northern Ontario shows numerous advances, especially in important mining camps. Some of the purely agricultural ridings in older Ontario show a decrease, but the continued increase in production shows that mechanical improvements and better methods have overcome the slight reduction in population on the farms. This is a side of population shifts sometimes overlooked. Certainly the production records of the past few years show that Ontario need have no anxiety over the outlook for food."

The population of each province and of all the provinces together, including actual increase, percentage increase, and the loss in Prince Edward Island and in Nova Scotia are shown in official figures of the Canadian Department of Trade and Commerce as follows:

Immigration Shows Decrease of 75 P.C.

Newcomers to Canada For Seven Months Total 19,390

Ottawa.—According to a statement issued recently by the Hon. W. A. Gordon, Minister of Immigration and Colonization, immigration for the months of April to October, inclusive, which covers the season of active immigration, was as follows: April, 3,201; May, 3,818; June, 3,169; July, 2,541; August, 2,250; September, 2,355; October, 2,056, a total of 19,390 persons, compared with 77,544 arrivals during the corresponding period of 1930. This represents a decrease of 75 per cent. Of the arrivals for the seven months 14,496 were women and children, mostly the dependents of settlers already established in Canada.

During the same period 13,641 Canadians who had gone to the United States returned to make their homes in Canada. These were not, however, counted as immigrants.

Million Dollar Rain In Regina District

Regina. — Southern Saskatchewan, where King Winter had started his reign, blanketed under a white coating of snow, was recently turned into a vast area of mud and slush, the streets of its towns and cities running water.

All but the largest of snowbanks have disappeared, extensive sheets of ice have turned to water and temperatures which average 30 above zero are the rule.

Only a week before Christmas the province was soaked by a "million dollar rain," which extended from the eastern boundary to the west.

English Firm Will Open In Brantford

Brantford, Ont.—The third new industry to be secured for Brantford in the past few weeks, Colade of Ontario, Limited, representing the Sussex Bitumen Co. of London, England, has leased the former Westrumite plant here. The company will manufacture many lines of bitumen products, not now manufactured in Canada.

Berlin Cuts Price For Fuel and Light

Berlin.—A 15 per cent. reduction in retail coal prices was ordered recently by Dr. Karl Goerdeler, burgomaster of Leipsig and "price dictator" appointed under the recent emergency decree. The city gas gas works, serving most of Berlin, also announced a 10 per cent. reduction. Both cuts become effective January 1.

Three New Strawberries Introduced to U.S. Growers

Washington.—Three new hybrid strawberries, the Bellmar, Southland and Redheart, are now being introduced by the United States Department of Agriculture for trial by growers. The new varieties are adapted to distinct localities and to different purposes.

The Bellmar is recommended as a general market berry in New Jersey, Deleware, Maryland, eastern Pennsylvania and Virginia. The Southland is suggested as a high-quality home garedn variety for the Southern States from North Carolina to southern Georgia. The Redheart is introduced as a canning berry for trial in the Pacific Northwest.

The Bellmar originated from a cross of Missionary and Howard 17. It is prolific and bears large, attractive berries. The Southland is the result of a cross between Ettersburg 80 and Howard 17, made in 1920. The fruit is considered too soft for a market variety, but is recommended for home use. In many parts of the South plants grow all winter. It is one of the first varieties to blossom and bear fruit in the spring. The Redheart originated from a cross of Eureska and Howard 17, made in 1923 at the field station, near Glenn Dale, Md. Field tests in Washington and Oregon indicate that it is highly productive and adapted to that region.

Serious Food Shortage Faced in the Labrador

Saint John's, Nfld.—A shortage of food in Labrador was disclosed recently by officers of the Government mail boat, which completed its last voyage along the Labrador coast until spring.

The officers said the populations at various ports had expected the mail steamer to bring relief supplies and were "frantic" when they found no food abroad.

Unless the present food supply, which is not sufficient for the winter, is augmented before the coast becomes ice-bound, the officers said, a serious situation may develop.

The Grenfell station at Battle Harbor sent emergency relief supplies to Red Bay and Forteau, in Canadian Labrador.

Dominion Canned Clams Shipped to China

Canadian canned clams prepared on the Pacific Coast have been sent to Hong Kong to test the Chinese market for this commodity. More than 500 tons of clams last year were sold by one Pacific company and the product is increasing in favor.

Either I will find a way, or I will make one.—Sir Philip Sidney.

In The Tornado Zone

A tornado recently swept through Camden, Arkansas, and left the Ouachita county courthouse as above. In addition a five-year old girl lost her life, several persons were injured and vast property losses. This is the second tornado in three days to strike southwestern Arkansas.

Prince of Wales' Ranch Raising Pure-Bred Sheep

Ottawa.—H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, by demonstrating the wool value of high-bred sheep at his famous "E.P." ranch in Alberta, has greatly aided in lifting the standard of sheep raising in Canada. At the Prince of Wales' ranch large flocks of pure-bred sheep are maintained and many of his sheep have won first prizes at Canadian and United States stock shows.

The "E.P." ranch is operated strictly on a business basis by Professor Carlyle and flock rams have been specially imported from the best flocks of the breed in Great Britain and more recently from California for the object of a further improvement in the wool-producing qualities of the "E.P." flock.

Prince George Celebrates Twenty-Ninth Birthday

London.—Prince George, the King's youngest son, celebrated his twenty-ninth birthday anniversary on Dec. 19th, with his eldest brother, the Prince of Wales, at the latter's Sunningdale home at Fort Belvedere.

The brothers have common tastes, and are close friends as well. Prince George has taken up bachelor quarters with the Prince of Wales at York House, St. James's Palace.

How to play Bridge AUCTION and CONTRACT

by Wynne Ferguson

Author of "PRACTICAL AUCTION BRIDGE"

ARTICLE No. 3

In what way does this expert differ from any other auction player? Has he more imagination, more courage, more resourcefulness, more originality? What particular quality makes his stand out among his fellows? If there is anything that we don't understand, we usually subject it to a close examination and analysis, so let's do the same with the expert. Let us place him under the microscope and let its lens magnify his tactics. Let us observe and analyze his bidding and play.

The following hand is illustrative of the writer's contention that, in the language of sport, the expert "has everything."

	Y
A		B
	Z

Hearts—A, 10, 9, 7
Clubs—Q
Diamonds—A, K, 10, 5
Spades—K, Q, 8, 7

No score, rubber game. The expert, Z, dealt and bid one diamond, a perfect example of the four-card suit bid in preference to the no trump. The singleton club is a danger spot in no trump because a good player with a set-up club suit and the lead would pass the no trump. In this particular hand, A had a six-card club suit and his partner the ace of spades, so that a no trump bid by Z would have failed to make the contract by one trick. Z, however, possessed the first requisite of the expert: good judgment; so he bid one diamond. A passed and Y bid two diamonds to give his partner another chance to bid. B passed and Z now had to do a little thinking. Y's bid of two diamonds indicated a willingness on his part to have Z bid another suit. This suit could be either clubs, hearts or spades.

The expert figured that his partner would not bid two diamonds merely to obtain a club bid from him because it is just as difficult to go game at clubs as in diamonds. There would be nothing to gain by such tactics so Y must be prepared for a heart or spade bid. Z, therefore, bid two spades. A passed and Y bid three diamonds. B passed and Z was now certain that Y was hoping for a heart bid so bid three hearts with the greatest assurance in the world. All passed. Y's hand was as follows:

Hearts—K, 8, 6, 4
Clubs—J, 7
Diamonds—Q, J, 9, 7, 2
Spades—6, 4

At hearts Z made four odd, losing only one heart, one club and one spade trick. At diamonds, the result would have been the same, so the expert's imagination and clear analysis of his partner's bidding gave him a game not otherwise possible. How many players would have bid this hand like the expert?

At Contract, the bidding would have been the same up to Z's three-heart bid. His partner, Y, would then have bid four hearts.

The foregoing hand was not selected as unusual but only as representative of the margin of superiority that the expert has over the average player. To excel at Auction and Contract, as in any other game, the expert must "have everything." He must be able to do the right thing at the right time and it is this quality that is most strongly evident in the hand given. It may seem easy and the expert's play and bidding the natural thing to do, but how many players could honestly say that in actual play they would have done the same? If they can, they are in the class of the expert. If not, they still have something to which to look forward. We cannot all be experts, but we can all improve our game by analyzing the expert's methods and profiting thereby. Put the expert "Under the Lens" at every opportunity and you canot help but benefit. Another example will be given in a later article.

Solution to Last Week's Problem

	Hearts—K, 8, 7, 3, 2 Clubs—none Diamonds—none Spades—A, 10
Hearts—Q, 6 Clubs—K, 10, 4, 2 Diamonds—none Spades—Q	Y A B Z	Hearts—9, 5 Clubs—8, 7 Diamonds—10, 4, 3 Spades—none
	Hearts—none Clubs—A, Q, 5 Diamonds—none Spades—9, 5, 4, 2

There are no trumps and Z is in the lead. How can Y Z win five of the seven tricks against any defense?

Solution.—Z should lead the deuce of spades. A must play the queen and Y should play the ten, thus allowing A to win the trick. B should discard the seven of clubs. A now has the choice of two leads: (a) He may lead a heart or (b) a club.

(a) Suppose A decides to lead a heart. If he leads the six of hearts, Y should play the king and lead back the deuce of hearts, which A must win. On these tricks Z should discard the five of clubs and the four of spades. A is thus obliged to lead a club up to the ace queen in Z's hand. On the first lead of clubs, Y should discard the ace of spades and thus all of Z's cards are good. If at trick No. 2, A leads the queen of hearts, Y should let it hold the trick. If A then leads another heart, all of Y's cards are good. If he then leads a club, all of Z's cards are good, Y discarding the ace of spades as before.

(b) Suppose A leads a low club at trick No. 2. Y should discard the ace of spades and thus all of Z's cards become good except the five of clubs at the end. In all cases, there Y Z must win five of the seven tricks against any defense.

False Solution: Suppose Y wins the first spade trick. He must then lead hearts. If he leads a low heart, B will win the trick with the nine and make his diamonds. If Y leads the king of hearts, A should play the queen and thus enable B to win the second heart trick. Played in this way, Y Z can only win three tricks.

This is a good example of not allowing an opponent to force the lead in one's hand when by so doing one or more tricks will be lost.

Soviet Government Turns to Arctic for Chemicals

Russia in its quest for chemicals has invaded the Arctic.

An apatite plant, scheduled to produce this year more than a million tons of concentrates, used chiefly for fertilizer, was recently opened in the Khibiny Mountains, according to Basile W. Delgass, former vice-president of the Amtorg Trading Company. He says in reporting Soviet scientific explorations for Industrial and Engineering Chemistry, journal of the American Chemical Society, that the factory is beyond the Arctic Circle, eighty miles north of the White Sea, and approximately 100 miles inland from the Arctic Ocean. He goes on:

"Huge stones, remnants of the glacial periods, block the entrances to the valleys. The peaks are covered by perpetual snows, and dreary tundra lies for hundreds of miles around.

"The cost of the plant is 5,000,000 gold rubles (about $2,500,000) and it has a scheduled production of 1,100,000 tons in 1931, 2,000,000 tons in 1932, and 3,000,000 tons in 1933. Part of the apatite produced is exported to Europe, and it is rumored that negotiations are being conducted with a view to exporting apatite concentrates to the United States.

"An appropriation of 60,000,000 gold rubles has been recently voted by the Council of Peoples' Commissars to increase the existing plant and to construct other plants in this region."

Russian engineers designed the new project, but American specialists were also consulted.

The problem of production of superphosphates in Russia is far from being solved, we are told. In spite of all the technical help received by the Russians from Germany and extensive study of the process in the United States, superphosphate plants in Russia do not work satisfactorily.

Difficulties which the Russians are encountering in the operation of some of their chemical factories were revealed in the recent trial of several engineers in that country, Mr. Delgass observes. "Of course no trials can help," he adds, "when there is a lack of knowledge, and where untrained men are appointed as managers of chemical plants."

Growing Populations

The N. Y. Times.—Among the many things in the present world which the pre-war imagination would have found it hard to believe is population in France growing at least as fast as in Germany. The recent French census with a population of 41,835,000 showed a gain of 2,625,000 over the year 1921. The rate of annual increase is seven-tenths of one per cent. For Germany in the years 1927-29 the indicated annual increase was six-tenths of one per cent. The change has been brought about by an acceleration in French increase and a more than corresponding decline in Germany. In the last five years, for instance, France gained 1,100,000 inhabitants, whereas the five-year increment before the war averaged 325,000. In Germany, on the other hand, the annual rate of increase is less than half of what it was before the war.

Stories — Ancient and Modern

By TANTALUS in "John O'London"

I make no apology for including amongst this selection a few stories that may not have the lines of a 1931 model. For some old stories have the bouquet of a good old wine, and age cannot wither them nor custom stale. Besides, there is always the chance that someone, somewhere, may not have heard them all!

Perhaps a funny story should never be written down at all, for how uninspiring even our most successful piece of drollery appears in cold print! Yet, given the time and the place, maybe that even the most unpromising of these that follow will set the table in a roar. May it be so! There is, at least, variety here, something for everybody, for one man's joke is not another's. I have known quite a lot of people—Scotsmen mainly—who refuse to laugh at this. "Question.—How can you make a Scotsman happy in his old age? Answer.—Tell him a joke when he is young."

The Wrong Hat

And talking of Scotsmen, how could one begin better than with this one?—

A worthy Scot had been persuaded to become an elder. Mistrusting his power to produce the extempore prayer sometimes called for, he pasted a prayer in his tall hat so that he should never be caught unprepared. Very soon after this, the minister was late in arriving at a funeral, and the elder was called upon. He hurried into the hall for his hat, and bowed reverently over it. And then to the astonishment of the mourners, he cried out in agitation, "Guidness, this is no' my hat."

A party of clergymen, having lost their train, remained overnight at the local inn. Expecting no other visitors, the landlord put them in the Commercial room because it was the only room with a fire. After a meal they were chatting merrily round the hearth when a traveller popped his head in, and on seeing the unaccustomed assembly was about to withdraw hastily. The situation was explained, and before long the late comer had joined in the talk. The conversation turned to dreams, and one of the parsons related how he had dreamt he was in heaven and how lovely it was. Then the traveller said, "I had a similar kind of dream, but unfortunately I found myself in the other place." "Oh," said one, archly, "what was it like there?" "Well," replied the traveller, "something like this: I couldn't get near the fire for parsons."

Parsons

Here is another with the same protagonists:—

A parson invariably carried in his pocket a bottle of an Indian pickle of his own make, for which he had a passion. Staying at a small hotel where the only other guest was a commercial traveller, the parson produced the inevitable pickle at lunch, and pressed the traveller to partake. He did so, and when he regained his breath, he began, "You are a parson, I believe?" "Yes." "Now, tell me, do you ever preach about damnation and hell-fire?" "Oh, yes." "I thought so, and you are the only parson I ever knew who carried samples."

Still another about a parson:—

A clergyman who had sacked his cook received an inquiry from her prospective employer with regard to his use of the term "Biblical cook" in his reference. He replied, "Dear Madam,—The term clearly expresses my meaning. Everything my late cook did was either a burnt offering or a bloody sacrifice."

Puffing and Blowing

McCulloch had been showing off the beauties of his native land to an American visitor, who kept up "Old Glory's" reputation of belittling everything he saw. After likening the Forth Bridge to a "pretty piece of child's fretwork," the noble Tay to a "Brooklet," and Schiehallion to a "rather tricky bunker," they came at last to Loch Lomond. "Now," said Jonathan, "that really is something I must admire, and I guess if it were possible, I'd take that same sheet of water right over to Schenectady." "That's aisily dane," said Mac. "Jist trail a bit pipie across the pond wi' ye, an' if yo can sook as weel's ye can blaw, ye'll hae it there in nae time."

A jovial customer in a cafe gave his order to a somewhat dour-looking waitress. "A couple of boiled eggs and a kind word, please." The eggs were brought. "Now for the kind word, miss." The girl leaned forward to whisper in his ear: "Don't eat those eggs."

The skipper of the Annie Laurie engaged at the last moment before sailing from Aberdeen two deckhands, Mackenzie and McCraig. Mackenzie had a good character, a fact which the 'Old Man' was always rubbing in to McCraig, who hadn't. "Aye, aye," was invariably the latter's dour comment.

Soon the smack encountered very dirty weather and Mackenzie, coming up to swab the deck, was swept, bucket in hand, into the mountainous sea. McCraig, having witnessed this catastrophe, sought the skipper.

"Ye ken yon mon Mackenzie—him wi' the guid character?" he queried.

"Weel?"

"Weel; he's awa' wi' your bucket."

An explorer travelling in Africa came upon an elephant which was in acute pain. Regardless of danger, and with considerable difficulty, he extracted a thorn from the animal's foot. Years afterwards he visited a circus where the chief attraction was the performance of some trained elephants. One of these, in the act of performing his trick, stopped, trumpeted shrilly, and charged towards the auditorium. Pandemonium ensued, but the creature calmly lifted the explorer from his one-and-tenpenny seat, and placed him in the five-and-nines.

True!

The excuse for including the following is that it is guaranteed authentic!—

Some years ago in a north country seaside town, there was displayed a phrenologist's card with this inscription, "Heads examined 1s. each." Two yokels read it, and one was overheard to say to the other, "Heids examined for 1s. each! Why, the fella's a feul, when ye can buy a tuppenny comb and see for yersel."

A clergyman was much surprised one day at receiving a basket of potatoes from an old woman of his parish, with a message saying that, as he had remarked during his sermon of the previous Sunday that "common taters" (commentators) did not agree with him, she had sent him some real good ones.

Two revellers, who had dined too well, got into their sports two-seater late one night, and zig-zagged down Piccadilly. The passenger, vaguely alarmed at the erratic course they were taking, murmured sleepily, "I say, Algy, old boy, I think you ought to drive a bit more carefully." "Goo' lor'," said Algy, "goo' lor', I thought you were driving."

The report of the death of a city merchant was, like Mark Twain's, "grossly exaggerated." Thinking to reassure one of his friends he rang him up, and said, "Did you see the report in this morning's paper that I was dead?" "Good gracious, no," replied his friend; "where are you telephoning from?"

"A pantomime is like a cigar," remarked the theatre manager on the first night of the new show. "How's that?" asked his friend. "Well," was the explanation, "if it's good everybody wants a box, and if it's bad no amount of puffing will make it draw."

350,400 Chances to Make Good in 1932!

There are 365 days in 1932, with sixteen waking hours in each and sixty minutes in each of these hours.

If our arithmetic is correct, that gives each of us 350,400 waking moments in 1932, in any one of which we may stir our ambition, may hear the call to higher ideals, to self improvement or in any of which our machinery of thought may evolve a splendid idea—may set us on the road to the heights of success.

Each of these moments, tiny segments of eternity, is a portion of our life, each a potential crisis for better or worse in our life—they seem many in their total of a lifetime—yet how swiftly we pass through them—we pass, note, the moments do not.

Wouldn't it be well to make 1932 count more in the use of these precious fragments of our lives than we've ever done before?

No matter how bad you aim, when you throw bouquets at a man they always hit the right spot.

Men were digging a ditch in a wet, sticky soil that was in danger of flooding.

The men were out of the ditch like a flash.

Foreman shouting)—"All in!"

The men tumbled back into the ditch, thinking taht the call had been a false alarm.

Foreman (shouting)—"All out!"

Out tumbled the men.

Foreman (shouting)—"All in!"

And they disappeared once again in the ditch, grumbling a little.

After half-a-dozen repetitions of this business the workmen became angry and asked the foreman what he meant by it.

One Workman very demanding)—"What's the game? There's no water coming and there's no sign of a cave-in."

Foreman (smiling)—"I know there isn't, but I find that you fellows take out more dirt on your boots than you do on your shovels.

You'd think a man who was rich enough to quit work at 3 o'clock and play golf all afternoon would be happy, but golf seems to take all the joy out of life for most men.

"I Will"—A New Year Resolve

I will start afresh this new year with a higher, fairer creed;

I will cease to stand complaining of my ruthless neighbor's greed;

I will cease to sit repining while my duty's call is clear;

I will waste no moment whining, and my heart shall know no fear;

I will look sometimes about me for the things that merit praise;

I will search for hidden beauties that elude the grumbler's gaze;

I will try to find contentment in the paths that I may tread;

I will cease to have resentment when another gets ahead;

I will not be swayed by envy when my rival's strength is shown;

I will not deny his merit, but will try to prove my own;

I will try to see the beauty spread before me, rain or shine;

I will cease to preach YOUR duty and be more concerned with MINE.

Canada Silk Industry

For five years in succession the silk industry of Canada has shown increases in the value of production. Even in 1930, a year of slackened trade generally, the output of the silk industry rose by over 20 per cent. Silk manufacturing is one of the newer industries of the Dominion and the rapidity of its growth has been remarkable. Records are available since 1917, and in the intervening period the value of production has risen by over 650 per cent.

The growth of the industry has been well sustained throughout the 13 years, although there have been some fluctuations. In 1917 the value of production was $2,372,000. By 1920, when prices were at their height, it had risen to $5,376,751. In the next five years there were fluctuations, and in 1925 the value of the output was $5,483,363. From that year on, however, the balance was unbroken. In 1928 the value reached $10,897,273. In 1929 it was $14,476,080, and in 1930 it rose to $17,808,598. In the five years between 1925 and 1930, it will be observed, the value of the product was more than trebled.

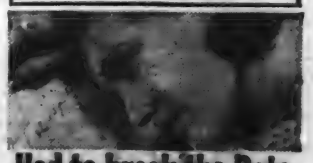
The Canadian silk industry is divided into two distinct branches, real silk and artificial silk. However, owing to the fact that there are only two plants in the latter section, the particulars for the artificial silk industry are not available separately. In 1930, in the two branches of the industry together, there were 25 plants in operation, all of them in the Provinces of Quebec and Ontario. The plants in Quebec numbered 15, with only one plant producing artificial yarns, the larger part of which was used by the same firm for weaving artificial silk fabrics. In Ontario there were 10 plants, one of which manufactured only artificial silk yarns, which were sold to hosiery and knit goods mills and to producers of silk fabrics.

In Father's Footsteps

The vicar called at the home of one of his parishioners, and for a while was left in the room with the pride of the family.

He patted the little fellow's head affectionately, and said by way of making conversation: "You look a good little boy. I suppose you always do what your mother tells you?"

The boy stopped tinkering with the family wireless-set, and said: "Yes, vicar, and so does daddy."



SUSPICION

Suspicion is the companion of mean souls, and the bane of all good society.

In Britain divorces are becoming much more common. In 1871 there were 166 cases in England, Scotland and Wales; in 1929 there were 3,396.

Castoria
made especially for CHILDREN

CHILDREN usually hate to take medicine but every child loves the taste of Castoria. And mothers like its action—so gentle, yet so prompt and effective.

Castoria is a never-failing comfort to children and mothers alike because it was formulated expressly for children—to correct their little ills and upsets.

The beauty of it is you can give Castoria to children of all ages with equally sure results. When baby's cry warns of colic, a few drops of Castoria has him soothed; and free from pain, he is asleep again in a jiffy.

In an older child when coated tongue or bad breath tell of constipation, a more liberal dose is usually all that is needed to cleanse and regulate the bowels.

Your doctor will tell you Castoria deserves a place in the family medicine cabinet until your children are grown. He knows it is safe for the tiniest baby; effective for a child in his teens.

LETTER OF THANKS

The following letter was received by Mrs. William Kemp, of Streetsville, and shows how pleased the people of Saskatchewan were to receive supplies from the people of Ontario. This letter makes good reading and is only one of the many received by citizens of this district.

Acquadell, Sask., Dec. 5. 1931.
Elma A. Kemp.
Dear Friend:

I am dropping a line in regards to a note found in an apple barrel which was sent out to us to be divided amongst the people in this district.

The apples were fine and they sure look good to us out here.

There was a truck load of vegetables and fruit brought out to each school district and divided. Each family was given according to the number in the family, as for instance, a family of six received one bag of carrots, 20 pds. beets, 15 pds. parsnips, 1 pd. onions, 1 pumpkin, 1 squash, 3 cabbage heads, 20 pds. apples, 1 jar pickles or preserves and 1 can of beans. This was the way it was given out in our district. And everybody was just tickled to get it. It was real fun to see their smiling faces when they were carrying it all out.

We had no crops this year, not even seed; have cut Russian thistle for fodder. Our gardens never came up until July as we had no rain until the latter part of June. But we had a wonderful fall, so the potaoes came along fairly good. Most have enough for their own use although a lot are small ones. We got a few vegetables, enough for summer use, though they didn't grow so very large.

We want to thank you all with all our hearts for your kindness, as it surely was appreciated by everyone. And I must mention that we never saw such lovely preserves as were in those sealers sent out here, as out in this country all fruit has to be bought and if we can afford any at all we have to mix a lot of water in it to fill a few sealers. This is our third crop failure.

Thanking you again, I remain,
Yours sincerely,
(Mrs.) M. NELSON.

EDEN SUNDAY SCHOOL CHRISTMAS ENTERTAINMENT

It was an evening of great delight for the children of Eden Sunday School when their Christmas entertainment was held last week. From six to eight supper was served by the ladies of the congregation. Another example of what the Eden folk can do to provide food of the most appetizing kind.

A program followed of recitations, dialogues, a pantomime and chorus singing by members of the school. It was stated that this program was one of the best given in many years. The minister, Rev. Geo. H. Purchase, acted as chairman.

Santa Claus came in his usual affable manner, bringing delight to the eyes of the little children. He not only had cheery words for all but he demonstrated in the true Santa Claus spirit that he had something for each member of the school. The gifts were greatly prized by each scholar.

The enjoyable evening was brought to a close by Santa wishing one and all a merry Christmas and a happy New Year and requesting all to sing with him the National Anthem.

The superintendent, Mr. Will Sparling, and his efficient staff are worthy of highest praise for the high standard set in every number given and the splendid ability shown by each one who took part.

Mother of Five Looks for Early Release

When one is only 27 the strain of raising five children on limited financial resources is a burden which would tax any woman's strength and vitality. In the case of slender Mrs. N., none too strong from early years at factory work, the burden pressed her lower and lower to the point where tuberculosis gripped her in all its power.

Fortunately, however, she was sent to the Muskoka Hospital for Consumptives, where the experienced doctors and nurses took her in hand with kindly care. Since then, like a rain-freshened flower, Mrs. N. has responded to the carefully planned treatment and has made splendid progress towards recovery, and is eagerly looking forward to the time when she may return to her little ones.

There are many such cases, but without financial assistance the Muskoka Hospital cannot aid them. A gift from you will be gratefully received if sent to Mr. A. E. Ames, 311 College St., Toronto.

NINETY-SEVENTH SUNDAY SCHOOL ANNIVERSARY

St. Andrew's, Streetsville

An anniversary whether observed in the home or the church, or by the nation, always brings up memories of the past. This was true on Sunday as St. Andrew's School observed its ninety-seventh anniversary. Very many would join with the writer in taking this opportunity of paying their tribute of respect and admiration for the faithful band of workers who since its organization have taught the boys and girls a knowledge of the Bible and through that teaching a large number of each succeeding generation have been brought in the morning of life into personal relationship with Jesus Christ as their Saviour.

The services morning and evening were taken by the Rev. W. M. Kannawin, D.D., Toronto, secretary of Sunday Schools and Young People's work of the Presbyterian Church in Canada.

Dr. Kannawin spoke in the morning to the school, taking for his text Gen. 1: 16, "And God made two great lights; the greater light to rule the day, and the lesser light to rule the night; he made the stars also." He dwelt particularly upon the last clause, "He made the stars also." How much of beauty would have been lost to us in the heavens if He had only created the two great lights. The great importance of Sunday School and church attendance of their families was urged upon parents. He gave a striking example of the importance of Sunday School training and its results in after life by quoting the testimony of a judge of a juvenile court in New York, who during his term of office was called upon to pass judgment on four thousand offenders who were brought before him and out of that number only three had attended Sunday School.

In closing an address which held the interest of all, he asked the scholars to make a New Year's resolution to attend church every Sunday morning at eleven.

The following scholars were presented with certificates and seals by Mr. Wilson on behalf of Mr. Stewart, the superintendent: memory work, Mary McCree, Jeanette Couse, Evelyn Treanor, Floyd Treanor, Rose Hollingshead; seals, Robert Raikes; certificate for regular attendance, for seven years, Erma Bailey, Homer Dunn; for eight years, Elizabeth Bailey.

In addition to the music of the choir, Mr. W. Steen of Galt, a former member of the school, rendered a solo entitled "The Gift."

In the evening there was a large and representative congregation present. The Anglican and United Churches withdrew their evening services in order that their members might have an opportunity of worshipping with us. The Rev. Geo. H. Purchase was asked to take a seat on the platform and read the scripture lesson.

Dr. Kannawin took for his theme, "The unselfish life and life of service to others as exemplified by Christ," text from Matt. 27: 42, "He saved others; himself he cannot save." Dr. Kannawin gave a rendering which he thought brought out the meaning more clearly, "He saved others, but was able not to save himself." Here His enemies paid an unconscious testimony to the fact that he had saved others; and there is no doubt but that he had the power to come down from the cross, but in doing so He could not have been our Saviour. He came to save others, not to save Himself.

The speaker then dwelt in detail on the three temptations of Jesus in the wilderness, bringing out very clearly their connection with the text. The first being the temptation to turn the stones into bread to satisfy His hunger. This was an appeal to immediate necessity. The devil addresses himself to the appetite of the moment, to the supreme impulse of passing time. If Jesus had yielded to this, the result would have been a self-centered and selfish life, but He devoted His powers to saving others, but was able not to save Himself. The second temptation was to cast Himself down from the pinnacle of the temple. This was the short cut to success, by doing so the crowds in the temple courts would have taken Him and made Him king. But Christ's conception of kingship was different from theirs. He wished to reign in the hearts and lives of His people and to attain this end he took the better way, the way of service.

The third temptation was to fall down and worship satan and if He would do so he would give Him the kingdoms of this world and the glory of them. How subtle this temptation was, for that was what Christ came to get. This was the temptation of ambition. But Christ was able to refuse. The speaker closed with a strong appeal not to sacrifice the best things in life and that the secret of success was found in the life of service.

The music and singing was most appropriate and the solos by Mrs. Rankin and Mr. Steen were much appreciated.

Here and There

A new railway record, and a different one, was established recently when John Caesar, called at the Vancouver office of the Canadian Pacific Railway for his jubilee pay cheque. Mr. Caesar has 60 years service to his credit.

Canada's gold production in September hit a new record, being 240,222 ounces, as compared with 225,630 produced in August and 178,291 ounces in September 1930. The Dominion has been a gold-producing country for more than 70 years.

And now the eyes of the world are focussed on that greatest of all travellers, Santa Claus, who seems to have weathered transportation and financial problems once more. Just a good old Christmas custom!

One can vizualise thousands of pairs of skis being waxed, now that the snow is here to stay. Then it will be "All aboard" for Quebec, Banff, Field or Revelstoke, or anywhere where there is a real good hill.

And, speaking of Quebec, Jack Strathdee, who was on loan to Lucerne-in-Quebec last winter, is back at the Chateau Frontenac, Quebec, as winter sports' director, once more, with a lot of good ideas and a smart staff of instructors. Jack is well known throughout Canada. Incidentally he's a fine performer at the piano.

Pacific Coast ports, and indeed shipping circles throughout Canada, are mourning the passing of Captain James W. Troup, aged 76, a native of Portland, Ore., pioneer in coastwise shipping and for 36 years manager of the B.C. coastal service of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Sino-Japanese war reports are causing more geographies to be consulted than is popularly imagined. Chin Chow, for example is almost as entertaining in its many phases as was its namesake with the prefix "Chu", during the days of 1914-1918. Besides, it's the only war we've got!

The Regina Rough Riders got a rough ride from M.A.A.A., although they earned a whole lot of applause. The Montreal team found them just about the same as the Mustangs, whom they had trimmed also 22 to 0 a week before. Harnessing the gee-gees to the Winged Wheel, so to speak!

"The Four Hundred" has long been synonymous for the people who do the right things. It is fitting, therefore that it should also be the total of the passengers on the first cruise around the world by the new wonder-ship "Empress of Britain", which left New York on December 3.

With the Canadian dollar where it is in the market, there is a marked tendency to keep it at home and many Canadians are spending, or planning to spend, the winter amid the beauties of British Columbia, instead of "going south". Fifteen per cent can mean a whole lot of dollars and the British Columbia coastline is one of nature's most beautiful spots, anyway.

There are 32,209 schools or colleges in Canada, taught by 33,144 teachers and attended by 2,490,623 pupils, or one quarter of the Dominion's population. The average expenditure is about $66 on each pupil enrolled. Attendance is on the up grade, being 77 per cent for the whole Dominion, as against 64.7 in 1919. And the future of technical education is assured, for the Technical Education Act provides for Federal grants of $750,000 per year for 15 years, which means that the night schools will be able to run, to say nothing of the day courses in technical institutions. 806.

Canada has a farmer crop of potatoes this year with an official preliminary estimate putting the total 1931 yield at 32,558,330 bushels from 576,200 acres as compared with 30,401,666 bushels from 571,300 acres in 1930.

Canada is the pioneer in fish culture on this continent. The first fry hatched from artificially fertilized eggs in Canada were produced in 1858 and fish culture was established as a Dominion Government service in 1867.

Britishers are eating Canadian eggs this year with their breakfast bacon. Estimates for 1931 place a figure of 20,000 cases, each of 30 dozen eggs, for export to Great Britain. Last year it was only 6,500 cases.

The fur trade is still one of Canada's big assets. In 1667 furs to the value of 550,000 francs were exported to France. Last year their value was placed at $17,187,399, mostly to Great Britain and the United States.

Grain traffic handled by the Canadian Pacific for October last shows a considerable increase over that carried for October, 1930. A total of 17,921 cars was loaded last month from the Prairie Provinces as compared with a total of 13,573 cars in October, 1930.

Idle since the first week of October, the mill of the British Empire Steel plant at Sydney, N.S., is again in operation, giving full time employment of six days a week to upwards of 200 men. They are rolling soft steel for a number of orders recently placed with the company.

With a trail mileage of 7,162 miles to his credit and having to date seen 424 moose, 69 cariboo and 494 deer in New Brunswick, E. L. Pope, of Boston, Mass., is back in the New Brunswick forests on his 27th hunting trip in 29 seasons. He will spend several weeks on this trip.

Nat. Cornfoot, colorful golf pro at the Canadian Pacific Langara course, Vancouver, for the past five and a half years, sailed by the Empress of Russia recently for Tokio where he will act as golf instructor at the Fuji Shokai Club course. This organization operates a huge indoor layout in addition to its outdoors links.

Major John W. Sifton, one of the proprietors of the Manitoba Free Press, Winnipeg, seated at his writing desk in his private residence at Toronto recently, pulled a lever which, through the medium of Canadian Pacific Telegraphs transmission wires, set in motion the new ten unit speed press just erected in the Free Press offices at a cost of $300,000. The new press has a rated maximum capacity of more than 100,000 forty-page papers per hour.

Twelve hundred colonies of screened bees and their accompanying queens from the Province of Alberta to China was the unique feature of the Canadian export trade to the Orient and of the shipments aboard the Empress of Russia recently. The European and American bee produces nearly twice as much honey as its Asiatic brother that has been exploited by the Chinese since the time of Confucius. (799)

THE

TULE MARSH MURDER

STORY OF A MISSING ACTRESS AND THE TAXING OF WITS TO EXPLAIN HER FATE.

BY NANCY BARR MAVITY.

SYNOPSIS.

Don Ellsworth's wife, formerly actress Sheila O'Shay, disappears. Dr. Cavanaugh, criminal psychologist, learns their married life has been unhappy. He identifies a charred body found in the tule marsh as that of Sheila. Barbara, his daughter, faints when she hears him tell this to Peter Piper, a Herald reporter.

When Mrs. Kane, Sheila's maid, is arrested, she admits that Ellsworth married Sheila under threat of breach of promise. A threatening note signed "David Orme" is found in the murdered woman's safe. Peter tells Orme and arrests him. Orme's trial for the murder of Sheila comes up. Ellsworth, in the witness stand, admits he was forced into marriage.

CHAPTER XXXIX.—(Cont'd.)

"Silence, gentlemen! Mr. Ellsworth!" The voice of the judge ripped across the turmoil. "The last remarks may be stricken from the record. Mr. Ellsworth, kindly confine yourself to answering the questions."

"I thought your idea was to find out the truth," Ellsworth turned furiously upon the judge, as if confronting a new assailant from an unexpected quarter.

"So it is," the judge said firmly. "Nevertheless, you must submit yourself to the rulings of the court. The defence may proceed with the next question."

"You say that you did nothing for several days after your wife disappeared. Did it not occur to you, regardless of your personal feelings towards Mrs. Ellsworth, that the police should be notified."

"It did. But I had already sacrificed a great deal in the effort to keep my personal affairs from being made public. It appears that I was to be unsuccessful. But I would have given anything under heaven to avoid—this!" Ellsworth's arm flailed out in a wide gesture, sweeping the press rows, the jury, the bailiffs and lawyers in an inclusive circle.

"Is it not a fact that you deliberately took and concealed certain papers belonging to Mrs. Ellsworth and having a bearing upon the circumstances of your marriage?"

"I object. The circumstances of Mr. Ellsworth's marriage have nothing whatever to do with the case—"

"Objection sustained."

"Let me answer, please. I demand the chance to explain. I've done my utmost, all my life, to keep out of the papers. Now, I want my side to be heard. These insinuations—they will be made public—they already have been. Let them at least have the truth!"

"Calm yourself, Mr. Ellsworth. This case is not being tried in the papers—officially," the judge said sardonically. "If you desire to make a statement, you may do so."

"The papers which I took from Mrs. Ellsworth's safe were the documents in a breach of promise suit which she threatened to institute prior to our marriage. I took them because I feared that they would be considered suspicious evidence against me—give me an apparent motive for—for doing away with her. A psychiatrist tells me that this fear was due to a genuine wish that she should pass out of my life—that I was afraid because I really did have such a motive, although it never was a conscious one. It was a sort of panic. I wanted to keep out of it, as far as possible. I might have known it couldn't be done—that the crash had come. But if I had really wanted to kill Sheila, I'd have done it before I married her. And if I had killed her, I'd at least have had the sense not to try to cover her disappearance. It's horrible that I can't, even now, be sorry she's dead. But I'm punished for that, punished by having to endure all that I've most dreaded and loathed, punished by—this!" Again the rigid arm swept outward. Then Ellsworth's head dropped forward on his arms, flung across the railing before him. "That's all," he mumbled, almost inaudibly. The fierce repression of years had broken down, loosing the torrents in one mighty outburst. Having lost all that he had guarded, he flung the remnants of his wrecked life to them, with a strange relief in the abandonment.

"We will take a recess for ten minutes," said the judge.

The reporters hurled themselves at the doors.

"Great stuff!"

"Too late for the 'home.' The morning papers'll get it, durn 'em."

"Never mind, they'll run an extra on this—see if they don't."

"New lead—add Orme trial"—this over the telephone.

"Copy boy!—Rush this to the office, and step on it!" This from the Q and A twins in chorus.

Peter, having telephoned his "flash," left the smoke-filled witness room with its clangor of telephones and stood leaning against the wall at the back of the now almost empty courtroom. He started at the touch of a hand on his arm and turned with surprise to find Don Ellsworth standing, white and spent, beside him.

"I want to tell you something," Don said in a low tremulous voice.

"Take it easy." Peter forgot his own fatigue in the lapse from intense excitement. His gray eyes beamed upon Ellsworth with friendly reassurance and sympathy.

"But I want you to know this," Don rushed on, glancing about to make sure they were not overheard. "I hoped to marry Barbara Cavanaugh—maybe you already knew that, or guessed it. Well, that's over. She told me that you are the man she cares for. And it's true. I thought she cared for me once, but even if I hadn't lost my chance, she never looked at me as she looked when she spoke your name. I wanted to let you know that—personally. And to tell you before I go that I was a fool for blazing out at you when you came to the house."

"Oh, that's all right. All in the day's work," Peter said inadequately. He felt very much as if he wanted to cry, but his gray eyes alone shone a little more warmly on the man beside him.

"What I really wanted to say, though, was this," Don went on. "The other is only between ourselves. But I thought you might like to know that as soon as this is over I'm going to Africa to hunt big game. I don't know a thing about big game hunting, but I guess it can be learned. I don't know a thing about Africa either—only I have an idea it's a country where there aren't many newspapers." A wan smile flickered across Don's face. "I thought you might like to have that as a scoop for—The Herald, isn't it?"

"Thanks," said Peter briefly. He dared not trust his voice beyond the single word.

The two hands met in a grip that both sets of fingers ached.

CHAPTER XL.

The appearance of Mrs. Kane on the witness stand caused a ripple of uncontrollable delight to sweep across the rows of press seats.

She stalked up the narrow aisle, her voluminous skirts almost brushing the chairs on either side. With the unswerving directness of an ocean liner, she had already stepped to the platform before the astonished clerk could check her progress.

'Mumble—mumble—mumble nothing but — the — truth — so —help—you—God," chanted the clerk.

Mrs. Kane fixed him with severity in her eyes.

"That's what I'm here for," she announced succinctly.

The judge blew his nose behind his handkerchief. The bailiff with rigid, contorted countenance, banged his gavel. The sketch artists seized their pencils with furious haste.

"It ain't possible," one of the Q and A twins nudged the other.

"As the farmer said when he saw a giraffe, "There's no such animal!' murmured his companion.

"Silence in the courtroom, please!" admonished the bailiff, with the harrassed air of a teacher trying to maintain discipline over a class of unruly youngsters.

Mrs. Kane surveyed the room with a disapproving stare which said as plainly as words, "What have all these people got to do with it, anyhow? They'd better go home and mind their own business."

"Mrs. Kane," began the district attorney with wary courtesy, "Do you know the defendant, David Orme?"

"Well, I ought to," clicked Mrs. Kane, viewing the questioner with manifest scorn of his stupidity.

The roll of fat across the back of the district attorney's neck reddened.

"I didn't ask you whether you ought to; I asked you whether you did. Answer the question Yes or No," he said sharply.

"I already said so."

The district attorney cast an imploring glance at the judge, who was sedulously staring out of the window.

"What were the relations between Mr. Orme and Mrs. Ellsworth at the time when you first knew him?"

"Just what they are now. He was and is Miss O'Shay's husband."

"What?"

A rustle of astonishment passed over the court room. The lounging reporters straightened and leaned forward as if pulled by invisible wires.

"You heard me." Mrs. Kane remarked caustically. "He left, and Miss O'Shay let him go. She never got a divorce from him."

"Your honor, I object!" Graham leaped to his feet as if galvanized by an electric shock. "The witness cannot possibly know this of her own knowledge."

"I certainly do. There's precious little about Miss O'Shay that I don't know of my own knowledge."

"Objection sustained. You may reframe your question."

"Will the reported please read the question? I—I seem to be a little confused as to what the witness was answering."

The court reporter bent over his notes.

"The last question of the district attorney was, 'What?'" he announced in matter-of-fact tones.

The angular face of the judge became a deep mahogany color. He glared out of the window for a moment, then gave it up and seized his handkerchief. From the bench came a series of choking sounds, interspersed with snorts. The men in the press rows rocked back and forth, throwing decorum to the winds. The bailiff drummed an unheeded tattoo with the hand holding the gavel, while with the other he wiped his eyes.

How Trees Split Rocks

It is done, says Robert Sparks Walker in American Forests (Washington) by beginning early and proceeding slowly.

"Nature performs these feats so quietly that not even the squirrel or woodpecker in the top of the tree above the stone is conscious of the great task that is being accomplished.

"If man could perform such a deed with his hands alone, or even aided by maul or wedge, he would sound a trumpet that could be heard around the world!

"But nature is not a braggadocio. She performs a remarkable feat, and through it teaches mankind that true worth lies in achievement rather than pomp or fame.

"To accomplish this feat, nature must be extremely patient. At first, an insignificant-looking acorn or nut, or other seed of a tree, is dropped in a crevice. It may be through the act of a bird or a squirrel who was frisking around and lost his prize as it fell into a small opening in a stone.

"Sunshine and moisture will germinate a seed on a bare stone or on a housetop, where there is apparently not an atom of plant food available, just about as quickly as it does in the ground. Decaying leaves and twigs are then blown into the crevice, and soon the rootlets have a little real food to munch, and then the tree is started on its career."

Every year the wind and rain bring in supplies of fresh food material. The roots reach as deeply as they can! their size increases, and soon the cavity seems to be filled completely. The new cells in the young tree continue to double. And that is the whole process.

New England BiBrds

I have never heard the skylark sing
At cloudy gates in early spring;
I have never heard the nightingale
Wooing the shadows in a dale;
But I have known the bobwhite's call,
The song-sparrow singing clear and small,
And I have heard the whippoorwill
Lilting at moonbeams on the hill.

And once at morning in an hour
When mountains to the sunlight tower
I heard the hermit thrush make song
Until wood-shadows seemed to throng
With magic notes and break away
As though his bright throat brought the day.
There I was pleased to stand and hark,
Forgetting nightingale and lark!

Trees in Paris

Each year, before winter sets in, the Paris trees are thoroughly attended to. They are pruned, changed, and even replaced if necessary. One section of the Boulevards, however, between the Place de la Republique and the rue Drouot, is not up to the usual standard. The municipal service which looks after the trees of Paris is waiting for work in connection with the new subway to be completed to take this part of the Boulevards in hand, and provide it with large and beautiful trees such as line the rest of this thoroughfare. As all work in connection with the subway is to be finished by the end of the year, there is promised for next summer an uninterrupted length of shady Boulevards such as delight the heart of the Parisian stroller.

Play in Nursery Tool of Learning

If you have ever watched children at play, you realize that it is a serious business, writes "H. M. R." in The Christian Science Monitor. The great philosopher of childhood, Frederick Froebel, says, "The child learns by doing." He learns by playing, for play constitutes the major part of his activity.

Imagination plays a large part in play, but just as the worker needs things to work with, so the child needs things to play with. His toys are the tools with which he works while he plays. The type of play is governed largely by the kind of tools he has at his command. The wisdom of those who supply him with his play equipment is an important factor in the influences brought to bear on his forming concepts of society.

The custom of giving children toys at Christmas time is so common that sometimes we are in danger of forgetting that Christmas has any other meaning. Those who realize that the great message of love is at the bottom of the true Christmas spirit, can help their children to have the joy of giving as well as receiving and avoid cultivating selfish indulgence.

It is also important that adults in selecting gifts for children should love those children wisely enough to use thought and care in the selection of their gifts. To one who takes the play of children seriously, knowing its relation to their future, it is amazing that so many children are allowed to own toy pistols. Arguments against this type of toy have often met with ridicule, but the proof is so evidenced by boy bandits and accidents with real guns that there is no need for further argument.

A recent visit to the toy department in a large department store revealed the largest display of war toys the writer has ever seen. There were three long cases containing miniature soldiers and sailors of very nationality, even African warriors with raised spears in hand. All the apparatus for carrying on modern warfare is available in miniature. A child fully equipped with this type of play material could stage a world war involving every race on the globe. For many hours his thought would be given over to war manoeuvers and killing.

While some sources are busy working among the youth in our colleges and universities to break down prohibition, others are at work propagating war in the minds of our children.

Our children are our responsibility, either directly or indirectly. They are future citizens of our nation, the heirs to the prosperity or adversity resulting from our achievements. Do we want them to grow up with the idea that war is the only worth while achievement in life? Rather let us strive to emphasize the peace and joy and satisfaction of useful living as exemplified by the farmer, the storekeeper, the shoemaker, and all the busy people who help to make living more pleasant. There are toys to be had which encourage the child to reproduce in play the interesting activities of community life. Froebel says, "what a child imitates he tries to understand." Through a better understanding of the interdependence of community life will come a greater appreciation of the services of others, and a healing for hard times and war.

An All-Talkie

"Have you heard the latest about the women of the village?" asked Bragg.

"Haven't heard a thing," said Spragg inquiringly.

"They've formed a secret society," Bragg told him.

Spragg burst into a roar of uncontrollable laughter.

"That's rich," he replied at length. "Why, women don't know how to keep a secret."

"But this society isn't to keep secrets," returned Bragg; "it's to tell them."

Potato Health Improved By Change of Soil

That a trip to the mountains is good for potatoes as well as for sickly human beings was reported recently to the Academy of Sciences in Paris by J. Constantin, P. Lebard and J. Magrou. These same investigators reported previously that growth for a few years in a mountain climate tends to restore the vigor of sickly varieties of sugar cane and other cultivated plants. Last year a similar experiment was begun with potatoes. Seed potatoes from strains grown for many years in low-lying parts of France were transplanted to highland fields on the slopes of the Alps. Here the lowland potatoes grew for a year just as they would have grown in their lowland homes. Seed potatoes produced in the highland plantations then were taken back to the lowland fields and planted side by side with others from plants that never had been away. The potatoes with a year of mountain experience turned out to be markedly more vigorous and productive, the experimenters report, than those of precisely the same strain which had been denied the mountain trip. Whether the year's life at a higher altitude, with its cooler nights and other more rigorous conditions, strengthened the constitution of the potato plants themselves or whether the benefits were due to elimination of bacteria or other parasites which could not withstand the mountain climate the investigators do not know.

The cheery fellow met a friend at a Christmas dance.

"Well, well, old man," he said happily, "so you're married at last! Allow me to congratulate you." He paused and then added with a sly smile: "I hear you have an excellent and accomplished wife."

The newlywed nodded.

"I have indeed," he replied. "Why, she's at home in music, she's at home in art, she's at home in books, she's at home in science. In short she's at home everywhere, except—"

"Yes, except what?" came the inquiry.

"Except at home," the other dolefully replied.

Quite The Reverse

The Christmas party were assembled for the musical program. Smith found himself next to an aged professor.

"You're the gentleman who is teaching my wife voice culture, is that not so? Tell me, what sort of a pupil is she?" he asked.

The professor leaned confidingly across to his neighbor.

"Well," he said, "I find her very apt, to say the least."

This seemed to surprise Smith.

"That's rather strange," he replied. "I always find her very apt to say the most."

A HAPPY NEW YEAR

By JOHN EVERETT
Life

He came back to earn $250—and he found the real gold of life.

GARTH WATERFORD was returning to Little Petersham at last. Considering the high hopes with which he had gone away—the many times he had assured his mother that within two years he would have a business of his own in London—both the moment and method of his return were unusual, to say the least. For the hands of the church clock stood at eleven as the furtive figure slouched along the muddy lane, keeping to the gloom, and darting past the spots where a ray of light showed the presence of a house.

It was his mother who had brought him back to the village. Unemployment, a hard time, his own children, had sharpened his sympathies, and he wanted to know whether she was still alive and well.

Why hadn't he written to her? Well, he had written so hopefully at first, and, somehow, he had shrunk from exhibiting his failure to the one being in life who believed in him. Now he was doing worse than ever; in fact, if anything went wrong that night—He pulled up his thoughts, not daring to pursue them.

What was more important was the fact that, if everything went right, Josh Hooker had promised him fifty quid. With that he could make a fresh start, he and Ellen and the two children.

It was easy, really. They had only let him in because he knew the Grange like the back of his hand, having worked there helping the gardeners in his youth. All he had to do was to meet Hooker's two cronies at the bend in the wall by the brook, show them the way over, and point out the library windows. Then he would keep watch while they were inside, giving a hand only if they hit a snag.

They had all pointed out to him how lucky he was. "Money for jam" the gang called it. Garth Waterford was not so sure. So far, he had never committed a crime, or assisted in one, and the fact that this crime was to take place so near his mother's place, amid the scenes he had known so well in his youth, made him loathe the job.

The straggling group of cottages, with one or two big houses which made Little Petersham, was deserted. Everyone would be at the concert in the hall at the other end of the village, waiting to welcome in the New Year—except his mother, who was too old, and the major from the Grange. He was in London. Hooker had found that out by judicious inquiries some days before.

Garth was by the village store now—the weather-beaten little shop had been his home and his father's home before him.

There was a light shining through the glass panels of the door behind the shop, and the light lit up a flickering flame that had never died within him.

His mother would be there. He must see her just once. It would be dangerous to be recognized; they'd connect him with the robbery. But there could be no harm in slipping into the garden and looking in through the window. If he could be sure she was well, then perhaps he would not hate the rest of the night's work so much. But he hadn't many minutes.

Silently he lifted the latch of the gate and slipped into the gloom beyond. With a queer little thrill, he felt his feet on the old brick path, half overgrown with lichen. He rounded the bend by the outhouse, and stepped into a path of light which made the frost sparkle on the bushes.

The light only came from an oil lamp, shining through the kitchen door, but to Garth Waterford it seemed like the limelight of a theatre. The kitchen door was open—wide open. Mustn't let his mother see him. He made to draw back into the shadow before the white-haired old lady inside that doorway should know he was there.

But already she was peering out into the gloom.

"Garth," she said softly. "It's my boy come home or a ghost. I saw you. Where are you?"

The man crouched down. Why in goodness had he come here at all? He saw a frown overshadow his mother's face.

"Garth," she said, louder, "five years you've been gone, but I knew it was you. If it wasn't I'm going mad—mad from thinking about you. Speak, Garth, if you are here!"

She was clinging to the doorpost for support. Hang it all, he couldn't play a trick like that! Perhaps five minutes, then an excuse to slip away. He stood erect and advanced to the light.

"It's me, mother," he said. "Come to surprise you for a few minutes. I'm"—he searched for a lie, and decided the truth was vague enough—"I'm on my way North."

For a moment the old lady did not move. Then she took two tottering steps to his side and caught his face in her hands, kissing him in between hysterical little laughs.

"I knew you'd come back, Garth," she said. "You wouldn't forget your old mother because of your grand friends. Come in, my son—come in, and tell me everything that's happened to you."

He led her gently back to her high-backed chair beside the fire. Now he was beside her, he could see how the years or the loneliness had aged her. Very frail she looked.

"You shouldn't have that door open," he said. "It's cold to-night.

"I know, Garth," she answered; "but don't forget it's New Year's Eve. Other folk shut their doors, and wait for someone to call and let in another year. But I say: 'Throw your door open to the world, to show that your heart is open to it as well.' I don't wait for someone to call. I hold the door open in welcome. And my open door has brought me my son. Make some tea, Garth, just to show you haven't forgotten where the teapot is."

As he busied himself about the little kitchen she was looking at him, seeing again the boy who went away. She saw the new lines in his face—the lines of poverty. The grey-flecked hair—the shabby clothes—the anxiety in the restless eyes. Like an open book, she read the story of his struggle and his failure.

Together they sat beside the fire, with their cups of tea.

"And is London so grand?" she said at last.

Somehow, he could not deceive her.

"Things didn't turn out like—like I hoped, mother," he said. "Work is difficult to get. At first it wasn't so bad, but after I married——"

"My boy married!" she broke in. "And his mother never knew! Oh, Garth, why didn't I know?"

He shook his head.

"I couldn't write, mother," he continued. "After I married everything went wrong. I lost my job. Jimmy, the eldest, came. I tramped the country looking for work. Things are very difficult." He pulled himself together. "But the worst's over now. I'm on my way to a job."

But the old lady was not listening.

"Then I was right," she was saying. "My poor boy did need me, and I didn't know where to find him. Night after night I saw you in my dreams and knew you needed me, and you never came. Oh, Garth, my son, why couldn't I help? Why didn't you come to your mother?"

She was not looking at him; she was looking at his photograph that still hung over the mantel. Her breath seemed to be coming with difficulty; she was very pale. Shock. Of course that was it. He was a fool to have come back. The clock pointed to eleven-fifty. In another ten minutes he was due at the Grange. He looked at his mother—not safe to leave her until she felt better. Anything might happen if he just went off now.

He knelt beside her, rubbing her hands—hands knotted and old through working for him and the brother who lay in France.

"It's all right, mother," he said, with a curious tightening in his throat. "It hasn't been as bad as that. I'm all right now—fixed up fine. And one day soon I'll bring Ellen and the children down to see you—I promise I will."

She clutched his hand with a grip that surprised him.

"You won't leave me again, Garth," she demanded, stroking his hair. "Never again! You must send for your wife and the children. The shop's too much for me now. I've only kept it on in case you came back. I'm too old to stand all day. It's waiting for you, just as the house is waiting for your children. You must stay, Garth—tell me you'll stay!"

She was clutching him still tighter to her; her eyes were wild. If he cleared off now he might be the murderer of his own mother. He couldn't do it—not for a thousand Hookers!

Gently he released his hand and went to the door, stepping out into the yard. Not a sound broke the silence. Just the canopy of stars, frostily clear above his head, and the hushed world, waiting, it seemed, for another year. Peace—a peace he had not known for five struggling years—enveloped him. He remembered that this place meant home, love, security—all those things he was in danger of losing. It meant——

The silence was shattered by the sound of bells that echoed among the cottages. The New Year! And Hooker's men waiting for him three miles off. Well, they'd have to wait a long time. He had come back to earn $250, and he had found gold—the real gold of life. He was going to take it and fight for it.

He stepped back into the kitchen. His mother had risen from her chair and was waiting for him.

"A dark man comes to bring me New Year luck," she said, kissing him again. "That means a happy New Year for both him and me. Garth, my dear, no need to tell me that you are going to stay. I know now."

He put his arm round her shoulders.

"Yes, mother I'm going to stay—always," he said. "And now you must rest."

He helped her up to her room over the shop; then came down again to turn out the lamp. But before he did and taking something from his pocket so he went to the end of the garden, dropped it down the well. The jemmy he had never used, and which he would never need to use now, for the bad old year had gone and a bright New Year had dawned."—Answers (London).

A New Year's Suggestion

D. D. Twitchell

Most people make resolutions for the New Year. This year when you make your resolutions why not include some for the benefit of our animal friends? These suggestions may help you. Why not resolve that you—

1. Will not allow yourself to be too hurried, too preoccupied or sufficiently unkind to fail to speak kindly to the dog who greets you with a friendly wag.

2. Will not fail to think of the hours of imprisoned loneliness endured by the canary that sings for you and that you will whistle to him or do some other of the many things which make a caged bird happier. A bit of lettuce to peck at or his cage moved to a different window helps to pass the time more pleasantly.

3. Will not be one of those people who put the cat out if it disturbs you, without finding out why it disturbs you. It may be that the cat is hungry, thirsty, or wishes to be played with or petted, or it may be you are disturbed because you are irritable.

4. Will not laugh at, praise, or otherwise encourage, either a child or grown person who torments domestic animals or hunts or traps wild ones.

5. Will point out courteously but unfailingly whenever possible to fur wearers, that the price of the fur that they wear is not only paid for by their money, but is also paid for by the agony, torture, fear, and death of some animal.

New Year's Eve

I look up in the morning of the year,
And I behold Thee flooding all the sky
With that bright wonder of a heart outpoured.
The night of peace and stars has made me bold,
And from the humbleness of years' defeat,
I dare to rise again and lift a prayer.
O Father of a little trusting child,
Keep Thou my faltering steps upon a way
That is unknown. And teach me how to walk
Forth gladly, with no coldly shackling fears.
Lift me to understanding of thy love;
Give to my mind the firmness and the grace
Of grey stone fences in the morning sun,
Set with all sureness on the warm brown earth,
With little grasses growing by the gate.
Make Thou my heart courageous for its days
As little purple violets blooming low
Beneath their searedged, frost-chilled leaves.
And if the bending of the bare lean boughs
Shall strike long shadows on the path I choose,
Help me to walk without a shrinking step
Through colder ways than I have known before.

New Year's Eve

No one ever regarded the First of January with indifference. It is that from which all date their time, and count upon what is left. It is the nativity of our common Adam.

Of all sound of all bells—bells, the music nighest bordering upon heaven—most solemn and touching is the peal which rings out the Old mind to a concentration of all the images that have been diffused over the past twelvemonth; all I have done or suffered, performed or neglected, in that regretted time. I begin to know its worth, as when a person dies.

The elders, with whom I was brought up, were of a character not likely to let slip the sacred observance of any old institution; and the ringing out of the Old Year was kept by them with circumstances of peculiar ceremony. In those days the sound of those midnight chimes, though it seemed to raise hilarity in all around me, never failed to bring a train of pensive imagery into my fancy. Yet I then scarce conceived what it meant, or thought of it as a reckoning that concerned me. Not childhood alone, but the young man till thirty, never feels practically that he is mortal. He knows it indeed, and, if need were, he could preach a homily on the fragility of life; but he brings it not home to himself. But now, shall I confess a truth? I feel these audits but too powerfully. I begin to count the probabilities of my duration, and to grudge at the expenditure of moments and shortest periods, like misers' farthings. . . . I care not to be carried with the tide, that smoothly bears human life to eternity; and reluct at the inevitable course of destiny.

I am in love with this green earth; the face of town and country; the unspeakable rural solitudes, and the sweet security of streets. I would set up my tabernacle here. I am content to stand still at the age to which I am arrived; I, and my friends: to be no younger, no richer, no handsomer. I do not want to be weaned by age; or drop, like mellow fruit, as they say, into the grave.—Charles Lamb.

Sunday School Lesson

ANALYSIS

I. THE WORD IN CREATION, 1: 1-3.
II. THE WORD IN HISTORY, 1: 4-13.
III. THE WORD IN JESUS, 1: 14-18.

INTRODUCTION—The Gospel of John differs from the other three Gospels. It does not claim to be a history. It is not so much fact as interpretation of fact. The author tells "what Jesus has become to those who have known him long and found in him the satisfaction of all their spiritual longings" (Dow), and are now convinced that in him they have experienced the life of God himself.

The incidents recorded are largely symbolic. If a multitude is fed, this is not merely an event which took place by the Lake of Galilee—it symbolizes the eternal truth that man attains to the life divine by feeding spiritually upon Christ, the Living Bread.

The Gospel was written toward the close of the first century. Was the author John, the son of Zebedee, or the preacher at Ephesus, or a disciple of John Zebedee known as John the Presbyter, or some other? Scholars differ. But its religious value is "independent of any name we may attach to it, and it has historic information that seems to carry back to some one very close to Jesus."

So convinced is John—which John he is matters little—that he is inspired by the Spirit of Christ (as he undoubtedly was) that he does not consider the words he writes to be merely his own, but the words of Christ who inspires him. Hence Jesus' utterances and John's reflections continually shade into each other.

I. THE WORD IN CREATION, 1:1-3.

John introduces his readers to a being whom he calls the Word. He is doing what the preacher must do today, proclaiming the truth in the language of his own day. "The Word" was an expression as common in John's day, as "evolution" is in ours. The Herew, when he wished to speak of God as he revealed himself to men, did not refer directly to him, but spoke of the "angel" of God, the "wisdom," the "spirit" of God. See for example, Gen. 22: 17. These terms all means the "agent" who carried out God's will among men. The Greeks had a somewhat similar idea. Plato yearned for "some word of God" that would bring the Supreme Being nearer to men. John uses this term to tell that Jesus of Nazareth was the expression of the mind and character of God.

The Word was God-working-in-creation. "All things were made by him" (v. 3) means, "all things were made 'through' him." See 1 Cor. 8: 3. In saying that "without him was not anything made that was made," John disowns the multitudes of intermediate spiritual beings in whom many of his readers believed.

II. THE WORD IN HISTORY, 1: 4-13.

Jesus was not God's first revelation of himself to men. The light was always shining in the darkness, v. 5. In every age God has been present with his human children, teaching them the lessons they were fitted to learn, preparing them for a fuller revelation to come. Every age has had its prophet of righteousness, its Word of God, Abraham, Moses, Amos. No sooner did the Word come than the tragic note is sounded. Men did not receive him.

Verses 10, 11 sound the tragic note of rejection. God was in his own world, made by him, but his own folk—the Hebrew people—did not welcome him. But a few individuals who received him, received power to become sons of God, v. 12. Every man is a bundle of possibilities. Jesus' chief desire was to come into such relationship with men that he might give them the power to become.

Verse 13 is a rebuke to Jewish exclusiveness and presumption. The Jews believed that being born into a Jewish family gave one special rights in the sight of God. Jesus had taught John that "blue blood" does not count with God. To belong to him spiritually is the true nobility.

III. THE WORD IN JESUS, 1: 14-18.

The introduction has been leading up to the momentous declaration that the Word was made flesh and dwelt among us, v. 14. God, to a degree hitherto unknown, lived in the personality of a human being. His eternal mind and will were at last revealed to us in a man, Jesus of Nazareth. God, we know now, is like Jesus, his Christ (the Greek term for Messiah). It is not John's purpose to try to explain the "how" of the Incarnation. He is concerned only to impress upon his readers the fact.

The Word is being made flesh every day. It must be if men are to come to know God. Goodness becomes real only as we know some man or woman. So with truth, love, purity. Said an old writer, "This word of God was from the beginning; it is always being born afresh in the hearts of holy men."

Resolutions

The New Outlook (Toronto).—How would it be to put among our New Year's resolutions one to the effect that we will try to be better-natured and more companionable for the next twelve months. Crankiness doesn't add anything to any one else's happiness, and it certainly doesn't make life any smoother for ourselves. If it isn't as deeply-dyed as some of the other vices it makes up by being peculiarly trying on those who have to live with it.

Affirmation

It is ending now. I shall watch the year
Lock its cold doors.
And the house of earth grow chill, and the wind
Sweep the white floors.

Snow is so small a house to wall a world
Eternity-buried!
But there are roots at the wall, and grass, and trees.
I'll trust in these.

—Howard McKinley Corning, in The New York Sun.

Plan More Trade For Canadian Ports

Ottawa. — The Dominion Government is giving consideration to the question of routing more of Canada's trade through Canadian ports. Sir Alexander Gibb and members of his staff in making a report on Canadian port facilities are particularly studying this phase, it was stated in Government circles. Sir Alexander's report is said to be nearing completion.

Gold Production in Canada

Production of gold during 1930, from all sources in Canada amounted to 2,102,068 fine ounces valued at $43,453,601 as against an output of 1,732,806 fine ounces valued at $39,851,663 in 1929. This was the largest output ever recorded in Canada.

Says Drink Habit Should be Curbed

I am delighted to know that the women of Ontario, through the W.C. T.U. organization, have initiated this campaign in order to petition the Legislation to curb, as far as in their power, the evils of the Liquor Traffic during this time of depression in all lines of business and gladly offer what help I can to make the petition a success.

If the scarcity of money and the general depression is felt as keenly in urban centres as in the rural districts it is a serious condition indeed. Never in my lifetime has it been so difficult to get together sufficient income in order to keep our families and our farms.

As evidence of this, note the disappearance of Auction Sales of farm stock. The reason for this is that sales being formerly conducted on the credit plan cannot now be undertaken as "Notes" are unsafe. A farmer just lately consulted a Brampton Banker as to the prospects for an Auction Sale of his stock. The Banker advised him to sell privately if he could as Notes were becoming impossible of collection. Another farmer, not far from Brampton, conducted a sale last year. He held his Notes for collection himself and in a canvas of them from the South of Peel to the North end brought home less than $20.00 in cash in a long day's drive.

Taxes on farms grow each year, while the prices for many things the farmer has to buy are at war-time prices. Farms are unsaleable. The land agent has lost his job. Farms bought at high prices some years ago, if mortgaged now would, if sold, fail to bring more than the mortgage.

The Brewers' Association have sent out their annual call to farmers to grow more barley with the usual promise of big prices. The present market price of 35c to 40c does not in any degree carry out last season's promises, nor can the farmer be induced to sell barley as a cash crop, when he knows he can make more out of it by feeding it to hogs and cattle. The Liquor Store is completely out of place at the present time—a luxury in every sense of the word. Bootleggers are plentiful in the rural districts, more so than ever before—operated by both men and women. It will undoubtedly be argued that we cannot afford to drop the revenue from the sale of liquor, and also from the sale of "permits". We can reply truthfully that no one can really afford to buy liquor as it is too costly and gives no value in return. The revenue from its sale is only apparent, and a "saving" at the spigot and a "losing" at the bunghole. The revenue in cash can be easily reckoned, but the consequent losses to the buyer are not so easily accounted for as they are spread widely over jails, hospitals, poor-houses, asylums, wrecked homes, ruined characters and unprofitable lives. If all these could send in their returns it would show the "Liquor Sale" business to be poor business either for a Government or for the individual engaged in it. If the money at present spent in drink could be turned into other lines of trade, a very great deal would be done to relieve the present depression which is caused largely from lack of the means to buy even the necessaries of life. The electors of Peel, when relieved from political drawing power, will show that there are a very great number of both men and women, who are not in favor of the sale of intoxicants, much less the sale of permits to juniors, giving them a start in the Drink Habit.

The present movement is in no sense a political one, but merely a voice from the people, strengthening the hands of the Government. We acknowledge the fact that no liquor stores have been opened in Peel County. Thanks to the Government and the local member. Police Magistrates are active in taking care of offenders against the Liquor Law. No liquor is allowed in the new highway construction camps. Heavy fines are imposed on drunken drivers. The Premier of Ontario has promised to reduce expenditure in the coming year, if possible, up to five millions of dollars. Our petition asks that the colossal expenditure of the sale of liquor be curtailed as far as within the power of the Legislature to do in the interest of the homes of our people—morally, spiritually and economically.

The petition is being circulated throughout the County and is meeting with good success.

Chairman of the Petition Committee

COLDS, INFLUENZA, PNEUMONIA

The infections of the respiratory tract which occur chiefly in winter are responsible for a great deal of discomfort, for much of the time lost from school and work, for many deaths, and for a great deal of permanent damage to various parts of the bodies of those who recover.

Unfortunately, there is no panacea to offer. There is no specific means of prevention available as there is for diphtheria. At present, we are in the position of having to place our dependence upon the general powers of resistance of a healthy body.

So it is that we say to those who wish to do what they can in the way of prevention that they should, during the winter, pay attention to those things which go to maintain the body in a condition of physical fitness.

In the case of many, there is less exercise taken and as much, if not more, food consumed in winter than in summer. This is another way of saying that over-eating, with which constipation is not infrequently associated, increases with the coming of the cold weather, and this is one of the major reasons why we find lowered health in winter.

The person who has developed the habit of keeping his hands away from his face, excepting when he is using a handkerchief, and who washes his hands thoroughly before he eats or prepares food, is fortunate. The hands of a person who is suffering from a cold are almost certain to be soiled with the nasal secretions, and so the infection is passed on to others. This is why we should wash our hands after they come into contact with other hands.

The person who is sick with a cold should stay at home. It is not fair for him to mingle with others and so spread the infection. Pneumonia, which is one of the most serious and fatal diseases, is very often the result of a neglected cold, and the frequency of its occurrence is a sufficient reason for taking care of the common cold.

Health in winter and comparative freedom from respiratory diseases depend upon the manner of living and personal habits more than anything else. Fresh air and exercise are needed the year round. Attention to diet, clothing and elimination will help to keep the body strong, healthy and resistant.

CONSTIPATION

Despite the many exaggerated statements made concerning the ill results of delayed bowel elimination, or constipation, it can be accepted that regular bowel movement—at least once a day—is desirable.

The process of digestion goes on automatically, and as long as it continues normally, we are not aware of it. We are responsible, however, for what we eat and for our habits of life. In general, constipation is the result of faulty habits and carelessness, and so the sufferer is, himself, responsible for the condition.

In most persons constipation causes a feeling of depression and lassitude. Headache and loss of appetite are fairly common. Hasmorrhoids and irritation of the intestines may result.

It takes time to overcome constipation, but provided there is no abnormal condition which requires treatment, the condition can, in practically all cases, be overcome by attention to diet and the establishment of systematic habits. It must be clearly understood that, as long as reliance is placed on laxatives and enemas, the condition will not be corrected. Laxatives and enemas should not be used unless they are ordered by the individual's physician as treatment, because they defeat their own purpose when used to deal with chronic constipation.

The diet should be low in protein; cereals should be used in abundance. Water should be taken freely. A glass of hot or cold water on rising, in the forenoon, in the afternoon and in the evening, in addition to the fluids which are taken with the meals, is helped in many cases.

Exercise in moderation is required. The exercise taken should be of a type which brings the abdominal muscles into play.

The most common cause of constipation is failure to pay attention to the impulse to defecate. Long-continued neglect and delay in responding causes the impulse to be lost. Therefore, the most important point is to establish a regular toilet habit.

The taking of food stimulates the intestinal tract, so that a normal time for a bowel movement is after a meal. Such a movement once a day is likely sufficient. It is essential that the individual go to the toilet at exactly the same hour every day, whether or not there is a desire to do so, and this must be persisted in until the habit is firmly established.

Not all cases of constipation can be dealt with in the same way. If the bowel is irritated, the use of uncooked foods may make it worse. Such cases require treatment. The cases which do not require medical treatment can generally be corrected by attention to diet and exercise, and the formation of a regular habit.

Questions concerning Health, addressed to the Canadian Medical Association, 184 College Street, Toronto, will be answered personally by letter.

Municipal Elections in Many Places

Reeve Hops Returned in Streetsville, 71 Majority

Hydro By-Law Carries, but Ratepayers Refused Ballots

STREETSVILLE ELECTION

Great interest was centred in the election on Monday, for the Municipal Council and in the voting on the Hydro By-Law.

Both sides worked hard and when the ballots had been counted, the results were as follows:

For the Reeveship—H. W. Hope 174; O. R. Church 103.

For Councillors—J. E. Bailey 195, J. W. Drennan 190, V. C. Johnston 182, C. R. Evans 150, W. C. Andrew 115, J. E. Dowling 79.

For the Hydro By-Law 86, against 50.

A special list of voters was made up and used for the vote on the Hydro By-Law, but this list was very incomplete, several names having been inadvertantly omitted, which raised the ire of those concerned and meant a few warm minutes for the Returning Officer.

Mr. James Bailey made a splendid run, heading the poll, with Jack Drennan and Vic. Johnston close behind, while Charlie Evans makes the fourth councillor.

We wish to congratulate the Council-elect and extend to them best wishes for a prosperous New Year.

Toronto Township

R. S. Whaley, deputy reeve of Toronto Township was returned, defeating Wm. Dennison, member of 1931 council, 1,109 to 978. Members of council will be Thos. McCarthy 1,152; G. S. Bonham, 897; Thos. Graham, 792. Defeated candidates were G. M. Harris, R. D. Salmond and W. D. Trenwith. Thos. Graham, who resigned from Derry West School Board after 21 years' service, to pursue his ambition for municipal honor, is the added member of the council for 1932, replacing Wm. Dennison.

BRAMPTON

E. W. McCulloch will replace W. J. Beatty in the Reeve's chair at the next session of the town fathers. Mr. McCulloch, who, for the past two years, has occupied the chair of the deputy reeve, polled 1,008 votes to the 571 cast for W. J. Beatty, who is a former warden of the county, and former mayor of Brampton.

W. A. Russell, who has had previous exjerience in other councils, nosed out W. C. Bartlett for the deputy-reeveship by 11 votes, the standing being 772-761.

Mrs. Mae Vanderlip was the first woman to be elected to municipal office in the town, defeating Norman Alteman for the school trustee's seat in the east ward by 212 to 194.

Both by-laws submitted were passed by large majorities. That asking the opinion of the ratepayers on the proposed request to the Ontario Hydro Commission to allow the McMurchy Estate to supply electric power to the Williams' Shoe Co., carried 958 to 83 in favor of the request. A fixed assessment of $10,000 was granted the Aziz Woollen Mills by 923-111. The proposal of the Woollen Mills is to erect an addition to the plant which would employ some 20 more hands. A special by-law will have to be passed by the incoming council, granting the mills permission to construct a portion of the plant on the right-of-way of Union street.

Purchase By-Law Approved

Port Credit Council, elected by acclamation, was given a mandate by the voters to purchase the swamp land on the banks of the Credit River between Toronto street and the C.N.R. tracks from Isabelle Faulkner, for municipal purposes, by 107 votes to 10.

Reeve Morden Re-elected

Reeve W. H. Morden was re-elected with a majority of 33 over his opponent, Deputy Reeve A. A. Buck. Victor Hall becomes deputy, with 183 more votes than Councillor LeRoy Sargant.

ISLINGTON

In one of the hardest fought battles recorded in Etobicoke Township, William G. Gardhouse, ex-county warden and four times reeve of the township, came down in front of Samuel Ryding, former Toronto alderman, with the results in doubt until the final subdivision was heard from.

Mr. Gardhouse's majority was 184. The greatest surprise of the balloting was the poor showing made by Robert Marshall, reeve for the past two years, who was at the foot of the list with a total of 497 votes. The vote on the transportation by-law in Kingsway district was 114 for and 47 against.

With eight in the field for the three councillor posts a battle resulted which spread the vote considerably, placing the three winning candidates within 50 votes of each other. William Armstrong headed the poll with 877. Gideon Silverthorne was second with 838, and Thomas Coulton third with 828. Other votes recorded were: Norman Armstrong, 395; S. B. Douglas, 369; William Stephens, 664; Robert Wing, 207; Ernest Rowatt, 648.

MRS EDWARD SMITH'S FUNERAL LARGELY ATTENDED

On Thursday afternoon, Dec. 31st, there passed on Bertha, widow of Edward Smith of Hamilton who predeceased her several years ago.

On Wednesday evening, Dec. 30th, Mrs. Smith was returning from Toronto to her home accompanied by her daughter, Margaret, a little beyond Clarkson on the Toronto-Hamilton Highway they sustained painful injuries caused by a car coming into collision with theirs. Mrs. Smith and Margaret were rushed to the office of Dr. Owen of Clarkson who attended to their injuries and had them taken by ambulance to St. Joseph's Hospital, Hamilton. Miss Margaret was detained for a short time at the hospital and was able to return to her home on Main Street East. But Mrs. Smith was further detained for observation when it was discovered she had sustained a broken limb and probabl chest injuries. On Thursday morning she was taken to the operating room for surgical attention and under the influence of an anesthetic she succumbed to her painful injuries.

Her passing came as a great shock to her friends who were legion. She possessed a very cheery disposition. A life full of almost unbounded energy and of unselfish service for others.

A largely attended funeral service was held on Monday afternoon at her late residence conducted by her minister, the Rev. Geo. H. Williams, D.S.O. of Ryerson United Church of which she had been a loyal and faithful member for many years. Interment in Hamilton cemetery.

The large display of flowers spoke volumes of the esteem in which she was held.

She left to mourn her passing the Misses Helen, Margaret and Milrea, at home, three sisters, Mrs. Will Cooke of the 9th Line, Trafalgar Township; Mrs. Jas. Mortimer of Hamilton and Mrs. Geo. Perry, of Toronto; also six brothers (who acted as pallbearers), William, Richard, Robert, Hercules, George and Wynne, all of Toronto.

STREETSVILLE UNITED CHURCH YOUNG PEOPLE'S GATHERING

On Monday night, the Young People's Association of the United Church held their regular meeting in the Sunday School Room of the Church. The president of the Association, Jim Steen, presided during the opening exercises and the devotional period was under the direction of Miss Myrtle Hisey. "A review of current events", a regular feature of the meetings, was taken by John Ross, who laid stress upon the optimistic note in Premier Bennett's New Year Message to the citizens of Canada.

Miss Blanche Hisey had charge of the program for the meeting. It was called a "Stunt Night," since the program was to be of a social character. The program included several skits and playettes, executed by various members of the Association. These were of a most humorous nature and the varied expressions of wit and wisdom brought forth many bursts of laughter from the jolly gathering. The program also included several games and contests into which all those present entered with no ordinary interest and spirit. As a happy conclusion to this evening of sociable enjoyment, the large gathering sat around the room in a large circle and light refreshments were served by the Refreshment Comittee under the leadership of Miss Alma Hewgill.

Much credit and grateful appreciation are due Miss Blanche Hisey and Miss Hewgill and all who helped to make the evening such a success and one to be long remembered by everyone who had the privilege of being present.

The next meeting of the Association will be held on Monday, Jan. 18th, at 8 p.m. It is to be "National Night" and the program will be under the direction of Graydon Clipperton. A splendid program is assured; A great meeting is anticipated!

Rev. Geo. H. Purchase Howard, Mrs. J. A. Cooke and Mrs. Peter Stevens attended the funeral of Mrs. Edwin Smith of Hamilton, who died on Thursday, Dec. 31st, following an accident on the Toronto-Hamilton Highway Wednesday evening, Dec. 30th. Mrs. Smith was a sister of Mrs. Will Cooke of the 9th Line.

The W.M.S. of Streetsville United Church held their regular monthly meeting on January 5th, in the classroom. Quite a number of ladies were present. The president, Mrs. Rogerson, presided. After the minutes and the business, Mrs. C. H. Falconer rendered a solo. Mrs. J. D. Steen gave a very interesting talk on Korea from the year book, and the meeting was then closed.

Streetsville Electric Power Plant was shut down for several hours on New Year's Day, on account of the ice storm interfering with the wires, and some of our citizens had a desperate time getting their New Year's dinner cooked. Many telephone lines were put out of commission and for several days there was practically no communication with the outside world.

Mr. and Mrs. Abram Block, Port Credit, celebrated their diamond wedding, on Sunday, Jan. 3rd. The congregation and Sunday School of the United Church made them presentations in honor of the event. They have lived in Port Credit ever since their marriage. Mr. Block is one of the oldest sailors of Lake Ontario.

EDEN CHURCH

The following were elected officers of Eden United Church Sunday School for 1932: Supt., Mr. Will Sparling; Secretary, Helen Hall; Assistant Secretary and Librarian, Alexina Sinclair; Treasurer, Mildred May; Organist, Wilmer Mason; Teachers, Mr. O. S. May, Mr. Purchase, Mrs. D. Sinclair, Mrs. W. Sparling.

PORT CREDIT

A charge of reckless driving against Edwin Ellis, Hamilton, laid following an accident here Wednesday night, has been raised to criminal negligence, according to Provincial Constable J. M. Hinchcliffe. Mrs. Bertha Smith, Main St. east, Hamilton, injured in the crash, died in the hospital, New Year's Day. Mrs. Smith's daughter, Margaret, was also injured.

Funeral service for Mrs. George M. Smith, formerly Gladys Ede, was conducted by Rev. H. Earle in Trinity Church. Interment in Spring Creek Cemetery, Clarkson. Mrs. Smith, died on Wednesday, at St. Joseph's Hospital, Toronto, following an operation. She was in her 35th year.

MILTON

Richard White, editor and proprietor of the Milton Reformer, died suddenly at his home. Mr. White, who was well known and highly estimated was in his 78th year. He was a member of St. Paul's United Church and a Liberal. Surviving are his widow, five sons and one daughter: F. Leonard White, editor of the Canadian Champion, Milton; Frederick and Edward Blake of Toronto; Norman E., of St. Williams; Marshall, of Milton; and Mrs. A. J. Sloan, of Woodstock.

Fire Scare

About six o'clock New Year's evening, a chimney on the old Dairy caught fire. Mr. Evans, the tenant, ran to the fire-hall, and touched off the siren. In a very few minutes quite a crowd had gathered. One fire reel with hose was brought to the scene, but the firemen could not get the hydrant open. Then a fire extinguisher was located and it also refused to work. The stove pipes, which were red hot, were pulled down and carried outside, and the fire was out in a few minutes. Not much damage was done, but the tenants received quite a scare. We would suggest that our fire brigade get out and practice at least once a month so they would be in a position to fight a fire.

ERINDALE

Officers of Erindale United Church Ladies' Association elected at the annual meeting were as follows: Pres., Mrs. S. Carpenter; vice-pres., Mrs. M. Hardy; sec., Mrs. J. Brooks; treas., Mrs. C. Harkiss; organist, Miss May McGill; press representative, Miss Edna McGill. Rev. R. Spencer presided over the meeting. Reports showed expenses of $50 for the year, with a balance of $24.

A shower was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Henry McGill, for Mr. and Mrs. Verne Barker, newly married couple of the district. Miscellaneous gifts were given the bride and a table presented Mr. Barker. The committee in charge consisted of Miss Nellie Amos, Mrs. D. Carpenter, Miss Helen Wilson and R. Bonham.

COOKSVILLE

Officers elected by the Sunday school of Cooksville United Church at the annual meeting of the organization were as follows: Superintendent, C. Radford; asst., Mr. Gay; sec., Miss Ella Pardy; asst., R. Whaley, Jr.; treas., D. Rowbotham; librarian, Miss Rilla Bellamy; asst., H. Christie; pianist, Miss Clara Ezard; asst., Miss Betty Marshall; musical director, E. M. Dillon; primary supt., Miss Jessie Tolman; home director, Mrs. H. McKay; missionary director, Mrs. A. G. Laughton; cradle roll, Mrs. Duff Harris; flower committee convenor, Miss E. Johns; auditors, E. M. Dillon, A. Armstrong.

At a meeting of the Mission Band of the church the following officers were elected: Pres., Evelyn Garbutt; vice-pres., Cleveland Harris; sec., Margaret Christie; cor. sec., Olive Miles; treas., Bert Laughton; pianist, Miss Irene Cook; cor. sec., Jean McKay. During the past year the band exceeded its missionary allocation.

Harvey Stewart was elected to the Middle Road Section School Board to replace A. McCauley, who has retired after nine years' service. A. E. Thompson contested the election, which was held at the annual meeting of the school supporters of the district. A motion to reduce the salary of the secretary-treasurer was rejected by the casting vote of the chairman. Due to overcrowding in the present school, the board was authorized to secure estimates on the cost of an additional two rooms.

OBITUARY

Mrs. Clara Blakeley

The death took place of Mrs. Clara Blakeley, widow of the late Henry Blakeley, in her ninety-second year. She had been a resident of the district for the past seventy years, and is survived by one son, William, of Bronte; and two daughters, Mrs. O. A. Joyce, at Port Credit and Mrs. R. Gray, of Bronte. The funeral took place to Trinity Cemetery.

WEDDINGS

Fleming—O'Hara

A quiet wedding was solemnized in Caledonia, December 31st, when Rev. Father Harris united in marriage Gertrude Anna, daughter of the late Michael O'Hara, and Mrs. O'Hara, of Oakville, to Bert Fleming, of Montreal, son of Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Fleming, of Hagersville. Following the ceremony, the happy couple left for Montreal, where they will reside.

THE

TULE MARSH MURDER

STORY OF A MISSING ACTRESS AND THE TAXING OF WITS TO EXPLAIN HER FATE.

BY NANCY BARR MAVITY.

SYNOPSIS.

Don Ellsworth's wife, formerly actress Sheila O'Shay, disappears. Dr. Cavanaugh, criminal psychologist, learns their married life has been unhappy. He identifies a charred body found in the tule marsh as that of Sheila. Barbara, his daughter, faints when she hears this.

Mrs. Kane, Sheila's maid, is arrested, and admits that Ellsworth married under threat of breach of promise. A threatening note signed "David Orme" is found. Peter Piper, a Herald reporter, trails Orme and arrests him.

At Orme's trial Mrs. Kane says Sheila was Orme's wife and had never been divorced.

CHAPTER XL.—(Cont'd.)

"The court will please come to order," said the judge, emerging from cover. "Proceed with your next question, Mr. District Attorney."

"What, if any, evidence have you as to the relations existing between the deceased and the defendant?" The district attorney was decidedly jumpy. He looked as if he were handling a firecracker which might go off unexpectedly.

"If you mean Miss O'Shay and Mr. Orme, Miss O'Shay told me herself. Orme simply disappeared. She was afraid if she started divorce proceedings he might turn up. Besides, she didn't want to wait. She was afraid she might lose her chance of landing Mr. Ellsworth."

"Just a moment. She told you all this?"

"Of course she told it to me!" Mrs. Kane's teeth wobbled dangerously, but clicked into place. "Did you think I made it up?"

"The witness is admonished to confine herself to answering the questions."

"You knew Mr. Orme by sight at the time of this marriage?"

"Yes," snapped Mrs. Kane, glaring balefully at the judge, who had presumed to clip her utterances.

"Can you fix the date of the separation?"

"It was a year ago come April."

"And when did you next see Mr. Orme?"

"He came to Mr. Ellsworth's house and brought this letter they've all been talking about. I told him that Miss O'Shay wanted him to go away."

"And then?"

"I saw him hanging around the house. I spoke to him and told him it was no good waiting, but he said he would not leave till he had talked with her."

"And what was the last time you saw him, prior to this trial?"

"On the evening of March 18—the last night I ever saw Miss O'Shay alive—she answered a telephone call from the extension in her boudoir at about half past eight o'clock. I remember the time, because she had only just come upstairs, directly after dinner. She threw a cloak over her evening dress, and went out immediately, without telling me where she was going. I went to the hall window at the front of the house to see what she was up to. When I looked out, I saw Miss O'Shay and Mr. Orme walking down the driveway towards the street together. That was the last I saw of her—she never came back."

CHAPTER XLI.

This time there was no need of the bailiff's gavel. In the amazed silence that filled the room, the telegraph instrument sounded suddenly loud. The breaking of a pencil point by one of the Q and A twins came as a tiny, sharp explosion of sound.

The district attorney mopped his brow and leaned back with a sigh of relief.

"That is all, Mrs. Kane."

"You may cross-examine."

The young defence attorney eyed the figure in the witness chair as if he were a lion tamer entering the cage of an unknown and highly temperamental beast of prey. His ruddy face had grown perceptibly paler. But he scraped his chair back from the table and advanced to the attack.

"Mrs. Kane," he said, "is it not somewhat unusual for a lady to confide her intimate personal affairs to her maid?"

"I've nothing to do with whether it is unusual or not. Miss O'Shay did it."

"Will the witness kindly answer the question."

"Your honor, I object. The question is purely rhetorical. The witness cannot be expected to testify as to what is or is not unusual."

"Objection sustained."

"Mrs. Kane, can you explain how Mrs. Ellsworth came to confide her marital and other affairs to you?"

"Yes. It was because I loved her." The face with its slipping teeth and its sausage roll of polished black hair was no longer funny. It was grim, and in a strange way majestic. "Miss O'Shay was a foolish, headstrong woman, but I loved her like my own daughter, and she knew it. I was the one person in the world who never flattered her, to whom she could always turn, in the scrapes she was forever getting into. God knows I did my best to keep her out of trouble. She didn't take my advice, not very often she didn't. She was always wild—always took what she wanted, and never mind the consequences. And that I'd do my best to keep the consequences from hurting her—too much. Always she got what she wanted, and always it hurt her in the end—till the very end of all——" The sunken mouth twisted, the sharp eyes squinted shut, holding back the tears. One of them splashed down on the back of her cotton glove, and she wiped it off with the other hand. "She was nothing but a wayward girl, all those years—a wayward girl, spoiled by all the attention she got playing with fire and thinking it wouldn't burn. Why wouldn't I know?—I, who took care of her from the time when I kept a boarding house and she was hardly more than a child, half starved, tramping the agencies hunting a job in the chorus!"

Graham gripped the table before him with both hands.

"Your honor, I ask that the last remark of the witness be stricken from the record as unresponsive. The character of Mrs. Ellsworth as interpreted by Mrs. Kane is beside the point."

"The witness answered your question. She has a right to explain her answer. The remarks may stand."

"Why, if you were so devoted to Mrs. Ellsworth, did you withhold this vital information? Why did you refuse to co-operate with Dr. Cavanaugh in his efforts to identify the body?" Graham pounced.

"Your honor!" The district attorney was pained and reproachful. "I object! The question is complex."

"I will reframe the question." Graham had himself in hand now. He faced the old woman in the chair with an air of solemn triumph. "Mrs. Kane, why did you refuse to give Dr. Cavanaugh a hair of Mrs. Ellsworth to compare with the hair of the body found in the marsh?"

The district attorney leaped to his feet.

"Your honor, I object! Is it the intention of the defence to impeach this witness?"

"It is," Graham said sturdily. "I am laying the foundation for that, your honor."

"The witness may answer."

"Of course I may answer. Why shouldn't I—now that it can't be helped?" The black eyes were open now, wrathfully fixed upon Graham. "You needn't think you're worrying me a bit, young man. I'd have you know I've talked down a lot smarter man than you are, in my day—or than the judge either, if it comes to that!"

The judge's mouth twitched.

"I must admonish you that if you do not confine yourself to answering the question put to you you lay yourself open to contempt of court."

Mrs. Mrs. Kane was not to be intimidated.

"I guess I've been laid open to lots worse things," she muttered. Then, having disposed of the majesty of the law, she faced the court room, patiently ignoring with a bony shoulder the end of the table where the defence attorney sat.

"I wouldn't help them to find her murderer," she said, "because it was the last scandal I could protect her from. All my life I tried to do that for her. Many and many's the time I've failed. But for all the things that got out about her, there were plenty of others that didn't get out. She was a bad, lovely woman, was Miss O'Shay. But I didn't want something bad to be the last thing people remembered about her. She was so terrified of growing old—of losing the power of her beauty that had brought her everything she wanted. She was terrified of that when she married Mr. Ellsworth for his money and committed bigamy to get it. Why should I care what happened to him—to Orme, or Ellsworth, or any of them? Why should I want her name to be hawked about again, a scandal in her very death? Do you think I cared about getting somebody hung for her death? One of her beautiful hairs was worth more than Orme's neck. I didn't want anybody to know that she had ever been afraid. If she wasn't dead, it was her own business and I'd know it soon enough, because she'd tell me without bringing the police into it to bother her. But if she was dead, then—then I wanted people just to remember—to remember that she was lovely."

The tall, spare figure, wrapped in its bizarre draperies, topped by an absurd purple hat, stood erect. The black eyes, glowing with the fire of a fanatical, protecting angel, looked straight before her, beyond the courtroom walls.

Graham sank back in his chair.

"That is all," he said wanly.

"Your honor, the people rest." said the district attorney.

CHAPTER XLII.

"Don't take it so hard." Peter tilted his chair back against the wall at an acute angle which left his long legs dangling in space. "God knows I don't want you to get him off if he's guilty. You're putting on a good show, and that's all that's to be expected."

Graham stabbed the desk blotter before him with the point of an unusued pen, as if he found some satisfaction in impaling a series of minute invisible objects.

"The heck of it is," he said, "I don't believe he is guilty."

Dr. Cavanaugh, who had eased his large bulk into a comfortable chair by the window, turned a serene gaze upon the worried lawyer.

Snubbed

A young woman went into a bank to have a cheque cashed.

"But, miss," the clerk told her, "you will have to get someone to introduce you before I can pay you the money on this cheque."

She stared at him disdainfully.

"Sir," she said, haughtily, "I wish you to understand that I am here strictly on business. I am not making a social call. I do not care to know you."

Birth of Modern Era To Be Shown In England

Celebrated Relics Obtained—King's Robe and Wm. Penn Charters on Exhibit List

London.—A comprehensive survey of the period which is generallly regarded as being the beginning of modern England—the latter half of the reign of Charles II.—will be embodied in an exhibition to be held in London from January to March.

It is intended to collect as many exhibits as possible to illustrate the life of the King and his court, the campaign of Worcester, the arts of the period and the beginning of science, together with portraits of and by famous characters of the reign.

Famous Relics Loaned.

Loans are being made from private English collections to make the survey a success.

The Hudson Bay Company, which received a charter from Charles II. in 1670, and was inaugurated by James, Duke of York, and Prince Rupert, is lending ledgers and journals containing the royal stamp, and these will throw light on some of the customs of the time. For example, the sale of furs by auction was not in those days carried out under the hammer. A length of candle was burnt, and when the last flicker guttered out the fur was sold.

The Duke of Devonshire is lending part of his valuable collection of silver from Chatsworth House, Derbyshire, while the Duke of Portland is temporarilly depriving Welbeck Abbey of a silver gilt toilet set and other fine pieces.

Society of Friends Contributes

Many heirlooms are loaned by City Companies and the Middle Temple. The Society of Friends is sending some interesting charters which once were in the possession of the founder, William Penn. These charters have Indian totem marks on them, which are regarded as proof of the early trade with the American Indians.

While few authentic articles of clothing of the Restoration period remain, the robe of Charles II. will be on view. In the jewelry section the diamond and black enamel ear-rings which were once the property of Nell Gwynne, "Sweet Nell of Old Drury," will be displayed.

Relics of the Battle of Worcester are coming from the Channel Islands, where Charles took refuge after his defeat by Cromwell.

The portrait of Samuel Pepys, one of the most famous characters of the period, will adorn one important spot, and a letter written to his almost equally famous diarist and contemporary, John Evelyn, also will be shown.

Control of Grasshoppers

Next summer's grasshoppers are being fought this winter by the United States Bureau of Entomology, says the American Association for the Advancement of Science. A survey is now in progress n the 'hopper country; this will be completed soon, and it will then be known what steps will be needed to prevent a serious outbreak in the West and Northwest next summer. The normal method of stopping an outbreak of grasshoppers is to distribute baits of arsenic-poisoned bran where the young insects crawl in the thickets before they get their wings and move over a wide territory. The present survey should show where it will be necessary for private owners and State authorities to lay in larger supplies of the munitions of chemical warfare.

Royal Bank of Canada Issues Strong Report

Profits at $5,448,327 fully cover regular dividends and usual appropriations—Total assets stand at over $825,000,000—Liquid position well maintained, quickly available assets totalling $348,630,551.

Further striking evidence of the unusual strength of the Canadian banking system and the rapidity with which it has been possible for leading Canadian banks to meet the changed conditions is afforded by the annual statement of The Royal Bank of Canada. The report, which is now going forward to shareholders, is for the fiscal year ending November 30th.

With the large resources at its disposal, the Bank has been able to readily adjust itself to the new conditions and at the same time maintain its characteristically strong liquid position.

With the less active trade conditions, the general business of the Bank, as represented by commercial loans, was on a smaller scale, but shareholders will be gratified in finding that profits were more than sufficient to permit of payment of the regular dividend at the rate of 12 per cent. and, in addition, to take care of all the usual appropriations, including $600,000 set aside for Dominion Government taxes.

Assets Well Maintained

The general statement of assets and liabilities shows total assets in excess of $825,000,000, a reduction of only about 7 per cent. as compared with the amount reported at the end of the previous year. In the light of lower commodity prices and general slackening of activity, the maintenance of total assets at such a high level should be regarded as a remarkably good showing. In keeping with its policy, the Bank's liquid position, as usual, is a strong one, liquid assets totalling $348,630,551, or over 48 per cent. of liabilities to the public. The principal accounts included among them are cash items of $150,286,891; Dominion and Provincial Government securities of $85,473,058 and Canadian municipal and British, foreign and colonial public securities of $24,641,816. Call loans total $76,293,380 and naturally represent a substantial reduction for the year, those in Canada being down $18,847,955 or 33 per cent., and those abroad over $7,000,000.

The generally lessened business activity is further reflected in commercial loans, which are $419,345,043, as compared with $444,815,877 a year ago. Letters of credit also show a reduction — nearly $10,000,000 — obviously due to curtailed international trade.

Total deposits stand at $647,303,075, as against $695,589,060 at the end of the 1930 year. The decline, as is well known, has been principally in deposits elsewhere than in Canada, those in the Dominion being down only $7,160,000, and now amount to $479,165,064, as against $486,325,264.

Satisfactory Profits

The many shareholders of the Bank will be particularly interested in the profit and loss account, and the showing made should be regarded as very satisfactory. Profits for the year amounted to $5,448,327, and these added to the amount brought forward from the preceding year brought the total available for distribution up to $9,555,105. Payment of the usual 12 per cent. dividend absorbed $4,200,000; a contribution of $200,000 was made to Officers' Pension Fund; the usual amount of $400,000 was appropriated for bank premises and $600,000 was allotted for Dominion Government taxes. After meeting all these charges the substantial amount of $4,155,105 was carried forward to credit of profit and loss into the next fiscal year.

The report will be submitted to shareholders at the annual meeting to be held at the Head Office of the Bank on Thursday, January 14th.

Revival of Classics Noted in Britain

Trend of Literature Running to Nineteenth Century Novels

London.—According to statistics of trade amongst the booksellers, the nineteenth century novel is again coming into favor. A small boom is reported in the sale of Waverley novels; perhaps this is prompted by the approaching celebration of the Walter Scott centenary.

The conjecture is offered that this revival of the British classics is due, in part at least, to the fact that young scholars of to-day are not compelled to read them as school tasks. The Morning Post remarks that by schools going off the classics standard, so to speak, literary merit, like the pound sterling, may be finding its true level.

Present indications are, adds the Morning Post, that Meredith, George Eliot, and even Stevenson are still in eclipse, though its own belief is that George Eliot, and certainly Stevenson, are being re-read by their admirers much more frequently than sales of new editions would suggest. As for Thackeray, he has always enjoyed a steady circulation in a rather select circle. Dickens, on the other hand, appears to lose ground in one place only to burst into renewed popularity in another. It would be very interesting to know whether his "Christmas Carol" is read as often at this season of the year as it used to be.

London booksellers agree that amongst authors still happily with us, none has more consistently kept his public for 40 years than Kipling.

Men vs. Women At the Wheel

That good old argument "which sex produces the best and safest automobile driver" has been revived again by William Ullman in a copyrighted article syndicated by Ullman Feature Service and quoted from the Washington (D.C.) Post.

The writer, "who has constituted himself a ranking committee of one with regard to men and women drivers, has been busy for ten years collecting every vagrant figure and fact that would have any possible bearing upon the subject. Each fact or figure added to the collection only indicates the futility of the task. The only way to dispose of the ranking problem is to place both sexes in the No. 1 position or both in the No. 2."

The latter, he adds, seems the better. Probably "neither sex has made a sufficiently good record to justify the No. 1 ranking."

But let's get down to cases:

Most of the figures available on the subject make women seem to be far in the lead when it comes to the matter of safety. In 1930, for instance, 1,146,781 male drivers participated in accidents as against but 81,036 women.

That figure looks bad for the man, but no figure that looks so bad could be truly reflective of conditions. There are, in extenuation, so to speak, three times as many men as women drivers. Accordingly, instead of being about eleven times as unsafe as women—as the first figure superficially indicates — men are roughly only three and two-thirds as prolific in causing accidents. That, of course, is putting it on a man-to-woman basis.

The great part of driving done in this country is the commuting type. The majority of accidents happen during the rush hours of the morning and evening.

There are women drivers on the streets at these hours, it is true, but not in the proportion of one to three, which would have to be the case were the safety figures to show accurately which sex was the more proficient in driving.

From the fatal-accident viewpoint, "the worst hour of the twenty-four in any day is that between 7 and 8 p.m.," says Mr. Ullman, continuing:

That is the hour during which the nation is going to the movies. Even in the family possessed of two cars, but one of them is used on this occasion. Who drives it? Usually the man. The safety-figures indicate that, to spare his reputation, he would do better as a passenger.

The worst hour of the day with regard to non-fatal accidents is that between five and six o'clock in the afternoon. That is the period in which an exhausted, tired, nervous, hungry, impatient male population is rushing home to dinner. Women at that time already are home—or husbands think they should be, at any rate.

As every one knows, Sunday is the day of greatest traffic hazard. It produces or did throughout the year 1930, according to one set of figures, a total of 152,851 accidents. Sunday is the day of the family outing in the car. Who drives the car on this outing, the man or woman?

Over a long period of years, in a sketchy sort of way, "the writer has counted Sunday drivers in various parts of the country with a view to determining the proportion of women men drivers." Here are the results.

His figures indicate that it is something like twenty to one in favor of the men.

Male drivers can even take the offensive with regard to this aspect of the argument. There is Friday, for instance, that famous day of irresistible bargains which draws women drivers into the congested area on the greatest scale of the week.

And, what happens? Why, exactly the same thing, comparatively, that occurs to men on Sundays—the incident rate grows.

An offense which ranks well up in the list of accident causes is failing to give signals. Women may argue here that they always give signals. On the other hand, men may point out that the character of signals women give are worse than none at all. Stalemate!

Next is the violation of good road manners, and the motor-vehicle regulations, known as "cutting in." Here women, if they desire to do so, may fall back upon the argument of their innate caution.

But, why argue? Clearly there is all kinds of evidence, statistical, psychological, and otherwise. But the evidence has no specific meaning.

How about rating both sexes No. 2, leaving the No. 1 position open until a later day when statistics are bigger, better, and a lot more conclusive?

New Stamps for China

Shanghai.—Commemorative of the Chines leaders who lost their lives or died in the early revolutionary struggles which resulted in the overthrow of the old imperial regime and establishment of the Republican Government at Nanking, a special issue of postage stamps is being placed on sale at all Chinese postoffices.

The new issue is divided into the Sun Yat-sen and the "Martyr" designs, the former bearing the portrait of the late Dr. Sun Yat-sen, the "Father of the Republic." The second design commemorates the martyrs of the revolution and each one tells its own story in the historical background of the man whose portrait it bears. The Sun Yat-sen design was issued in denominations of 2 cents olive and 4 cents green, and is surmounted by the white sun, the Kuomintang emblem, and at the bottom are the Chinese characters "Chung Hua Min Kuo Yu Tseng," meaning the "Republic of China Postal Service." The first issue was bought up by philatelists, but other denominations of 15 cents, 25 cents, $1, $2 and $5 will be issued later.

The "Martyr" design, yet to be placed on sale, comprises the following denominations and portraits: Teng K'eng, ½ cent and 5 cents; Liao Chung-kai, 6 and 30 cents; Chu Chih-hsin, 8 and 12 cents; Sung Chiao-jen, 10 and 16 cents; General Huang Hsing, 20 and 40 cents; General Chen Chi-mei, who was assassinated in Shanghai at the instigation, history says, of Yuan Shih-kai, 1 cent and 50 cents.

English Movies Now Offering Firm Competition

Montreal.—The enormous shrinkage in the earning power of American films is indicated in a startling report issued by the giant Fox Film Corporation, once capitalized at nearly £100,000,000, which shows that their profits for the six months ended June last were just over £20,000, compared with a profit of £1,357,000 for the corresponding period of last year, writes S. A. Atkinson in the Daily Telegraph.

One of the main factors in this huge decline, which has materially affected Hollywood's production plans, is the success of the English film, which, before the "Quota" Act came into force, filled less than 10 per cent. of the programs shown in this country, but now averages 30 per cent., and in some theatres 50 per cent.

Coast-to-Coast Phone

Montreal.—Long distance telephone communication from coast to coast over Canadian lines will be inaugurated sometime in January, it was stated recently by the Bell Telephone Company. At present, it was explained, some long distance calls across the prairies are routed through the United States. A report that the complete Canadian service had already been inaugurated was declared to be incorrect.

Sunday School Lesson

SUNDAY S.—Dec. 28 ... GRAHAM January 10. Lesson II—The First Disciples—John 1: 35-42. Golden Text—Behold, the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world.—John 1: 29.

ANALYSIS

I. THE HERALD OF THE NEW ERA, 1: 19-34.

II. THE HERALD'S TESTIMONY RECEIVED, 1: 35-39.

III. INTRODUCING JESUS, 1: 40-51.

INTRODUCTION—This passage tells how the first believers came to discover that Jesus was the "Christ," the expected Messiah, the Promised One.

I. THE HERALD OF THE NEW ERA, 1: 19-34.

The first to recognize that Jesus was something more than a village carpenter was John, the young preacher beyond Jordan. His burning appeals for repentance and righteousness brought the inevitable crowds. People like sermons which denounce. "The Jew" (v. 19), much concerned at what they were hearing about him, sent a delegation to ask him who he was.

To their question, John replied, "I am not the Christ," v. 20. "Christ" would be more generally understood by his cosmopolitan readers than the Hebrew "Messiah." "Nor am I Elias." (Elijah was expected to return as the herald of Messiah, Mal. 4: 5.) "Nor that prophet" (Moses, Deut. 18: 15). "You want to know who I am? What matters it who I am? Say, I am 'a voice'." God's greatest and most useful servants in his church are those who are so filled with his spirit that they have attained perfect self-effacement. "What matters it whether I have a position of prominence or not so long as my Lord's work will go on?" A spirit like that would straighten many a pathway for God in his church.

"Why do you baptize them?" v. 25. It was complacent religiosity demanding the credentials of the preacher who had offended it. The Baptist's reply is his testimony concerning Christ, vs. 26, 27.

We hear no more of the delegation. In v. 29 we have the Evangelist expressing his own religious experience in the words of the Baptist. It was only after the resurrection that this truth came home to the disciples, Luke 24: 21, 26.

Verses 32, 33 suggest a vision which pictured a gentle and not a warrior Messiah such as the people expected. It was not the descent of the dove, but the abiding of the Spirit that convinced the Baptist. A God-like life is the most convincing proof. Baptizing with the Spirit (v. 33) implies the living of a positive life of goodness in contrast with the negative cleansing of sin implied by water baptism. "We are not damned for doing wrong, but for not doing right," R. L. Stevenson. The Christ came to save us by inspiring an enthusiastic, positive virtue.

II. THE HERALD'S TESTIMONY RECEIVED, 1: 35-39.

The Baptist repeated his testimony in the presence of his two disciples, v. 35. "Here is the New Master, I give way to him." In proclaiming the truth concerning Jesus, he was ruining his own prospects as a leader. It is the man who will sacrifice his own interests for God and right who is always turning others to God, v. 37. The parting (v. 37) would not be without its sadness, but the finest loyalty to truth is that which impels us to follow a higher truth when we see it. These two men did not know definitely what they sought—but they were obeying the impulse of the best that was in them. To all such, Christ reaches out his hand, v. 38. Fifty years were not enough to dim the memory of that hour when they "found" him. It was four in the afternoon, v. 39.

III. INTRODUCING JESUS, 1: 40-51.

It is impossible really to know Christ and not want to share him. The Christian who is indifferent to missions is the victim of a mistaken identity—he has not yet discovered the real Christ. Andrew (v. 40) was the first apostle and missionary. By the time this Gospel was written he was so overshadowed by his brother that he is introduced as "Simon Peter's brother." Although pushed aside by his more officious brother, he worked on, giving of his best, never seeking thanks or recognition. Thank God for the Andrews! "In the morning," (v. 41)—rather than "first" as in the Authorized Version—he findeth his own brother Simon." He did not say, "Thank God, I'm saved" and let it go at that. He shared. He was a Christian, first of all, in his own home. Why do we find it so difficult to talk religion to our own folk? Is it because they know us so well?

Simon, hot-headed, impulsive, unsteady, may have hesitated to come. Solid, steady men like Andrew were better fitted for the new task, he may have thought. But Jesus said to him, "Thou art Simon," that is—"I know the quality of character that is connected with your name now. You are sand now, but it is in you to be a rock. I'll give you that name now. Live up to it." It was the love that believeth all things, hopeth all things, and is therefore transforming.

Philip, found by Jesus himself, in turn found Nathanael, v. 45. Nathanael's question, "Can any good thing come out of Nazareth?" (v. 46) was probably the expression of the petty jealousy that so often exists between one small village and another. Nathanael hailed from a neighboring village, Cana.

"Come and see,"—solve your doubts by putting the assertions of religion to the test of living them.

The World Crisis

Sir Arthur Salter in the Yale Quarterly.—Whatever is done by governmental action or otherwise to restore confidence as the basis of new foreign investment, it is difficult to believe that it can be quick and effective enough to meet the situation of the present winter. When once confidence has been so badly shaken as it now is, it will, at best, be a long time before the individual investor in creditor countries will be willing to invest his money on the scale and in the form required by the situation, on the credit of foreign borrowing countries on any security they can offer. If this is so, there are only two alternatives. The one is a series of extending moratoria in debtor countries, as regards both public and private debts, accompanied very probably by a disorderly falling away from the gold standard into every form and degree of currency depreciation. The other is the definite and deliberate action of creditor countries to use their public resources as the basis of new foreign lending, and to direct that lending to the most useful purposes.

Abandoned Gold Mine Found After 50 Years

Piumby, Minas Geraes, Brazil—A gold mine partially developed by four British engineers fifty years ago and then abandoned has been discovered by Silves Simoes, years after all trails leading to the place had disappeared.

According to stories still circulating here, the four British engineers were accompanied by two natives when they discovered the gold deposit. The secret of the mine's location was closely kept, however, and the native guides died without revealing the whereabouts of the gold.

Conduct is the great profession. Behaviour is the perpetual revealing of us. What a man does tells us what he is.—F. D. Huntington.

Graf Zeppelin Goes Into Winter Quarters

Friedrichshaffen.—The Graf Zeppelin has been put in winter quarters. With the return of Dr. Hugo Eckener from Berlin, following the Aero-Arctic session in November, brief landing manoeuvres were carried out, after which the veteran airship was placed in her hangar. In the meantime, complete overhauling and inspection will be made.

The year was a busy one for the Graf. A total of 73 trips were made, totalling 117,761 kilometers and 1,201 flying hours. It brought her total number of journeys since her completion at the end of 1928 to 232, with a total distance covered of 349,827 kilometers. She has spent 3,588 hours in the air.

The most important achievement of the Graf in 1931, is considered her three South American trips, since they demonstrated the feasibility of a punctual, regular line between the two continents. Dr. Eckener believes they probably will be repeated next year, perhaps the number of journeys increased. That depends, however, on the results of discussions with the Lufthansa officials and with German postal officials, some of whom took part in the 1931 trip. The rest of the 1932 progress has not yet been arranged, nor is it certain that a second Arctic journey will be undertaken.

Canada May Supply Cosmetics to Britain

Washington.—English complexions may depend for their artificial aid more upon Canada and less upon the United States, it is indicated at the Department of Commerce.

The department points out that in 1930 Great Britain imported 85 per cent. of her total importations of perfumery, tooth pastes, sachets, lip sticks, rouge and such like cleansers and adornments from the United States and France. Less than 3 per cent. came from the Dominions and Colonies and of that amount Canada supplied the largest part.

But now Great Britain has clapped 50 per cent. ad valorem on these imports in addition to existing duties. American trade in these articles was worth over $2,000,000 and the British market absorbed 25 per cent. of total exports from the United States.

The department says exporters in the United States are watching for increased preference to be given by the Dominions to the Mother Country. An American business valued at a million and a half dollars is done with British countries exclusive of the United Kingdom.

Prized Bavarian Gem Auctions at $18,300

London—The Wittelsbach blue diamond, gem of the Bavarian crown jewels, was auctioned off recently for £5600 (about $18,300), in the presence of a throng of experts. A brilliant diamond pendant brought $20,000, while another lot, including a diamond tiara, realized $35,000.

Competition for the emeralds in the collection was even keener than for the diamonds. One stone, a magnificent specimen, weighing more than 53 carats, sold for $18,300.

What New York Is Wearing

BY ANNEBELLE WORTHINGTON

Illustrated Dressmaking Lesson Furnished with Every Pattern

2855

A youthful air makes this rust-red woolen dress a favorite with the school and college girl and younger type of women.

And as you can see, there is just a hint of the "jacket" in this effective little dress that makes it so ideally suited for general daytime wear.

You'll marvel at the becomingness of the rever collar in brown woolen and repeated in the deep cuffs.

The skirt hugs the figure through the hips with a smart flaring hem.

Style No. 2855 may be had in sizes 14, 16, 18, 20 years, 36, 38 and 40 inches bust. Size 16 requires 3¾ yards of 39-inch material with 1 yard of 35-inch contrasting and 2¾ yards of binding.

Canton-faille crepe silk in dark brown with almond green is very smart.

It's perfectly dear in wine-red velvet with lace collar and cuffs.

HOW TO ORDER PATTERNS.

Write your name and address plainly, giving number and size of such patterns as you want. Enclose 20c in stamps or coin (coin preferred; wrap it carefully) for each number, and address your order to Wilson Pattern Service, 73 West Adelaide St., Toronto.

"Not any more than I'm willing to pay for the privilege of not bothering with him."

Argentine Grain Crop Increases

Buenos Ayres.—According to figures issued by the Agricultural Department, it is estimated that the next wheat crop will amount to 5,950,000 tons; linseed, 2,100,000 tons; oats, 950,000 tons, and barley, 410,000 tons. Compared with the last crops, these estimates show a reduction of 471,837 tons for wheat and increases of 315,193 tons for linseed, 184,894 tons for oats and 105,193 tons for barley.

Castoria made especially for CHILDREN

CHILDREN usually hate to take medicine but every child loves the taste of Castoria. And mothers like its action—so gentle, yet so prompt and effective.

Castoria is a never-failing comfort to children and mothers alike because it was formulated expressly for children—to correct their little ills and upsets.

The beauty of it is you can give Castoria to children of all ages with equally sure results. When baby's cry warns of colic, a few drops of Castoria has him soothed; and free from pain, he is asleep again in a jiffy.

In an older child when coated tongue or bad breath tell of constipation, a more liberal dose is usually all that is needed to cleanse and regulate the bowels.

Your doctor will tell you Castoria deserves a place in the family medicine cabinet until your children are grown. He knows it is safe for the tiniest baby; effective for a child in his teens.

What the New Year Should Mean to You

IT does not seem a very long time ago that we were talking about the coming of a new year, with its necessity for the balancing of all accounts, that we might learn just how we stood with regard to the profits and losses of the twelve months that were about to be filed away in the archives of life as ancient history. And now that that "new" year, too, has gone we are face to face with another New Year's day—face to face with the same old problems.

To many of us the year that has passed has not been particularly pleasant. To some of us, in fact, it may have brought so many frustrated hopes, so many disappointments, that we are more than usually glad to bid it godspeed that we may hail with joy the advent of a new and, as we fondly hope, a better opportunity. Yet, as a matter of fact, if we stop for a moment to look back over the twelve months that are now so rapidly drawing to a close, there are but few of us who will not find that the old year has been a pretty good year after all.

CELEBRATION UNIVERSAL.

Methods Differ Greatly, but New Year's is Observed Everywhere.

The commencement of a new year has been held in veneration by every nation of antiquity. Notwithstanding the diversity of opinion as to what is really the beginning of another year, all agree in celebrating some day of joy and festivity.

The ancient Greeks began their year about the summer solstice, June 21; the Persians also in June, the Chinese in March, and the Abyssinians begin their year in August. Among the ancient Mexicans the beginning of the new year was in February.

The new year's day of the Romans previous to the age of Julius Caesar was vague and uncertain and was begenerally in March or April. Caesar sent to Egypt for the celebrated astronomer, Sosigenes, by whose assistance the Julian calendar was regulated.

The last day of the old year and the first day of the new were consecrated to the god Janus by these old Romans; hence he is usually represented with two faces (looking backward and forward).

The ceremony of wishing one another a happy new year originated with the Romans, as did the custom of presenting new year gifts.

In northern Europe the druids went into the woods on the last night of the year and cut the mistletoe with a golden instrument. This was afterward distributed among the people, who preserved it about their persons as an amulet against the dangers of battle.

In Scotland New Year's eve is called Hogmenay or Singin een, because in certain parts of the country the young men are in the habit of going about the country singing a long song suitable to the season and begging meals and money, which are generally distributed among the poor.

JANUS.

'Tis mine to guard the portal of the year,
To close or open to the seasons four
And to the importuning throng of days.
Sometimes I hear the tread of stormy feet,
Hoarse trumpet blasts and loud assaulting blows
And threats to pull my ancient fortress down,
But other times they come with flatteries smooth,
Entreating, "Janus, Janus, let us in!"
I watchful stand; I will not turn the key
Until my glass and fingered dial stern
Declare the moment ripe. Two ways I look:
Two faces I present—one seamed with old
And gray with looking on the frozen past,
One fresh as morn and fronting days to be.
* * * * * *
Now, while the surging, deep toned bells lament
The passed year, o'er fickle, they shall change
Their solemn burden for a round of joy,
Chiming the praises of the year new crowned.

—Edith Thomas in "New Year's Masque."

Some Lucky New Year Ways.

Throughout Europe many delightful New Year customs prevail. In Scandinavia a feast is always prepared for the little birds, which might otherwise go hungry on account of the deep snows.

In Holland, as in Scotland, the wind is noted with care, because the luck of the year will be determined by the direction whence it blows. The south wind brings heat and fertility, the west wind milk and fish, the north wind cold and storm and the east wind a fruitful season.

In Italy the New Year is a day of greeting and good will and special feasting. Sicilian peasants take advantage of the fete to drive to town in their gay carts, so that the country roads are merry with the music of tinkling bells.

And Swiss folk, practical, industrious, stop their work for the nonce and visit friends, even when they have to carry their babies down the mountain slopes in cradles on their heads.

Adorning the Temples.

Trimmyng of the Temples with hangynges, floures, boughs and garlands (at New Year) was taken of the Heathene people whiche decked their Idoles and houses with such arraye.—Fifteenth Century Writer.

The New Year and the Old Year.

And one stays on for [illegible]

In retiring after 5 years as their president, Mr. T. A.Leslie, thanked the members for their loyal support and promised to continue to work to keep the Fair going. The 1931 Fair was the best for many years and he felt sure many more good Fairs will be held. The Treasurer's report showed a nice balance after all the expenses had been paid.

The Directors for 1932 will be practically the same as last year with Messrs. T.A.Leslie and Ken McIlwrick added..

IT PAYS TO ADVERTISE

Graduation

This week we have to record the formation of two more new regular Troops, one at Fenelon Falls and one at Portsmouth, which have been formed as the direct result of Lone Scout activity.

These two now bring the total number of Troops founded by Lonies up to twelve, which is a splendid record for the two and a half years that Lone Scouting has been organized in Ontario.

At Fenelon Falls Patrol Leader Douglas Warren, by his enthusiasm and tenacity has been responsible for the formation of the 1st Fenelon Falls Troop, and he has brought his father into the movement as the new Scoutmaster.

We are sorry to lose the Portsmouth "Bulldogs" from the Lone Scouts, as they are members of the original group who formed the first Lone Scout Troop in this province, and they have hung together through "Thick and Thin" for three years and have done most excellent work. In this centre the leader was Patrol Leader John Meers, who has now brought his brother in to be Scoutmaster of the 1st Portsmouth Troop, whilst John takes the position of Assistant Scout Master.

We congratulate these Lonies on their "graduation," and whilst we are sorry to se them leave the ranks of the Lone Scouts, we know that they will find larger scope and new fields of activity in the troops which they have organized.

Canada on the "Toy Standard"

Canadian movie theatres in numerous cities and towns went on the "Toy Standard" in December. For special matinees, that is. The admittance charge was made one toy, new or repairable, and the receipts were turned over to the local Boy Scout Christmas Toy Repair Shop.

We have not yet heard the official returns of the Scout Toy Shop scheme, but we know that there were a lot of happy kiddies on Christmas morning, who, if it had not been for this Scout Good Turn would have experienced a sad and disappointing Xmas.

We are glad that the Lonies had a share in this work. Some of them sent out parcels from their own homes, others sent their toys to Lone Scout Headquarters, from where they were forwarded to their new owners, and several who had neither toys or time sent contributions of money. Taken all round it was a splendid "Good Turn" and quite up to Lone Scout Standard.

Santa Claus and Fairies

Although it is a well recognized fact that all Canadian Scouts believe in Santa Claus, we are not quite sure what their attitude is on the question of Fairies.

However, we have some interesting information on this subject from Australia, as the following will show:

Lord Somers, retiring Governor of Victoria, told Australian Scouts that he thought he still believed in fairies when alone in the bush. "I could see a queer hole in a tree whre some old goblin might live; and at night I used to wonder whether the fairies came out to play." Lord Somers frequently led parties of Victorian Boy Scouts on hikes of several days in the bush.

A "Good Turn" and Its Reward

All Scouts are expected to perform at least one "Good Turn" every day all the year around, and at any time that they can do an extra "special" one they should do so, but these good turns are done, not for reward, but in order that the Scout may be of service and helpful to others, thus living up to the obligations of his Scout Promise.

However, occasionally reward comes along when it is least expected and in novel form, as happened to the 1st Moose Jaw (Sask.) Troop upon whose members the Moose Jaw Wild Animal Park Society conferred its Life Membership in recognition of the good work done by the Troop in improving the Park.

The World Scout Jamboree, 1933

Those Lone Scouts who are interested in the 1933 World Scout Jamboree will be interested to know that Count Paul Teleki, former Prime Minister of Hungary, and Hungarian Honary Chief Scout, has been appointed Camp Chief of the Jamboree Camp.

Are you interested in being a Lone Scout?

If you are between 12 and 18 years of age and unable to join a regular Troop write for particulars to the Lone Scout Department, 330 Bay Street, Toronto 2.

His Majesty's New Year Message

Prays for Return of Prosperity in London Message

London.—A prayer for the return of prosperity together with "the light of hope and strength of united purpose" was contained in a New Year message of the King, in reply to the greetings of the citizens of London, presented by the lord mayor.

"We live in times fraught with difficulties," the King said in his message of thanks, "but during the anxious days through which we have been passing the courage, determination and sacrifice of all classes to restore the fortunes of our beloved country filled me with admiration.

"It is in a spirit of confidence that I send my greetings to the citizens of London, praying that under Divine guidance the coming year may bring the light of hope and the strength of united purpose to our lives, and renewed prosperity to our land."

Record Output Of Gold Deposits

Over 14 Per Cent. World's Low Grade Deposits Produced in Canada

Timmins.—A survey of general information from the gold producing mines of Canada toward the close of 1931 shows very reasonable assurance of an output averaging substantially over 240,000 ounces of the metal monthly—or an aggregate of possibly 3,000,000 ounces in 1932.

The increase in gold production during 1931 has been the most remarkable in the history of the industry. Government records already on hand provide assurance of the total for 1931, exceeding $55,000,000 and possibly closely approaching $56,000,000. This compares with $39,900,000 in 1929 and $43,600,000 in 1930—the former highest records ever attained in Canada. Moreover, the end of the year finds production at a rate of close to $5,000,000—thereby indicating that for 1932 the output of gold in Canada will probably exceed $60,000,000.

Canada is at present producing between 14 and 15 per cent. of the total current gold output of the world The newness of the country and the vast extent of the favorable rock formations are factors which encourage a belief that growth of this industry will continue for some years to come.

A factor which promises to add in an important way to the gold resources of Canada is the attention now being given to low-grade deposits heretofore considered unprofitable. These deposits necessarily embrace exceedingly large tonnage, and they promise to establish another important backlog in the industry. A point of particular interest is in the township of Duparquet, where Nipissing Mining Company and Ventures, Limited, are bending their joint efforts to establish a large tonnage low-grade mine on the Beattie property. There are believed to be ten of millions of tons on the property.

Old Statue Ordains Long Holiday In France

Paris.—The recent Christmas holiday afforded the French a long week-end. From December 24 until the following Monday they were free to make merry. Only a few civil service employees, such as the telegraph and telephone departments, were on duty.

They also enjoyed another long week-end over New Year's. A law passed almost a quarter of a century ago stipulates that when a civic holiday falls on a Friday or a Tuesday, the Saturday or the Monday intervening shall be considered a "fest-day" as well.

Valuable Paintings Donated to Canada

Ottawa. — Through the generosity of some public-spirited Canadians, the National Art Gallery of Canada has now come into possession of Van Dyck's masterpiece, "The Repentant Magdalene," and Jan Provost's "Portrait of an Ecclesiastic." These paintings were on exhibit at the gallery here for many months, but were not the property of the institution until a number of benefactors, who anonymity is being preserved, made it possible for the gallery to secure them.

A number of smaller works have come into the possession of the institution through the same medium.

Chemical Research May Improve Plants

Winnipeg.—Prof. H. F. Roberts, of the botany department of the University of Manitoba, is attempting to obtain a chemical which will stimulate growth in plants, and is investigating the effects of certain nutrient salts on plant growth. Prof. Roberts will be experimenting for two or three years before he can be certain of results.

Until three years ago glass had never been manufactured in Manitoba. Now the Mid-West Glass Company of Winnipeg turns out more than 500 tons of finished glass every month and employs over 100 people with a monthly payroll of $10,000.

Shorter Skirts Predicted By Dictators of Fashion

Paris.—The dictators of fashion in Paris have decreed shorter skirts for the spring.

Afternoon gowns will reveal as much of the ankle as the wearer cares to show, while outdoor suits will come no further than half way down the calf.

New Year Honor List Expected to Be Brief

London.—The New Year's honor list is expected to be a very short one, especially as the last list, containing three peerages and two knighthoods, was issued as recently as November 16 in connection with the dissolution of Parliament.

There was some expectation that Sir Robert Hutchison, National Liberal member of Parliament for Montrose, Scotland, might go to the House of Lords in view of the negotiations with party leaders in his constituency looking to the opening of a seat for Sir William Jowitt, Attorney-General, who lost his seat in the House in the last election. The negotiations, however, have proved fruitless and Sir Robert may remain in the Commons for some time.

Sir Rennell Rodd, who has had a distinguished diplomatic career on the Continent and in the Near East, is mentioned for possible elevation to the peerage. He has had the comfortable Conservative seat of St. Marylebone, London, since 1928.

Prime minister MacDonald may take the opportunity of recommending to His Majesty some further recognition of the activities of women in various spheres, especially since no place was found for a woman in the new Ministry. The Order of the British Empire instituted following the war does not appear popular among male aspirants for honors but the title dame of the British Empire is regarded as one of great dignity and has been very judiciously distributed.

Largest Bridge in Jugoslavia To Be Opened to Public

Belgrade, Jugoslavia—The largest bridge in Jugoslavia has just been completed and will shortly be opened for use. It crosses the Danube River near Belgrade and will cut more than six hours off the train journey from Jugoslavia and Italy to Bucharest, Roumania.

It is the largest bridge built in the Balkans since the World War and is second in size only to a Roumanian bridge crossing the Danube not far from where that river empties into the Black Sea. Much of the material in this new structure was furnished by Germany on the reparations account.

Preliminary work has also been begun on another large bridge which is to cross the Save River near Belgrade. At present vehicular traffic has to cross on ferries.

Measles More Deadly Than Scarlet Fever

London.—A remarkable theory of the evolution of measles, once one of the little regarded disease of childhood, into one of the really dangerous ailments was advanced here recently by Dr. J. C. Ashton, well-known health expert. Measles ranks highest as a cause of deaths in childhood, he said, and leaves many victims with heart or respiratory weaknesses that become apparent later in life. British health authorities are warning the public to be on the watch for a serious epidemic of measles this winter, their prediction being based on the periodicity curve in public health figures.

"Measles seems to be increasing in virulence and to be gradually taking the place of scarlet fever from the point of view of its effect on the human being," he said.

"The popular view of measles ranks it as a mild and harmless disease. In general terms this is correct, but we must not let that fact hide two other facts of tremendous import: first, that more children die of measles than from any other infectious disease, and, secondly, that a child may recover from measles, but there may be something left behind.

"The aftermath in later life in the form of heart disease, kidney trouble, bronchitis, tuberculosis, and middle ear disease with deafness is a very heavy one."

Measles begins with sneezing, running of the nose and a harsh cough. The difficulty of diagnosing it in its early stages is due to the fact that there is nothing externally to distinguish it from a common cold.

"There is one sure way of telling measles in its early stage," says Dr. Ashton. "Look inside the lower lip and cheek for bluish white spots. If these are present, then it is measles without a doubt."

Canada's Minerals Meet Varied Needs

Toronto.—It is claimed that somewhere in Canada there is to be found every kind of mineral required in the world to-day. Canada possesses mineralized areas of great wealth. During the past few years mining areas have been opened in Northwestern Quebec, Northern Ontario, Northern Manitoba and British Columbia.

The growth of this industry is reflected in Government statistics, which show that 62,249 employees were engaged in it during the year 1922 and 95,102 in 1929; salaries and wages paid during the same years rising from $75,026,501 in 1922, to $124,490,511 in 1929, and capital invested from $493,694,823 to $867,021,033.

Clover Varieties Speed Up Output

Ottawa.—Clover and grass seed production throughout Canada increased substantially in most varieties last year, according to the markets service of the Dominion seed branch. The yield of red clover seed is expected to exceed 4,000,000 pounds with major increases in production reported in Eastern Ontario and Quebec. The production of alsike seed, which comes largely from Ontario, is estimated at 3,600,000 pounds, while a total yield of approximately 4,000,000 pounds of alfalfa seed is in sight, a much larger crop than usual.

Canada's Grass Seed To Beautify N.Z. Lawns

Toronto.—In recent years New Zealand's trade with the Dominion in seeds has not been all that could have been desired, but this trade is now showing improvement, and it has been found possible to create renewed interest in New Zealand grass seed. Efforts are being made to encourage sales, particularly in grass suitable for pastures, lawns, and golf links, and it is hoped that business in seeds will soon show a definite improvement.

Vegetables to be Certificated

Brussels.—All fresh vegetables sent from Belgium to England after March 15 must be accompanied by a certificate of origin, granted by the commune in which they are grown. The exportation of vegetables from France, via Belgium, is strictly prohibited.

Trade Improvement Predicted for 1932

Chicago.—Better business in general for 1932 was predicted today by 11 leaders in various lines.

Their views, published today in the January issue of Commerce, official publication of the Chicago Association of Commerce, were based on the belief that better management will result from the experience of the past.

"Organizations and individuals who have grown soft during the easy years are now trained down to lean, hard business fighting trim," said C. W. Nash, president of the Nash Motor Company. "Mistakes that were made are providing them valuable lessons for the future.

"Experience has decisively proved that we cannot shape or mould or change the natural economic forces of supply and demand with artificial expedients.

"Like medicine, these things are sometimes hard to take, but the sooner the dose is swallowed the sooner the recovery begins. That last two years should put our future in a healthier basis for resuming the forward and upward progress of the country's agricultural, industrial and financial condition."

Shallow Wells Used To Fight Fire Menace

Michigan forest fire-fighters last season developed a system of obtaining water for fighting ground fires by drilling shallow wells when no other near-by source was available, says the American Association for the Advancement of Science. On many occasions it was found possible to sink a well from three to eight feet into the ground in a short time and thus obtain sufficient water to keep a ground fire or a muck fire under control. The use of this system depends upon the height of the water table. When it is low the pump system cannot be used, but in ordinary seasons it has been found that a well point sunk a few feet into the ground will furnish enough water to fill portable tanks and pails.

Former Governor-General To Revisit Dominion

Ottawa.—Canada will be honored with a visit next spring from Lord Byng, former Governor-General, who debt settlements with other war debt- Chief Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police in London.

Lord and Lady Byng will spend the winter in Jamaica and other islands of the West Indies. On the way home they plan to proceed to Vancouver via the Panama Canal. From Vancouver, they will cross Canada to Halifax, making a few stops in the principal cities, especially at Ottawa. It is planned that Lord Byng will be here for the Vimy Ridge anniversary dinner on April 9.

While there have been instances of former Governor-Generals returning to Canada, these have been rather rare. Friends of Lord and Lady Byng throughout the country are looking forward with much pleasure to their coming.

1931 Goes Down As Record Heat Year

Washington.—The fellow who kept repeating through most of 1931, "gosh, it's hot," really hade something to talk about.

Official records of the United States Weather Bureau show the year now closed as the warmest on record for nearly every state.

While generally there was an excess of high temperatures, there also was a noticeable lack of disturbing and costly weather phenomena, such as the widespread droughts of 1930, severe tropical storms and tornadoes and devastating floods.

Surrounded by his charts and figures, J. B. Kincer, meteorologist, termed the excessive warmth the outstanding feature of 1931.

Training of Youths As Leaders Planned

Washington.—Development of informed national leaders from the country's youth was announced recently as the purpose of the formation of "The United States Society." Mr. Calvin Coolidge, Mr. Elihu Root, Mr. Newton D. Baker, Mr. Owen D. Young and Dr. John Grier Hibben, president of Princeton University make up the board of advisers.

Mr. David Lawrence, newspaper editor and writer, is chairman; Mrs. Mary Roberts Rinehart, vice-chairman, and Mr. Breckinridge Long, international lawyer, secretary-treasurer.

U.S. Farmers Pay Back $6,338,885 For Seed

Memphis, Tenn.—A recent announcement by Mr. J. H. Lynch, administrative official in charge of the Federal Farm Seed Loan Office here, reveals the fact that to date $6,338,885.86 has been paid back to the United States by farmers in this territory for farm seed loans made during 1931.

"We feel very much encouraged by the payments," Mr. Lynch said. "The promptness with which farmers have repaid and the fact that we now have warehouse receipts for 75,600 bales of cotton, prove the success of the plan."

Approximately $22,000,000 was loaned by the Memphis office to farmers in the drought areas of Tennessee, Arkansas, Mississippi, Louisiana and Alabama.

Farm Machine Exports of Canada Increase

Ottawa.—Exports of Canadian farm implements and machinery during November jumped to $146,470 in November last as compared with $114,830 the previous month. Figures for November, 1930, were $325,510.

Britain Extends Air Service To Tiberias Sea of Galilee

London.—The little town and harbor of Tiberias, on the Sea of Galilee, 700 feet below sea level, is now for the first time brought into regular high-speed communication with the outside world by the regular visits of big British flying boats on the Imperial Airways England-India service.

This is said to be the lowest level at which aircraft are regularly operated anywhere in the world. Below sea level the atmosphere gets denser. Theoretically, experts says a flying machine should take off a little more quickly with a large load and given a suitable engine, slightly higher speeds should be possible several hundred feet below sea-level than at normal height.

Czech Shoe King Uses Plane on Sales Trip

Prague.—What is described as the most lengthy and ambitious sales trip yet made by airplane beagn recently when a three-motored plane left the Zlin flying field for a 20,000-mile flight. The property of Thomas Bata, the Czechoslovak shoe king, it carried Bata himself, three heads of the export business of his firm, a quantity of samples, a British pilot, a Czech pilot and a wireless operator. The plane will visit all the larger cities in North and South Africa, Iraq, Mesopotamia and Persia, fly along the coast of the Red Sea and the Arabian Sea to British India and Dutch India.

Japan's Mushrooms Popular in America

Tokyo.—Japanese mushrooms are being exported in increasing quantities to the American market and are yielding good profits to growers in Gifu Prefecture.

The Gifu Agricultural Society started experimental shipments with 1,200 pounds of fresh mushrooms to San Francisco, packing them in four-pound baskets which were crated and shipped in cold storage. First shipments met with much favor.

Flying Inns Popular

London.—Flying inns are the latest attraction for air tourists in England. They are inns which have landing fields for private airplane owners and club pilots. Among them is the Fountain Inn, half way between Stony Stratford and Fenny Stratford on the London-Coventry Road, kept by Lieutenant Harrison, late of the British Navy. The landing field is near the house and pilots wishing to land are asked to circle three times, this signal bringing an automobile to take them from the landing ground to the inn.

Latest Radio Device Guides Unmanned Fleet in Air or Water

London. — A radio invention, by which it would be possible to control a fleet of airplanes or ships, is said to have been perfected by a young radio engineer. The inventor also declares that by his device radio signals cannot be jammed—that even if another radio station is operating on the same wave length, it will not affect the controlling instrument.

These revolutionary claims in remote radio control are made by Chales Keeling, of Buckhurst Hill, Essex, a London suburb. The system is so extensive that anything from a typewriter to an airplane can be controlled by a person miles away, Keeling declared.

In an interview he said: "My method is absolutely new. On one wave length, high or low, I can transmit eight distinct signals.

"Two men in one airplane could fly a dozen or so craft, carrying hundreds of tons of freight or mail. With the new robot pilot, which the air ministry still has on its secret list, these machines could be landed with perfect safety and without a human hand touching the controls.

"Freight vessels could be controlled either from the shore, or, if in a group, from one master ship. They would require no crew, every operation of the boat would be mechanical and would be controlled by radio."

How to play Bridge AUCTION and CONTRACT

by Wynne Ferguson

Author of "PRACTICAL AUCTION BRIDGE"

ARTICLE NO. 4.

Auction is a game of contrasts. One hand will play well and the next one badly; that is, on one hand you will get all the "breaks," and on the next, everything will go wrong. It is a game of such infinite variety that no player can ever hope to master all its quirks and turns. Even the best of players lost their judgment at times and allow their own hand to influence their bidding to their disadvantage when they should realize that their partner has an unusual or freak hand. The other night, the writer noticed two examples of this failure to be on the lookout for the unusual or freak type of hand.

AUCTION BIDDING:

The dealer, with the following hand:
Hearts—A, 7.
Clubs—A, 9, 4, 2.
Diamonds—A, Q, J, 8.
Spades—A, K, 4.

bid one no trump. Second hand passed and the dealer's partner bid two hearts. Fourth hand passed and the dealer bid two no trump. When his partner bid three hearts, the dealer failed to realize that, if his partner had a justifiable three-heart bid, they had a sure game in hearts and bid three no trump, although there was no sure game in no trump. The 100 Aces were too much for his judgment and, as a result, he went down three tricks undoubled, a net loss of 50 points on a hand that would have scored game at hearts. His partner's hand was as follows:
Hearts—Q, J, 10, 9, 6, 4
Clubs—Q, 6, 3
Diamonds—10, 9, 7
Spades—5

Don't allow 100 Aces to impair your judgment.

CONTRACT BIDDING:

The dealer should bid two no trump, and his partner four hearts.

As a contrast to his bad bidding, the player whose bid has just been criticized played the following hand very cleverly:

	Hearts—K, Q, 7, 6 Clubs—10, 4, 2 Diamonds—K, 9, 2, Spades—A, 6, 4
Hearts—5, 4, 3 Clubs—A, Q, 7, 5 Diamonds—6, 4 Spades—8, 7, 5, 2	Y A B Z	Hearts—8, 2 Clubs—J, 8, 3 Diamonds—Q, J, 10, 7, 2 Spades—K, Q, 10
	Hearts—A, J, 10, 9 Clubs—K, 9, 6 Diamonds—A, 8, 5 Spades—J, 9, 3

Z, the player in question, was playing the hand at three no trump. A opened the five of clubs, Z won the trick with the king and led four rounds of hearts, winning the last heart in Y's hand. B discarded two diamonds on the last two rounds of hearts. Z was now in a position where he could make two odd, but figured that if he could force B to make another discard, he might possibly make three odd by making three diamonds or two spades. At trick six, therefore, he led Y's ten of clubs, forcing A to win the trick, who thereupon led two more rounds of clubs. B was now forced to make another discard. He could have discarded either a spade or diamond. If the former, Z would discard a diamond and make two spade tricks. If the latter, Z would discard a spade and make three diamond tricks. It is a perfect example of the "squeeze" play.

Study the play of this hand carefully, for it was cleverly thought out. It is very unusual to win a game by leading your opponent's suit.

Young Paris Barristers Pay Taxes by Digging

Paris—Some young barristers in Montpellier have found a humorous way of protesting against the heavy taxes that are levied on members of the so-called liberal professions. As French Senators and Deputies are nearly all members of the bar, there are probably many future Parliamentarians among these young men. Considering the "vicinal" tax too high, they availed themselves of the right which they had, to pay it in kind. This is why they were seen one morning happily breaking stones and cleaning out roadside ditches under the supervision of a road mender. The result of this small incident was to attract the attention of the powers that be to the lot of those intellectual workers who, in France, are poorly paid. This gives food for thought, for if all Frenchmen suddenly availed themselves of their right to pay certain of their taxes in this way, the authorities would certainly be rather perplexed. The example of the barristers in Montpillier has already been followed by the tradespeople of a small town in the Pasde-Calais Department, who paid taxes which they considered excessive by three days of work on the roads.

First Use of Shorthand Traced to Early Romans

Rome.—Shorthand symbols are of ancient Roman origin, a recent archeological study has revealed. Romans were widely using a uniform system of shorthand writing 200 years before Christ.

Such are the declarations in a recent investigation by Gino Massano, who has brought to light the full alphabet of ancient Roman shorthand writers. The symbols are, in some respects, similar to those employed today.

Several centuries before Christ, when Rome was extending her provinces into every part of the world, the need for speed brought forth several forms of abbreviated writing by symbols which were swiftly adopted for commercial enterprises. Ancient records show most of the accounts and letters of Roman firms were written in shorthand without transcribing, as the recipient was always familiar with the code employed.

Canada Well Supplied With "White Coal"

Ottawa.—Canada is compensated for its lack of hard coal by the almost limitless supply of "white coal," or waterpower, which supplies nearly the entire energy requirements of the country, exclusive of that utilized for steam railways and automobiles.

The machinery of conciliation is created by public opinion; and with its more perfect adjustment the force of public opinion behind it will grow steadily more and more insistent. Little by little war will be erased from the possibilities.—David Starr Jordan.

RED ROSE TEA "is good tea"

Wise or otherwise, it's an excellent idea not to want the things you can't get. The largest bone in the human frame is the wish-bone. Fish bite, but nobody seems to want them muzzled. Beware of a woman who always agrees with you; she doesn't. We may fool others occasionally, but we all get fooled in time. We all like our friends to be perfectly frank about other people. Things people give you may cost you more than they are worth. It's an easy thing for a married man to understand why, as a bachelor, he didn't understand women.

When Sunshine Hits You

When a bit of sunshine hits you,
After passing of a cloud,
When a fit of laughter gits ye
And yer spine is feeling proud,
Don't forget to up and fling it
At a soul that's feelin' blue,
For the minute that ye sling it
It's a boomerang to you.

Wife—"Several men proposed to me before I married you."

Hubby—"Why didn't you marry the first fool that came along?"

Wife—"I did."

On page 617, volume 10, 11th edition, Encyclopedia Britannica, the page heading reads: "Foot-and-Mouth Disease—Football." After listening to the conversation of certain inspired old-grads during the late football season, we heartily subscribe to this highly illustrative and illuminating heading.

Are you a thoroughbred? It has been well said that the cart horse goes until he can't go another inch and then gives up; that the thoroughbred goes until he can's go another inch—and then goes the other inch.

Boy (visiting a shoemaker)—"What do you make shoes from?"

Shoemaker—"Hide."

Boy—"Why should I hide?"

Shoemaker — "Hide! Hide! The cow's outside."

Boy—"Let the ol' cow come; I'm not afraid."

Grandmother (to granddaughter)—"When I was your age we girls all wore petticoats."

Granddaughter — "Even then boys would be boys, wouldn't they grandma?"

There is no question but what Eve had the best husband in the world—at that time. If, as is said, it was necessary to use a man's eye to perfect television, do you suppose it was a woman's tongue that yielded the secret of the old-fashioned talking machine? In speaking of a neighbor, old Ragson Tatters said: "He's one of the fellows who can be depended upon to sign a petition or second a motion.

Dealer—"How do you like your new radio set?"

Scotchman—"The music is fine, but the lights are too dim to read by."

Helen—"You say you are going to marry a man with an income of $10,000 a year and try to persuade me it is a love match?"

Clara—"It is; I love money."

Bill—"Have much snow this year, Farmer Giles?"

Hi—"Fair amount, but my neighbor had more."

Bill—"How could he have more?"

Hi—"He has more land."

Everything Would Turn BLACK

Mrs. H. E. Swanzey Considers that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills (tonic) Saved Her Life.

"Feeling Like a Different Person."

"I could hardly walk across the room," writes Mrs. H. E. Swanzey, R. R. No. 1, Collingwood, Ontario, "Everything would turn black and I would become so dizzy I would have to rest. I thought I would never be strong—when I was advised to get Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I used them until I had taken six boxes. Soon I was feeling like a different person. I am now the mother of six strong, healthy children."

The iron and other elements in Dr. Williams' Pink Pills (tonic) increase the amount of haemoglobin, or oxygen-carrying agent, in blood. The result is a better appetite, a feeling of well-being, restful sleep, and the ability to do your work happily.

Women in Chile May Get Vote

Santiago, Chile.—Deputy Don Francisco Melvilu has presented a bill to Congress demanding votes for women throughout Chile. Supporters are working hard to obtain preferential consideration for the measure.

The South Pacific Mail, an English-language publication, commenting on the bill, says: "We believe female suffrage would be an excellent thing for this country. We do not know what the present proportion of boys and girls at school may be, but not long ago there were many more girls than boys receiving state education.

"It is a matter of common observation that the women of Chile are more intelligent than the men. They have a wider range of ideas, they are more practical when it is a question of the little things that make up daily life and upon them rests at all times a responsibility that they accept with good humor and philosophy. For in many country places, especially in the neighborhood of big towns with their corrupting influences, it is invariably the women who do the work and keep the homes going."

Plan Le Bourget Enlargement

Le Bourget, France.—Plans for the enlargement of Le Bourget Airport are being studied by a commission headed by M. Etienne Riche, Under-Secretary of State for Air. Modernization of field facilities and purchase of additional land as well as the construction of new hangars and administration buildings are being examined by the group.

TOO FAT AT 22

Lost 19 lbs.—And Backache

"I am 22 years of age, and I weighed 163 lbs. I had pains in the back and head, I didn't care about anything. When my friend told me to try Kruschen Salts, I would not at first—I was sick of taking stuff. But since I tried Kruschen Salts, six months ago, I have lost 19 lbs., and feel a different woman, so I am very thankful to Mrs. —— who recommended Kruschen Salts."—Mrs. P.

The condition which caused this woman to put on weight was also the cause of her backache and headaches. The whole trouble was due to the internal organs failing to expel from the body, regularly and completely, the waste products of digestion.

The six salts of Kruschen assist the internal organs to perform their functions properly—to throw off each day the wastage and poisons that encumber the system. Then, little by little, that ugly fat goes—slowly, yes—but surely. The backache and headaches disappear. You feel wonderfully healthy, youthful and energetic—more so than ever before in your life.

And how much happier she has become, because Fred comes home by telephone now every week. He calls her every Sunday evening at eight-thirty. It is an hour she waits for and looks forward to all week long. It brightens days that had become a bit empty and lonely with the family scattered.

Fred is happier, too. For the price of a movie he gets something no money can measure — his mother's voice — a touch of home. It's a fine way to start a new week's work.

HIGH SCHOOL RE-UNION

On Tuesday, Dec. 29th, pupils of the six classes of Streetsville High School starting in the years 1920-25 re-united for a banquet and dance.

The banquet arranged by the ladies of the United Church was a tasty spread, on tables delightfuly decorated with marigolds and black and yellow candles. With Ted McCurry as Master of Ceremonies an interesting program of songs, yells and speeches followed the repast. The chief speakers of the evening were Mr. Gerhart, Miss Bovaird, Gertrude Ross and Ted Cook. Personal, though friendly thrusts were handed out impartially by all the speakers to the delight of their listeners. To conclude this half of the evening many school-day pictures were flashed on the screen amid roars of mirth from all sides.

The party then moved to the Odd Fellow's Hall which for the occasion took on a maze of black and yellow streamers. Amidst these surroundings a happy seventy-five spent joyous hours dancing to the strains of the Campbell Family Orchestra or trading reminiscences on the sidelines. Hours that marched unmercifully on into another day and brought to a conclusion, all too soon, one of the gayest gatherings our village has seen in many years.

During the evening it was decided to make this an annual gathering and a committee was appointed to arrange next year's meeting. Its personnel: Mr. Gerhart, Gladys Stewart, Floyd Marlatt, Marie Blackall, Ted McCurry, Dorothy Graydon, Allison Pinkney, Bessie Adamson, Oliver Steen, Mary Crozier, Albert Quennell, Una Adamson, Graydon Clipperton. Ted McCurry who was largely responsible for the success of this year's re-union was again elected convener of the committee.

COMMUNITY CLUB

The North Trafalgar Community Club held a social evening, Dec. 30th, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. John Bonham. It was a fine evening and everyone who could took advantage of it, there were also several visitors and ex-members present. Euchre was indulged in, Mrs. Anderson May won the ladies' prize and Mr. W. Cooke, the gents'. The consolation prizes went to Miss Alice Steen and Norman Cooke.

The lunch committee then served coffee and lunch and every body did full justice to the many dainties.

The next regular meeting has been postponed indefinitely, but members will be notified later.

CLARKSON

Mrs. E. H. Smith, 583 Main Street East, Hamilton, who was injured near Clarkson, while driving with her daughter, from Toronto to Hamilton, died in St. Joseph's Hospital. Mrs. Smith underwent an operation for a fractured leg and other injuries, and died of shock, doctors said, as she was being removed from the operating room.

BRAMPTON

In spite of the bad weather, Police Magistrate L. J. C. Bull did a certain amount of business in Peel County Court on Saturday. A. G. McKay, Toronto, paid $10 and costs for reckless driving. Adam Bell, Erindale, was assessed $5 and costs for not having the requisite lights on his motor. Thomas Lockhurst, Charles Lockhurst, E. Wright and William Kirby were given a warning when they strayed onto the Meadowvale game preserve with a couple of rifles and met Game Warden Beeney. J. P. Hogan, Grimsby, had no license and left with the court $10 and costs.

PEEL FARMERS WIN IN BACON LITTER COMPETITION

Results of the 1931 Bacon Litter Competition conducted by the Ontario Livestock Branch show that the Peel farmers can hold their own in competition with the best hog feeders of other counties. R. P. Raine, Streetsville, won 6th and Robt. Reid, Brampton, 12th.

This competition has as its objective the establishment of a standard of excellence for grade brood sows kept by farmers. It is recognized that those brood sows which are prolific and rear large litters of select bacon hogs, that are good feeders making good gains at a low cost, are valuable and improvers of commercial hogs. This competition aims to give such sows prominence as breeders in their respective communities in the hope that their female progeny will be selected as foundation brood sows for the district.

Mr. Raine entered a litter of nine pigs which were marketed at the age of 183 days with a total weight of 1880 lbs. They graded 7 selects and 2 bacons at the packing plant.

Bob Reid made entry with a litter of 11 hogs which totalled 2060 lbs. when they were sold at the age of 182 days. This litter graded 5 selects, 1 bacon and 5 butchers.

LET US SMILE

"Oscar," said the bank manager, "there'll be a vacancy here soon and I'm thinking of giving your twin brother the job."

"My twin brother?" exclaimed Oscar.

"Yes, the one I saw watching the ball game yesterday, while you were at your aunt's funeral," explained the manager.

"Oh-er-yes," said Oscar. "I—I remember! I-I'll go and hunt him up."

"Good!" said the manager. "And don't come back till you've found him."

GOOD RESOLUTIONS

I WILL try to be a lifter, not a leaner; an encourager, never a discourager; lighten and share other people's sorrows; start songs and rejoicings, not complainings; make the world a little sweeter place to live in; keep in mind the will of God; make sunshine in life's shady places; see the bright side of everything; be clean in mind and body, working patiently, industriously and honestly for a living; earning a spotless character, so that I can look up, not down, and meet death's coming with a fearless smile; endeavor not to run away from my weaknesses, but bravely fight them out; be glad of life; have hope and faith in everybody; try to live without hate, jealousy, temper and envy; avoid speaking critically and bitterly, repeating only the good I hear; love because I must, give because I cannot keep; doing for the joy of it; cheerful in disappointments, charitable toward the erring and fallen; protect helpless animals; do as I would be done by; smile more and frown less and do every day something beautiful, some kindness that will cheer and strengthen another.

SIMPLE HOSPITALITY.

It Marked the Old Time New Year's Ways With Guests.

No longer are families at home to friends during New Year's day in Canada in the manner of old, when every lady expected to receive unless illness, death or untoward circumstances intervened. Wealth was not needed. Indeed, there was little of what is called wealth today to discourage modest folk from hospitality.

The house was still gay with Christmas greens, so no florist had to be considered. There were stone jars filled to the brim with sand tarts and gingersnaps and nut cakes, to say nothing of a marvelous fruit cake, in the pantry, so no caterer need be engaged. A modest punch, or, if the family's temperance principles were at stake, a fruit lemonade, was easily brewed. The silver card basket was placed conspicuously on the hall rack, and the second maid, in cap and apron, or the delightful old darky who was the family's nearest approach to a butler was stationed near the door, and at 1 precisely mother and daughters stood under lighted chandeliers, the one modern touch about the festivity, and waited for the callers to arrive.

Giggling youngsters peering from upstairs windows watched a procession of frock coated, top hatted figures swinging jaunty walking sticks as they went from door to door and speculated which would stop for a minute at their own front stoop.

On occasional doorknobs hung tiny baskets gay with red ribbon bows. Pass by, young gentlemen, brave in your unaccustomed toggery. The ladies are not at home there. But you may pause long enough to drop a pasteboard into the basket, thus expressing the greetings of the season and your personal interest in the household.

If the girl debutante made her bow to society at a formal reception or "leaked out," as one wit phrased it, minus the formality of a function the youth won his social spurs on the foughten field of New Year's calling. Rowdy pagehood and hobbledehoy squiring were left behind what time he donned the habiliments and outward symbols of a knight of the carpet and sallied forth to social conquests on behalf of fair ladies in company of elder and doughty warriors.

Frock coat, top hat and cane were shield and helmet and sword to him, and his first awkward bow to the line of damsels under the pendent crystal chandelier took all the courage required for the first breaking of lances on the jousting field.

New Year Nonsense.

A great many things are done in the name of New Year which no doubt cause the fine old day to blush when it contemplates them.

Some people have a regular practice of making New Year resolutions, generally shattering them before January has hidden its cold head out of sight. Resolves, in order to be of any use, should be made every day in the year and, if necessary, every hour in the day.

Some men go around calling upon their lady friends, drink everything that is offered them on the way, from cider to sherry, and make their last call of the day upon their wives and families, carrying with them a pronounced case of inebriation. Thus is an anciently hospitable practice turned into a shameful bit of travesty dissipation.

Some men do not take the pains to travel and collect the different drinks that are to make beasts of them, but go directly to the saloons and carouse all day with equally wretched companions.

It is one of the characteristics of our dear old wicked, whimsical, now and then idiotic, human race that it is perfectly competent to spoil anything in the world; that it can make almost anything into a curse when it sets out. —Will Carleton's Magazine.

Facing the New Year.

A happy year will it be to those who through every path of trial or up every hill of difficulty or over every sunny height march on in closest fellowship with Jesus and who will determine that, come what may, they have Christ every day.—Theodore L. Cuyler, D. D.

BUILDING HEALTH

When you are looking for a home, you do not rely on appearance alone; you enquire as to the quality of the materials which went into the building and the way in which they were assembled. You do this because you want your home, not only to be attractive, but to be well built in every sense.

In the same way, your body, in its structure, depends largely upon the food you eat, for it is from your food that the body selects its building materials. The kind of body which you have determines what you can get out of it in the way of physical work and play.

Proteins are the chief body-building foods. During the years of growth, more proteins are required than in later life, when the growth has been completed. The animal proteins, which are more readily used than the vegetable, are found in meat, fish, eggs, milk and cheese. The vegetable proteins are present in beans and peas.

The body must be kept warm, and warmth is secured from the fatty foods, such as milk, butter, fat meats and nuts. The person who works out of doors during the winter needs more fatty foods than does the indoor worker.

Energy producing foods are required to provide the power which is used up by the muscles. Cereals, potatoes and sugar are energy foods, and the manual labourer, the active child and the rugby player need more of these foods than does the person who is physically inactive.

Milk, fruits and vegetables supply something more than building material, warmth and energy. Mineral salts, such as calcium and phosphorus, which are needed in the building of teeth and bones and in the daily functioning of the body, enter into the composition of those foods.

Bulk is required in the diet to encourage regular bowel elimination. The indigestible fibres from fruits and vegetables and roughage or bulk to the diet. Milk, fruits and vegetables supply also the vitamins required by the body. A sufficiency of the several different vitamins must be available if the body is to be strong and healthy and resistant to infection.

From what has been said, it will be evident that our needs for certain types of food vary according to age and occupation. The quantity required depends upon age and activity. At all ages, milk, fruits and green vegetables are indispensable, and for that reason, they should be included in the diet each day.

Building health is largely dependent upon the use of proper foods.

Questions concerning Health, addressed to the Canadian Medical Association, 184 College Street, Toronto, will be answered personally by letter.

Some History of Early Streetsville

J. B. Graham tells How TheReview was Printed Just 75 Years Ago

He was 'Printer's Devil' in 1857—Still Active

Proprietor Streetsville Review,

Dear Sir:—

Recently when in the Grandview Exponent office I was shown a copy of the Review. On looking it over I noticed a wonderful change, the names of former advertisers being absent, some, no doubt, gone to the Great Beyond. It was in the year 1857 I commenced my apprenticeship; at that time it was owned by Solomon Barnhart and edited by the Rev. R. J. McGeorge, pastor of the English Church. The staff was composed of the late James W. Graham, his brother, William, Robt. Murray, John Connor, Arthur McLelland and your humble servant, Jas. B. Graham, being the printers' devil. I was not there many weeks when I was advanced to the job of making lye for washing the type, and having had experience in that art on the farm needed no instructions. A little later a roller was to be made for inking the type, the foreman, J. W. Graham, gave me instructions how to proceed which was as follows: get 5 lbs. glue, soak it in water about 12 hours, then take it out of the water, put it in a large vessel, then add 1 gallon molasses, place on the stove inside of another vessel, stir occasionally and when thoroughly incorporated, which took about 2 hours, then pour into the iron mould, which had in its centre a wooden core and after about 12 or more hours draw it from the mould; this roller was placed on 2 rollers and with a crank on one of the rollers the three were caused to revolve and the ink was evenly distributed. After a few months use the roller would become hard and was softened by sponging with water which gave it suction and mighty hard to turn; the press was a Washington hand press and was fine exercise for the operator. Besides getting out the Review each week there was a book to be printed of poems and lyrics by Alexander McLachlin, of Caledon. The speed of the Washington Press was from 3 to 4 impressions a minute, not quite as fast as our present day presses, so it was lots of exercise to run a circulation of 1500 each week, sometimes rolling the form was harder work than the press work, just according to the suction of the roller; your humble servant had no great love for the pressman for sponging the roller, of course it had to be done. All said and done these were the good old days.

Yours in the art,
JAS. B. GRAHAM

If you think the above would be of interest to publish you are at liberty to do so with name appended. I am not in the newspaper business now, having retired a few years ago. Am going onto 92 years and have perfect health, just as good as when I was 25 or 30. The people here call me a wonder. I have been skating until last winter.

We are told that a motion has been started at Osgoode Hall, Toronto, to quash the Hydro Electric By-law, voted on and carried by the ratepayers of Streetsville, on Monday, Jan. 4th. The grounds for quashing have not been announced, but no doubt they are valid. We never heard so much talk about an election as we have about the recent one, especially the voting on the By-law. The case will be watched with interest by both sides, and in the meantime nothing can be done in regards to switching over onto Hydro.

BOY SHOOTING PIGEONS SERIOUSLY WOUNDED

Gerald Fullerton, 16-year-old son of Ernest Fullerton, of Streetsville, was rushed to Peel Memorial Hospital yesterday afternoon with a bullet lodged in his stomach as the result of a rifle in the hands of his companion, Ross Hollingshead, being accidentally discharged when the two were members of a pigeon-shooting party at Trafalgar. Dr. S. H. Smith, of Streetsville, who was summoned, rendered first aid, and ordered the lad taken to the hospital, where his condition is reported as serious.

Cannot Remove Bullet Yet

No removal of the bullet, which was lodged in the abdomen of Gerald Fullerton, 16, of Streetsville, can be made at present, according to Dr. J. E. Bromley, Brampton. Fear of peritonitis prevents any other treatment than that to bring the boy to a strength sufficient to fight off the effects of his wound.

SHORT COURSE AT CALEDON

Of timely interest to the people of Caledon vicinity is the Short Course in Agriculture and Home Economics now in progress. The course is in charge of J. C. Shearer, Agricultural Representative and Miss Pearle Church, Home Demonstrator, assisted by E. R. McClellan, of Essex, and Miss Jennie Kearney, of Young's Point.

A great deal has been accomplished during the first week of the course. Class officers were elected as follows: Boys' Class—President, Russell Duke; Vice-Pres., Milton Petch; Sec.-Treas., Geo. Atkinson; Committee, Roy Jenkins, Bruce Cameron, Walker Glassford; Supt. of hall, Harold Vanwyck.

The Silver Creek Farms at Caledon were visited for the practical judging work. A joint meeting was held on Friday afternoon. The program consisted of contests, musical numbers, Table setting demonstration by Miss Church, a talk on honey by Mr. Barrett, Caledon, and moving pictures. Eighty people were present. Another very interesting programme is being prepared for next Friday the 15th.

The programme for the week of Jan. 11th to 15th will consist of weeds and poultry, on Monday; Sheep, care and management, on Tuesday and Wednesday; Plant diseases and diseases of farm animals, on Thursday; Fruits and Vegetables, and Field Crops, Friday morning, with a literary programme during the afternoon. This will be a joint meeting and included in the programme will be a debate.

Through the co-operation of the Women's Institute and the Township Council of Caledon this course has been made possible. The fact that sixty young men and young women have enrolled in the Course goes to show that the present generation treats the depression as a challenge for improved methods. Everyone is invited to attend the lectures at any time they find convenient.

CLARKSON

When his car was struck by a truck driven by Herman Cohen, Shaw street, Toronto, at Clarkson road and the Toronto-Hamilton highway, Sidney Preston, writer and proprietor of an antique shop at Clarkson was seriously injured.

The truck struck Preston's car amidships as it was travelling south on the Clarkson road. The injured man was rushed to the office of Dr. A. B. Sutton, of Port Credit, where he was found to be suffering from scalp wounds, concussion and a possible fracture of the skull.

Traffic Officer Hinchcliffe investigated the accident and states that Preston, according to eye-witnesses, stopped at the highway, then continued to cross the thoroughfare, to be struck by Cohen's truck, travelling westbound.

Preston was taken from Dr. Sutton's office to his home.

Sydney H. Preston, well known author, and familiar to many Lake Shore road motorists as the proprietor of Clarkson market, was buried in Clarkson Cemetery Saturday, his death following an auto smash last week.

Funeral services were conducted by Rev. R. A. Spencer. Pall-bearers were: Adam F. Smith, Walter Keeler, C. W. Wilson, Howard T. West, Robert Herridge and J. F. B. Livesay.

Mr. Preston, who was 72, taught music in Toronto Normal School for many years, moving to Clarkson to take up farming about the beginning of the century. He was the first to recognize the potentialities of the district as a small fruit country, now famous for its strawberries. His farming activities were reflected in his books, "The Abandoned Farmer," and "On Common Ground," which met with great success. He was encouraged in his writing by his wife, formerly Ella Lees. After her death he wrote no more.

In 1917 Mr. Preston took over the Clarkson Market, in partnership with Miss Fairbairn. A few short months ago, he had the market moved bodily from its old site to a point about a quarter of a mile away, when the lease on the old property expired.

COOKSVILLE

Because a careless mechanic left the keys out of the tie rods of an expensive sedan the person or persons who stole it in Toronto, on Saturday night, got only as far as Cooksville with the car.

P. J. Campbell, Toronto, left the auto standing on the street while he made a call and, coming out, found it gone. The car was ditched on the Centre road, near Cooksville last Saturday night, and brought into the Cooksville Motors. Mr. Campbell was notified, and received the car, little damaged, at the garage. The car had been ditched when it skidded as a result of the omission of the garage man who last worked on it.

PORT CREDIT

Looking down the elevator shaft and failing to notice that the cage was ascending, Arthur Guest, 43, of Lorne Park, was instantly killed, when the descending balance weight struck him on the head at the plant of the St. Lawrence Starch Co. Fellow-employees rushed to his aid and summoned Dr. Harold Sutton, of Cooksville, who pronounced him dead. An inquest will be held by Dr. A. B. Sutton, of Port Credit, coroner for the district.

The elevator is a newly installed freight lift that is nearing completion. Guest was in charge of the oil presses on the fourth floor of the plant.

An employe of the starch works for the past seven years, Guest had always been known as a very careful workman. He served four years as a machine gunner in Mesopotamia and Egypt during the Great War. He is survived by his widow and five children, Ronald, Aubray, Kenath, Eileen and Freda. A sister, Mrs. Thebert Snider, resides in Waterloo. The family are making an effort to locate John Evans, a close friend of the family, who left last Tuesday to get a job at Kirkland Lake.

At the inaugural meeting of the Port Credit Village Council it was decided to reduce the working days of those employed on the creek diversion scheme, carried out as a relief measure, to two days a week instead of four. "The work is nearing completion and we want to make it go as far as possible," stated Reeve R. M. Parkinson, who saw no further relief work in sight, unless additional Government assistance was forthcoming.

SNIDER'S CORNERS

Due to the accumulation of ice and snow on the roof of Wesley church shed, following the storm, the shed collapsed on Saturday. As horses and cutters have to be used north of Dundas highway, usually for several weeks during the winter it seems as though it will have to be rebuilt.

WITH THE LONE SCOUTS

Is Spring Here?

This week we have had evidence in plenty that Spring must be either "Just Around the Corner" or else that it has been "Just fooling us."

A Lone Scout of the "Hound" Patrol at Milford, Prince Edward County, has sent in to Lone Scout Headquarters a "pussy-willow" in full bloom, which he picked the other day.

Those of you who attended the Lone Scout Camp at Ebor Park in 1930 will remember Mr. Luck, the popular owner of the park. He tells us that at the end of December it was much greener there than at the end of July, and he sent us a dandelion which he picked in the park on December 28th.

We also heard of a gentleman who saw a pair of starlings teaching a young one to fly in Toronto a few days ago!

What About the Birds?

All Lone Scouts are friends to the birds, and in spite of all the signs of Spring, we know that there is still more cold weather to come. How about arranging to feed your feathered friends? I heard of one Scout who made use of his discarded Christmas tree for this purpose, setting it up out of doors and tying all sorts of titbits on to it which the birds thoroughly enjoy.

And incidentally, now is the time to prepare new bird houses for next year's tenants. Don't forget that Good Turn, Lonies!

A TROUP OUTING

The newly formed Unionville Troop, who were recently members of the Lone Scout Dpartmnt, paid a visit to Toronto on December 29th, for their Christmas Outing. They visited the Canadian Bank of Commerce Building, which is the tallest building in Toronto, and inspected it from cellar to roof garden. In the afternoon they all went to a "Show," and were afterwards entertained to supper, followed by games and entertainment by the 3rd Toronto Troop.

Here's a Good Motto For 1932

Always keep your tail wagging, even if you can only get the tip of it to work!

A January Suggestion For Lone Patrols

Parties are the usual fashionable functions at this time of the year, and in past years several Lone Patrols have organized very successful Patrol Banquets, which have proved great fun, and which have been greatly enjoyed. What about having a banquet in your Patrol, and each member invite another chap who is not yet a Scout? Don't forget to send an invitation to "Lone E," too!

International Brotherhood

A Boy Scout is a friend to all and a brother to every every other Scout, according to the 4th Scout Law.

Thus we note that the members of the 4th Melton (Leicestershire, England) Troop have sent a gift of Scout Colors to the members of the 8th Jerusalem Troop, Palestine, thus fostering this brotherly spirit.

Lone Scouts can do a great deal to help in this way by corresponding with other Lonies in this country or with Scouts in foreign countries. Every member of the Ontario Lone Scout Department should have at least one Scout Pen-Friend. Have you one? If not, write to your Scoutmaster and ask him to get you one, but don't forget to state if you want to write to another Canadian Lonie or to a Foreign Scout.

The Scout Census

Lonies of this provinc will be interested to know that according to a recent census of the Boy Scout Membership of Ontario there are 21,793 Scouts in this province, including, of course, Rovers and Wolf Cubs.

Of this number 313 are Lone Scouts, and the above figures shows a very substantial increase over the figures returned a year ago. We are growing, Lonies! Let us see to it that we grow in efficiency as well as in numbers during 1932!

Particulars of the Lone Scout of Ontario may be obtained from the Lone Scout Department, The Boy Scouts Association, 330 Bay Street, Toronto 2.—"LONE E."

Finances of Province of Ontario Are in Most Sound Condition

Though Provincial Treasurer's Report Shows Deficit For This Year, Government Are Making Every Endeavor to Have Balanced Budget Next Year

Despite the deficit as announced by Hon. A. E. Dunlop, Provincial Treasurer, the financies of the Provinces are in sound condition, and a readjustment of expenditures, and retrenchment all along the line will give the Government the opportunity of balancing it's budget next year. This is one of the statements made recently by the Province's Attorney-General, Col. W. H. Price, when he addressed 1500 Toronto businessmen. High lights in Col. Price's speech are as follows:

"The Province will carry out its Debt Retirement Policy and will pay up to date and will, during the year 1932, pay up last year's instalment, and whatever deficits have accrued. The Province is determined to do this and balance its budget next year. There will be no more deficits. In order to make sure that this would be accomplished, not only have we decided to cut our Ordinary Expenditure, but the Province has placed a slightly higher license fee for motor cars and trucks so that this service itself will be self-sustaining.

"The finances of the Province are in sound condition. The taxation in Ontario is less than almost any other Province in Canada. The social services as well as the material benefits are so outstanding as to place Ontario in a class by herself. The public must pay for them. It is no time, however, to consider the expansion of any of these, there must be a marking of time, no matter how good a project there must be no more expenditure until we retrench and catch up. The citizen himself must be given a chance without fear of any more taxation or disability to go ahead and make progress. Ontario is behind her citizens in this.

"A habit has grown up in certain quarters of comparing the finances of Ontario ith Quebec. People are told that Quebec's debt is much smaller and that they generally have a surplus. If those who want to discuss the subject desire to be honest about it and give the people the facts, they will tell them at once that part of Ontario's debt, amounting to $186,000,000, has been advanced to the Hydro Electric Power Commission of Ontario for the purpose of carrying out their undertaking, and that the Province has back of that a utility owned by the public through its municipalities.

"They will also tell the public that we have invested over $40,000,000 in the Temiskaming & Northern Ontario Railway and that that is part of our Capital Debt, but that we own that road. They might also say that Quebec owns no Hydro Electric service and owns no Railroad and has not issued bonds for the purpose of construction of such assets.

"They might go forth and say that we have spent $125,000,000 in Provincial roads and that Quebec's roads cannot be compared with Ontario roads. They are not as wide as Ontario roads, they are not as firmly constructed and in most places they are not in any way as good.

"The financial structure in Canada is sound. Our Banks are evolving and performing their functions. True, they must assist in financing Canada and the Provinces. They must help to finance our railways and our big public undertakings. They must stand behind our municipalities although there has been over-expenditure. This function of our chartered Banks in Canada is being carried out in a very helpful way. I think probably they went too far, when times were good, in advancing money, but they are today standing behind all public bodies in an attempt to work out a solution of our problems. It is idle, therefore, to say that, because there are such tremendous deposits in Canada, the Banks can do every thing. There is always a limit to what credit can be given. The less the Banks have to do in raising money for Governments and Municipalities and other bodies the more will they have for the use of business and the help of our people in getting our business structure back to normal."

Ninth Young Life Taken By Infection

St. Thomas Schoolboy Dies of Streptococcus Epidemic

St. Thomas.—After a lapse of nearly two months, St. Thomas has had another tragic death from streptococus infection, making the ninth victim for the city since the disease broke out last September.

The last victim, 14-year-old Robert Nathaniel Watson, attended school on Thursday, but complained of illness. On Saturday evening he was dead, leaving his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Melrose Watson, 90 Scott Street, a sister, Marguerite, and grand parents, Mr. and Mrs. M. D. Gee, of Stratford, and R. A. Watson, of Paisley.

The young lad was a student at Scott Street School, played school rugby, and belonged to the cadets. He was a member of Centre Street Baptist Church, Sunday school and Trail Rangers.

The funeral was held Sunday afternoon. The service was held from the verandah of his home, and friends gazed at his body lying inside a front window. The board of education officials took action to fumigate and thoroughly cleanse the room.

A collegiate institute teacher who contracted diphtheria while on her holidays at St. Marys, is under treatment in the Isolation hospital and is making good progress. Several other cases of suspected septic sore throat are said to be under observation.

"Understanding Through Travel" Declares Prince of Wales

London—The Prince of Wales appears as an apostle of travel in a foreword he has written for the Travel Association calendar for Great Britain and Ireland issued recently as an inducement to dominion and foreign travelers to visit Britain.

"The more I have traveled myself the more convinced I have become that travel is essential to a better understanding between nations and to the realization in the world today that the welfare of one country is bound up with that of all others. I hope that those to whom our country is still unfamiliar will be stirred by this little book to set out on a visit to our shores and that others to whom it may bring happy recollections will come to see us again."

Moosonee Name of Northern Seaport

Plans for Erection of Hotel Are Discussed at Conference

North Bay. — Moose Harbor, Ontario's northern seaport, will hence forth be known as Moosonee. The new name was decided upon at a conference at Toronto between Premier G. S. Henry of Ontario and George W. Lee, Chairman of the Timiskaming & Northern Ontario Railway Commission. Moosonee is not a new name for Ontario's ocean port, but has been used by the Indians of that district for many years.

An hotel of the bungalow type with from 10 to 20 rooms will be built, it was decided at the conference. Plans will be drawn up at once. The hotel will be at Hunter's Point, which commands an excellent view of the Moose River.

Plans for the laying out of a town site at Moosonee will be discussed between Chief Engineer S. B. Clement and an authority on town planning. Parks, playgrounds, administrative buildings and school will be provided for in the plans for the small, modern town. A combination passenger station and freight shed will be erected to serve the town at a point where it will not obstruct the erection of a permanent building in the future.

The chief engineer was authorized at the recent conference to confer with the Dominion Department of Public Works in connection with the construction of wharves to take care of present needs.

A new extension of the railway will be officially opened in June, and by that time, it is hoped, considerable progress will have been made with the plans.

League of Nations Forsees A Strengthened China

Geneva.—The studies which League of Nations experts have made of the composition of the new Chinese Government greatly increase its significance in their eyes.

They declare it is the first one in a long time to constitute a really national government, in that all the important Chinese elements are represented.

According to their analysis, not merely the Ministries but the Presidencies and Vice Presidencies of the Yuans are "almost symmetrically" divided among the friends of the three strongest leaders, Hu Han-min, Wang Ching-wei and Chiang Kaishek, who themselves now constitute the Knomintang's "Permanent Committee of Three."

The Secretariat of the League believes that the real control, however, is now in the hands of Canton, which has been less friendly to Geneva than Nanking. But the coalition gives partisans of the League's tactics in the Manchurian affair some hope of persuading the Chinese leaders of their wisdom.

Young Canadian Discovers Butter Form of Honey

Ithaca, N.Y.—Discovery of a new method of preserving honey as an opaque, gray-white butter, instead of a golden liquid was announced at Cornell University.

The new product, called crystal honey, has a slightly different flavor; it neither drips nor spreads sticky smears and has been offered by the university to the honey industry.

The discovery is the accomplishment of a young Canadian, Dr. E. J. Dyce, who made a gift of the process to Canadian honey producers and to Cornell. He developed the process as part of his thesis for obtaining the degree of Docter of Philosophy and worked under supervision of Dr. E. F. Phillips, professor of agriculture.

Youthful Farmer Wins State Potato Yield Prize

Clarksburg, W. Va. — West Virginia's record potato yield, this year, was grown by Ralph Russell, of Mill Creek, Randolph County, according to the report of Mr. W. Clayton Jester, county farm agent. Russell produced 531 bushels on one acre and won a prize of $50 awarded by the Bank of Mill Creek.

Russell's cost of production for his acre was 33½ cents a bushel, bringing him a substantial profit, as the crop sold for 50 to 75 cents a bushel. In computing costs, allowance was made for rent of land and for storage as well as for labor, seed, fertilizer, spray material and bags.

Russell followed modern scientific methods recommended by the agricultural extension department of the state university.

Extensions and improvements in the farm's facilities have just been completed. At present 15 boys are intensively cultivating the farm's 40 acres. Through the training received here many boys have already found permanent employment on farms throughout Scotland.

Week-End Crashes Take Five Lives

Burning Gasoline Adds to Injuries—Two May Die

London, Ont.—Frank Morden, aged 65, of 29 Edgewood Crescent, North Toronto, was almost instantly killed Saturday afternoon, while Stuart Laurie, aged 32, of the same address, his companion, died in St. Joheph's Hospital here at 12.20 Sunday afternoon as a result of an auto crash at Highfield about 5 o'clock Saturday in which a car driven by Laurie smashed into a truck driven by Severne Warner of Chester.

Laurie was driving towards London and had turned on to No. 4 highway when his car, said by the police to have failed to notice the stop sign. He jammed on his brakes at the intersection. His machine swerved sharply and crashed into the Warner truck which was travelling north.

The impact sent both machines crashing into opposite ditches. Morden and Laurie were catapulted out of the car, the former to the pavement into a pool of burning gasoline.

Both Morden and Laurie were critically burned, a contributing factor in Morden's death. Morden suffered head injuries.

Warner was accompanied by his wife and two children at the time. Both escaped serious injury.

Laurie was coming to London to spend the week-end with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Laurie, 98 Garbutt Avenue. He had resided in Toronto for four years.

A preliminary inquest was held.

Mrs. Hurt had been married seven years and has two children, seven and four years old. Mrs. Hurt is under treatment in the hospital for a serious condition as the result of the accident.

Tom Taylor, aged 9, of Perry.

According to statements made by Taylor, who was driving a car in front of him stopped when a car in the rear

Variety of Temperatures Prevailing in Canada

Toronto.—On Friday Canada was treated to a wide assortment of weather. It ranged from warm to warmer, and from colder to considerably colder, depending upon the particular locality.

Starting 'way up north at Aklavik, Jack Frost shook a little "30 below" down on the residents. Then he hopped around a bit. At Vancouver he turned on the heat to the tune of 44 degrees "above." Around Alberta he blew a gentle Chinook wind and the thermometers rose accordingly. In Saskatchewan, however, he let the fire go out and the mercury dropped to 19 below at Saskatoon. It warmed up a bit in Ontario, with Cochrane scoring lowest point at zero even. In other Ontario centres straw hats appeared. Golfers were out in force. And in Western Ontario particularly flood waters started to rise.

Quebec also had golfing weather, with Montreal registering a high of 36 degrees. New Brunswick was very much in the same category, with 40 degrees registered at Saint John. Nova Scotia had a fair share of fine weather, Halifax reporting 38 degrees. And down at the very eastern point of Charlottetown the thermometer registered a high of 36 degrees.

Propose Weekly Holiday On Alberta Farms

Calgary.—Among the numerous resolutions to be presented at the United Farmers of Alberta annual convention in Edmonton, Jan. 19, is one proposing a radical change in farmer life—a half-holiday each week for the tillers of the soil during Summer months. This resolution will be presented by the representatives from the Federal Constituency Association of the U.F.A., at Wetaskiwin.

The days when the Alberta farmer arose before dawn and labored until after sunset, should end, it was declared. Machinery has lessened the farmers' work and it is the Wetaskiwin association's belief that he should be given more opportunity of taking part in community events, such as business conferences, picnics, swimming parties and addresses on current topics.

Little Pig Losses

By L. Stevenson, Provincial Zoologist

During the winter of 1931, many litters of young pigs were born either dead, weak, hairless or with thick throats. In Grey County alone, over 300 brood sows lost their young at birth. Over the entire Province the numbers would run up into the thousands. The loss of a litter of young pigs simply means that a brood sow has been kept and fed for six months and gives no return. It also means that the owner of the sow losing her pigs will have to go out and buy others to take the place of those lost. These heavy losses in new born pigs during the winter and spring are generally due to lack of iodine in the food that is given to the brood sow. There is no substitute for iodine, the pregnant sow must have ample, which fortunately is not much, as one half ounce of Potassium Iodine will supply the necessary iodine to any brood sow for one year.

If you have had these little pig losses on your farm in the past, you are advised to fortify your brood sows against such loss this year by providing the little bits of Iodine that is absolutely necessary in the prevention of goitre, hairlessness, weak pigs or dead at birth pigs. A very small quantity of Potassium Iodine can be given in the feed during the pregnancy period. Dissolve one half ounce of Potassium Iodine in a quart of water, and mix one or two tablespoons of the liquid in the feed every few days. Also see to it that the brood sows get plenty of soil, soda or other mineral matter and an abundance of clover leaves and fine clover stems during the period when they are carrying young.

P.O. Clerk—"Can't you see? I just found a couple of dead letters."

Last Saturday a charming woman wearing a smart new coat and hat, became aware that her husband was unusually attentive and was proudly introducing her to everyone he knew.

"He needn't take any credit," she said sweetly to a group of friends, "I bought them with my own money."

When TEETHING makes HIM FUSSY

One of the most important things you can do to make a teething baby comfortable is to see that little bowels do their work of carrying off waste matter promptly and regularly. For this nothing is better than Castoria, a pure vegetable preparation specially made for babies and children. Castoria acts so gently you can give it to young infants to relieve colic. Yet is always effective, for older children, too, remember. Castoria contains no harsh drugs, no narcotics—is absolutely harmless. When your baby is fretful with teething or a food upset, give a cleansing dose of Castoria. Be sure you get genuine Castoria with the name:

Auntie Will Be Worried

"Whatever shall I do? I've missed the train and auntie will be so worried!"

Miss Minnie Harper had accepted her aunt's invitation to spend a week-end with her and now in her anxiety to finish the last of her work at the office she had not noticed the time.

Trained to think of the right thing in an emergency Miss Harper hurried to a nearby telephone booth and called her aunt. Fortunately she reached her before she had left for the flag station and in a few seconds she had explained the situation and assured her aunt that she would certainly not miss the train next week-end if she might come then.

How to play Bridge AUCTION and CONTRACT

by Wynne Ferguson

Author of "PRACTICAL AUCTION BRIDGE"

ARTICLE No. 5

That Auction and Contract and their attendant rules are not yet standardized throughout the country is well illustrated by the following request for decision from one of the writer's correspondents: "During a game of Auction the other night, one of the players threw his hand on the table and demanded a new deal, declaring that he had neither an ace nor face card. Another player claimed he was wrong as he should have waited till the trump was declared and then if he had neither 'ace, face nor trump,' he could have claimed a new deal. This point has caused considerable discussion and difference of opinion so please decide it for us."

Needless to say, a player must play the cards as dealt and the fact that they are all under a ten spot is no reason for a new deal. There never has been such a rule and it is rather surprising to have it advanced. It is a good example, however, of the widespread popularity of Auction and Contract even among those who are not familiar with the ordinary rules of the game.

The following hand has raised a curious question:

Hearts—K
Clubs—none	: Y :
Diamonds—A, K, J, 10, 9, 8, 7, 6, 5, 4, 3, 2	: A	B :
Spades—none	: Z :

No score, rubber game. Z dealt and bid one no trump. What should A bid with the foregoing hand at either Auction or Contract? A should undoubtedly pass, hoping that Z will obtain the bid at no trump. In the actual play A did pass, also Y and B, so Z played the hand at one no trump. A played his twelve diamonds and, on the twelfth trick, Z had left in his hand the ace of hearts and the ace of spades. It was an absolute guess which ace to keep and, as usual in such cases, he guessed wrong, discarded the ace of hearts and A scored a grand slam.

The curious part about the hand was that Z accused A, the writer's correspondent, of "not having played a sporting game as he was betting on a certainty." It was argued that such a play might be al right in a Card Club, but very unsportsmanlike for a social game. Such a contention is certainly curious and has seemed worthy of mention in this article. When a game of Auction or Contract is made up, there is an express understanding that each player shall be entitled to take full advantage of both his skill and his luck. Luck averages up for every one in the long run, so never criticize a player for holding big cards or for playing them to obtain the maximum results. Take the game and your luck philosophically, and both you and your friends will enjoy the game a great deal more.

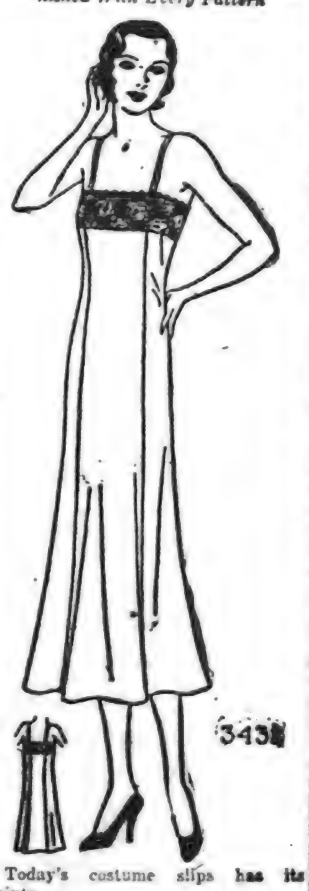
The writer was under the impression taht the following problem was rather easy until one of hi correspondents wrote in regard to it: "Only an ostrich would call this problem simple." Why he selected an "ostrich" for comparative purposes is doubtful but probably because of its purported lack of intelligence. After that statement, however, the writer will refrain from expressing an opinion. See if you can figure it out before reading the solution that follows.

Problem

Hearts—8
Clubs—none
Diamonds—none
Spades—K, 9, 5, 3

Hearts—Q, 6	: Y :	Hearts—10, 7, 4, 2
Clubs—none	: A B :	Clubs—none
Diamonds—none	: Z :	Diamonds—none
Spades—A, Q, 8		Spades—10

Hearts—K, 9
Clubs—none
Diamonds—none
Spades—J, 6, 2



There are no trumps and Z is in the lead. How can Y Z win three of the five tricks against any defense?

Solution: Z should lead the jack of spades and A should play the queen, although he knows that it must lose the trick. By so doing he retains his tenace in Y's suit. If he were to play his ace on the jack, he would leave Y with the tenace and Y Z would now win four tricks against and defense. A must play the queen of spades and Y wins the trick with the king. Y should now lead the eight of hearts; B plays the deuce and Z should play the nine. If he should play the king, A should play the queen and A B will then win the last three tricks. When Z plays the nine, however, A must win with the queen. Now either Z wins the king of hearts and Y the nine of spades or else Y takes two tricks in spades. In other words, Y Z must win three of the five tricks.

AS SHE LOST FAT SHE LOST PAIN

Like many others, this woman found that excess fat did not come alone. In her case it brought sciatica with it. She did not know that both troubles were due to a common cause—but she found they both gave way before one common remedy.

"I have been a martyr to sciatica and kidney trouble for years. I took Kruschen for about a month, when people began telling me how well I looked. I have lost fat that was no good to me, and now, after three months of Kruschen, I only go 168 lbs. instead of 185 lbs. I'm not going to say my pains have all gone, but I do say I'm wonderfully well, and hope to improve yet. I bless the day I started Kruschen."—Mrs. F. L. P.

The six salts in Kruschen assist the internal organs to throw off each day the wastage and poisons that encumber the system. Then, little by little, that ugly fat goes—slowly, yes—but surely. The pains of sciatica and rheumatism cease. You feel wonderfully healthy, youthful, and energetic—more so than ever before in your life!

Scout Notes

It is our aim to carry a short column of scout news every week. With this end in view we have the hearty co-operation of the editor of this paper, who has kindly consented to give the Boy Scouts of Streetsville, space in his paper at no cost whatever. We hope that this will be an incentive to all other citizens of our fair village to lend their support for the furtherance of our local scout movement.

At our first meeting of 1932, to be held Jan. 20th, we expect to have a membership of over forty scouts. This we feel is a credit to Streetsville as in less than three months we have built up the largest troop in Peel County.

The meetings are held every Wednesday evening between the hours of 7.30 to 9 sharp. The night's proceedings are regulated and supervised. The following routine could be considered as an example:

1. Short Prayer.
2. Salute the flag.
3. Attention given to complaints.
4. Inspection.
5. Competitive games.
6. Lessons in woodcraft, knot-tying, etc.
7. Sing Song.
8. First aid class.
9. Competitive singing.
10. National Anthem.

The boys are taught everything a fond parent would want their child taught. To date this has not cost any member a cent. We ask every boy between the age of 11½ to 17 years to drop in and join our meetings. We are forming a patrol from Creditville and we would like to see another patrol made up of boys from outside the municipality, thus making up a troop of five or six patrols. 8 members to a patrol. Each patrol is in charge of a patrol leader and a second.

Early in February the Scout Executive of Toronto Township, in charge of this district will be up to put on the Investiture. We hope every scout will receive a pass in their tenderfoot work and we expect every patrol leader and second to pass their second class certificate as well.

Once more we appeal to the parents of eligible boys to help us. Send them along, and one evening with us will convince them.

Scouts! Alert! The next meeting will be Wednesday, Jan. 20, 7.30 p.m. All are welcome to bring along a new member.

NEW YEAR'S ALLEGORY

When the Arriving Twelvemonth Walked the City Streets.

ACROSS the snowbound earth the New Year stepped buoyantly. A splendid youth he was, with radiant eyes, full, red lips and the star of hope set so proudly above his brows that where he passed darkness turned to light. For a whole year the world and the men thereon were his.

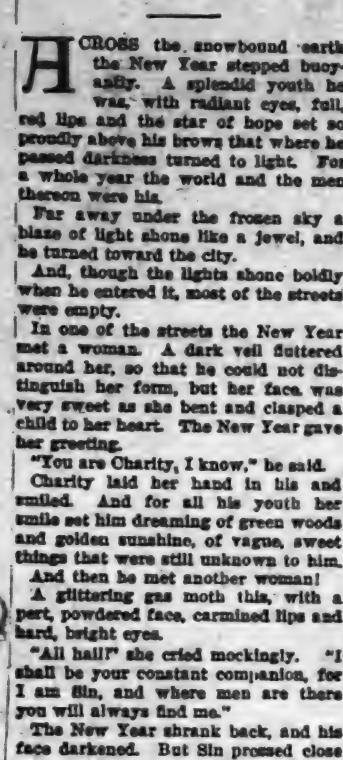
Far away under the frozen sky a blaze of light shone like a jewel, and he turned toward the city.

And, though the lights shone boldly when he entered it, most of the streets were empty.

In one of the streets the New Year met a woman. A dark veil fluttered around her, so that he could not distinguish her form, but her face was very sweet as she bent and clasped a child to her heart. The New Year gave her greeting.

"You are Charity, I know," he said.

Charity laid her hand in his and smiled. And for all his youth her smile set him dreaming of green woods and golden sunshine, of vague, sweet things that were still unknown to him.



And then he met another woman!

A glittering gas moth this, with a pert, powdered face, carmined lips and hard, bright eyes.

"All hail!" she cried mockingly. "I shall be your constant companion, for I am Sin, and where men are there you will always find me."

The New Year shrank back, and his face darkened. But Sin pressed close to him, laughed loudly and, tearing a rose from those at her breast, tossed it to him, as with a rustle of silk she passed on. The rose fell on the snow powdered walk, and when the New Year would have picked it up it was scentless, and he saw that a worm was hid in its heart!

Another form came in sight—in the garb of a monk with a dark hood

"I'M ALL THEY HAVE," WHISPERED LOVE.

about his tranquil face. His eyes were upon the ground, and his lips moved in prayer for all mankind. So tender and pitiful was his face that even before he cried "Miserere Domine!" the New Year guessed that his name was Mercy.

Very cold it grew as the New Year turned into a mean street, so cold that he sought refuge in the porch of a darkened house. Yet there prevailed such a grateful warmth that he pressed back to learn its cause and so brushed against a boy—a boy with a wan, beautiful face, tangled hair and rapt eyes.

"Why are you here alone?" the New Year asked.

"I am never alone," corrected the boy, and he stepped aside so that the New Year caught the fragrance of his breath and saw that two great wings were furled behind him, and in the shadow of his wings an old man and an old woman crouched together. How tired, how poor, they looked! But an expression of ineffable tenderness shone on their pinched faces.

"I am all they have," whispered Love as tears filled his wonderful eyes. "They have never failed me, and I shall stay with them until the end."

"I am the End," called another voice, and a grim figure mounted the steps.

"Not yet," begged Love, and he tried to bar the stranger's way. But at sight of the scythe the other bore Love's great wings drooped.

"Mine is the best gift of all," whispered the newcomer as he bent over the forlorn couple.

Silently the New Year walked alone with the night and the stars and the scurrying snow. And as he hurried on the darkness faded into the eerie pallor of dawn. He stretched out his arms and welcomed his first day.

"Charity, Sin, Mercy, Love and Death," he cried—"all mine! How shall I choose from among you?"

A shadow fell across him. There was a sound as of wings beating the air, and Love, rosy, triumphant and eternal, caught his hands. "Let me fly with you all your days," he pleaded. "For mine is the gift which [illegible]

ERINDALE

There was an immense crowd at the old Faskin Farm, Erindale West, on Tuesday, when Auctioneers Russell and Alderson disposed of the stock and implements etc. of Mr. B.G. Davidson at good prices. The milch cows brought as high as $160 each, and other animals and articles at corresponding prices. The farm of 300 acres, which was bid up to $16,000, was not sold. To see the big crowd and the eager way they bid and bought, would make one think there was no "depression" in Toronto Township

The phone service, which was interrupted during the New Years storm is left in the same condition yet. The subscribers are very much dissatisfied having paid for service which they are not getting and no prospect for a few weeks. There are plenty of men who would be glad to get some work and a good force would soon rush the work to completion and be of no more expense to the company than a long delayed job. Otherwise the subscribers ought to be recompensed.

THE

TULE MARSH MURDER

STORY OF A MISSING ACTRESS AND THE TAXING OF WITS TO EXPLAIN HER FATE.

BY NANCY BARR MAVITY.

SYNOPSIS.

Don Ellsworth's wife, formerly actress Sheila O'Shay, disappears. Dr. Cavanaugh, criminal psychologist, identifies a charred body found in the tule marsh as that of Sheila. Barbara, his daughter faints when she hears him tell this to Peter Piper a Herald reporter.

When Mrs. Kane, Sheila's maid, is arrested she admits that Ellsworth married Sheila under threat of breach of promise. A threatening note signed "David Orme" is found in the murdered woman's safe. Peter trails Orme and arrests him. Peter sees Barbara destroy a jewelled comb of Sheila's and when she refuses to talk he realizes she is protecting someone. At Orme's trial Mrs. Kane states Orme is Sheila's real husband. Dr. Cavanaugh reviews the case.

"That gives you a certain rather impressive sincerity," Dr. Cavanaugh said blandly, "but it may not weigh heavily with the jury. Juries are likely to have a general idea that lawyers are an unscrupulous lot. It's partly, of course, because legal procedure seems to them a very elaborate game whose rules are too complicated for them to understand—and human nature has a way of being suspicious of what is beyond its comprehension.

"Whatever makes people ill at ease is likely to make them hostile. The average man would assume you to be an honest person, my dear Graham. You have an open countenance, if I may say so—not at all the sort of person who would misrepresent the value of a stock, for example, or cheat at a bridge game. And yet, because you are a lawyer, they will suspect you of working a magic hocus-pocus to try to throw dust in their eyes, even if you know your client to be guilty."

The three men were gathered for an evening conference in the office of the defence attorney, at Graham's request. The young lawyer's round, cherubic face seemed to have lost some of its roseate chubbiness. There were puffy circles of fatigue under his eyes, and his mouth sagged in a discouraged droop. Peter's long face looked even longer than usual, and his cheek-bones stood out sharply. His brows were drawn together in an anxious frown, that frown had become so habitual of late that it had etched two lines in parallel grooves above his eyes.

Since the adjournment of court at half past five, Peter had gone back to the office and written his lead for the next morning's city edition and had stopped only for a cup of coffee on his way to the lawyer's office. Graham had come directly from the courthouse; the calf-bound books marked with slips of blue paper which strewed the desk, and the pyramid of ashes in the brass bowl at his elbow indicated that he had taken no time for dinner. Dr. Cavanaugh had stopped down town for an early and leisurely repast. Of the three, he alone showed no sign of perturbation.

"You know," Peter brought the front legs of his chair to the floor with a thump, "I believe Ellsworth and the Kane woman were telling the absolute truth, queer as their stories were."

"Their testimony was a good deal worse than queer," Graham said gloomily; "it was devastating. And yet, when you go over it in cold blood, dislike of publicity and fear of scandal—especially somebody else's scandal—sound like mighty feeble motives for trying to cover up the facts of a murder."

"That's the trouble with motives." The doctor examined his cigar with calm detachment before lighting it. "The strongest of them so often do seem feeble—to the other fellow. There's the familiar notion, for instance, that all murders are committed from jealousy, anger, fear or greed. And yet there was the woman who took a hammer to her husband because he did not want her to go to a bridge party. A patient not long ago came to me suffering from what we call a compulsion neurosis. He was obsessed by the homicidal impulse to kill his wife because for 20 years she had sipped her coffee audibly from a spoon. Perhaps if one of us had had to listen to that sound for 20 years, we'd be inclined to call it justifiable homicide."

"At any rate," Graham interrupted irritably, "today's testimony brought out a perfectly good, recognizable motive—two of them, in fact—for Orme to kill Mrs. Ellsworth. It might have been jealousy, and it might have been revenge. You may call him a psychopathic case, doctor, but those are going to look like mighty sane human motives to the jury."

"Psychopathic or not," Dr. Cavanaugh asserted, "Orme is not the type of personality to be moved powerfully by either of those two particular emotions. If he did kill her, it was for some other reason."

"Well, just try to convince the jury that regardless of motive and opportunity, he simply hasn't the right kind of face for it!" Graham snorted.

"I will, my lad, I will," Dr. Cavanaugh said cheerfully. "I've convinced juries of much queerer things than that. They've almost got into the habit of believing me."

"You've examined him, doctor? What did you get out of him?" Peter's chair was once again poised at its precarious angle.

"As to the actual events, no more than you already know. You are in as good position to judge as I am. What do you think?"

"I honestly don't know," Peter said slowly. "I've seen a good many murderers, but I've never seen one like him. Circumstantially, it's a strong case; but circumstances take funny quirks, sometimes."

"Well, I don't believe he did it!" Graham stabbed at the blotter so viciously that the pen stood erect and quivering. "A guilty man would either try to get out of it or throw up the game. But that's not evidence. If it weren't for that belief, I'd never have kept on with the case, not even for you, Peter. He's absolutely no help. He's adopted an attitude of—of passive non-co-operation. And if you'd ever had a client like that, I guess you'd get a few homicidal impulses yourself."

"You're wearing yourself out to no purpose," Dr. Cavanaugh's calm authority had its effect. Graham plucked the pen out of the blotter and leaned back in his chair. "You leave the evidence to me. That's what I'm here for."

"Is Orme going to take the stand?" Peter inquired.

"He says he is, and I can't very well stop him. But I haven't a ghost of an idea what he's going to say. That's a pleasant position for a man's lawyer to be in isn't it? I suppose if he's as cracked as Dr Cavanaugh says he is, he might say almost anything."

"I didn't say he was as 'cracked' as all that," Dr. Cavanaugh corrected mildly. "I haven't a notion in the world but that he'll tell the exact truth. Perhaps that's what he's afraid you'll argue him out of, if he lets you know about it before-hand."

"Look here, doctor!" Graham half rose, his face flushing angrily.

"Just a moment," the doctor waved him back with a placating gesture. "Orme may have the idea that the truth will not sound convincing. And since it is your job to be convincing you might not look very favorably upon that particular brand of truth. It might need a good deal of varnishing. It is just possible that Orme is holding with all his strength of will to his purpose of telling exactly what he knows—and that he is afraid he might weaken under our combined persuasion if he gave us the chance to argue with him. Mind you, I know no more about it than you do! But there is nothing more stubborn than an unstable personality, set on combatting its own instability."

"Well, I've done my best to keep him off the stand," Graham said wearily. "You remain our one white hope, doctor. I was afraid even you would slide out from under, after today's testimony."

"Neither Ellsworth nor Mrs. Kane could possibly alter the facts relative to David Orme," Dr. Cavanaugh said. "I am willing to stake my professional reputation on that. In fact, I am hereby wagering a nickel"—and he produced the coin and balanced it on the tip of his finger, "that I shall acquit David Orme. And it won't effect the verdict one particle if you two come out and have the dinner you should have eaten two or three hours ago."

CHAPTER XLIII.

The haggard beauty of David Orme as he walked firmly to the witness chair had its immediate effect on the courtroom. Despite the commonplace or modern dress and surroundings, his face might have served as model for the painting of a tortured god—Orpheus torn by the nymphs of Prometheus chained to the rock.

The carved immobility with which he had sat day after day beside the sheriff had given place to a controlled but vibrating tension. That face, with its hollowed temples and sunken eyes, somehow relegated the jurors, the group of court officials in their railed enclosure and the rows of newspaper men in their numbered seats to inconsequence, even tawdriness. Whatever else he might be, David Orme was not a sordid criminal.

Before he had opened his lips except to murmur an almost inaudible response to the oath, the room was attuned to strangeness. A shiver of excitement—something not heard, not seen, but felt like the blowing of a wind—rippled across the press rows. The men and women in the jury box uncrossed their legs, ceased fiddling with hand-bags, and leaned slightly forward.

If Graham viewed his witness with some trepidation, he concealed his uneasiness under a manner of firm and confident friendliness.

"Will you just tell the jury in your own way the circumstances in which you first became acquainted with the lady known as Sheila O'Shay?"

"I was a member of the orchestra in the theatre where Sheila was dancing." There was not the slightest concession to the formality of a court proceeding in Orme's manner. His voice was not raised in the consciousness of addressing an audience, neither did it sink to the embarrassed mumble of stage fright. It was low, but carried with perfect clearness to the farthest corner of the courtroom.

"I played—" his lips twisted sardonically as if forced to admit the point of a rather cruel practical joke—"I played the sandpaper. Rubbed sheets of sandpaper together you know. It was what's called a jazz orchestra. Perhaps I may be allowed to explain that I was trained to be a concert violinist. I was what is sometimes called an infant prodigy——"

Seeing Stars

New counts of the number of stars that could be seen with perfect telescopes or unlimited power to gather light and magnify images were announced by astronomers of Mount Wilson Observatory at the annual exhibit of scientific work by the Carnegie Institution of Washington, held recently in that city. The number of stars visible to an unaided human eye probably is not over 6,000, but even a small telescope increases this number many times. Large telescopes, like the great 100-inch one at Mount Wilson, which is the largest in the world, show millions of stars even in a small part of the sky. The possibility of a complete count depends, however, upon the fact observed with these large telescopes that the stars are not scattered through space as far as these giant instruments can see. On the contrary, it is found that all of the individual stars which can be seen belong to a limited star cloud of which our sun is one. Earthly astronomers necessarily see this cloud from inside looking out, like one insect looking out through a vast cloud of other insects. Calculations based on the numbers of stars visible in the 100-inch telescope in different directions outward from the earth have made possible an estimate of the distance at which the stars begin to thin out, marking the edges of the star cloud. These calculations indicate that the total number of stars in this cloud probably is 30 or 40 billion, about six or seven million times as many as can be seen by the naked eye.

A Schwab Story

Charles M. Schwab, steel magnate, does not claim to be much of an orator. But he does tell some good stories. At a recent banquet, according to Editor and Publisher, Mr. Schwab told of a farmer who aproached him.

"I've got a cow I want to sell to you, Charlie," the neighbor said.

"Yes, would she fit into my Guernsey herd?"

"No, I dunno as she would."

"Has she got anything to recommend her?"

"Wall, I dunno as she has."

"Does she give lots of milk?"

"No, I can't say as she gives lots of milk, but, Charlie, I can tell you this: She's a kind, gentle, good-dispositioned old cow and if she's got any milk she'll give it to you."

A HIGHER VISION

World Flight

Of all the nerve-wracking moments that the Hon. Mrs. Victor Bruce experienced during her lone flight round the world, that time when she made a forced landing in a jungle clearing on the borders of Siam must have been the worst. The torrential rain, she tells us in "The Bluebird's Flight," had saturated the engine of her little machine; she was literally miles from anywhere, and night was coming on. At its greatest length the clearing was not more than a hundred and eighty yards; "Bluebird" needed a hundred and fifty in which to rise, and there were high trees all round. She swung the propeller, but there was no sign of life in the engine. Hurriedly she changed the sparking plugs and cleaned the magneto points. Still nothing happened:

I sat on the edge of the wing to take breath. How oppressively hot it was! Perspiration was pouring down my face. I felt I hadn't the strength to keep swinging that heavy propeller. I knew if the throttle were opened more fully there might be a better chance of getting the engine to start, but I dared not do this without something to hold the wheels of the machine from moving forward. . . I felt desperate; precious moments were being lost. The sun had already sunk below the trees. I returned and gave the propeller another desperate swing. The engine burst into life, and I leapt into the cockpit and manipulated the throttle. For two or three seconds there was a spluttering and backfiring, and then the smooth, even firing to which my ears were so used.

Finally she got up—touching the tops of trees with the wheels of the under-carriage. Just out of the wood!

A LANDING ON QUICKSAND.

Another time, flying towards Jask, on the Persian Gulf, she found her oil pressure getting dangerously low. So she decided to come down on the sand near the water and fill up with some fresh oil she was carrying in the fuselage:

As I landed I felt the wheels of the under-carriage sink, and the nose of the machine dive downwards. At the same time I was shot violently forward against the windscreen. Amid a deafening sound of splintering wood and a smell of escaping petrol, I found myself hanging by my straps, the tail of the machine bolt upright in the air, and the engine buried out of sight in the soft sand. I had landed on quicksand!

Half dazed she released herself, to find that she was on one of the most desolate stretches of desert on the Gulf. Even when help came—in the shape of some none too friendly natives—the difficulty was to get "Bluebird" on to its wheels again. But at last, although the wind was blowing hard, they succeeded:

Oh, the joy! It seemed too good to be true to have got it back again without damage, for usually when a machine has landed on its nose it is a tricky business to right it, requiring skilled labor, ropes, and other material for lifting. I was delighted, and was naturally smiling; the Baluchis were so pleased that they joined hands and began to dance round the aeroplane. They insisted that I should joint their "ring o' roses," but I soon stopped, for the heat was terrific, and I felt that I should quickly become exhausted unless I got under shelter.

THE BUYING OF "BLUEBIRD."

Such were some of the incidents that enlivened Mrs. Bruce's flight. Truly it was one of the most amazing adventures of modern times. Here was a woman, who, a little more than a fortnight before starting, had been up in the air only once, gaily setting out to fly round the world via India, Japan, and America. The buying of "Bluebird" is a story in itself. Having an hour or so to spare before lunch, Mrs. Bruce was strolling towards Bond Street. In a shop window she saw a little blue-and-silver aeroplane:

Somthing influenced me to step inside and ask the price of the machine.

"Five hundred and fifty pounds." plied the salesman.

I was about to leave the shop when added: ". . . and chromium plating is only five pounds extra."

That settled it. It was just like ying a motor-car. "Chromium plating five pounds extra!" I had always agined that aeroplanes were extraordinary things, and yet this machine emed so very ordinary.

"Could one fly round the world in dis?" I asked.

"Of course . . . easily!" was the eply.

That settled it. In a week or two she was painting the name "Bluebird" on its nose, and was ready to be off. But no wonder a visitor, who asked a mechanic what "Bluebird's" registration letters—G-A.B.D.S.—stood for, received the reply "A B——— Daft Stunt"! And no wonder that when she rang up her husband on reaching Munich to tell him "I'm here," he replied: "Where? In Kent?"

ENGLAND IN SIAM.

One of the interesting features of the flight was the fact that she never knew what fresh experience she might have on landing at some out-of-the-way aerodrome. Sometimes she had pleasant surprises—at Lakhon, in Siam, for instance, where the Siamese Governor came to escort her to his house:

On arriving I was very interested to see how English everything was. The interior of the house was a perfect example of an old Elizabethan dwelling. The Governor was particularly proud of his garden, and I was highly amused to see that even the banana trees were surrounded with white paling to create the atmosphere of an English park. The entrance to his drive was also typically English, with a five-barred gate, and at the side an old-fashioned English stile. Round the porch was a great arch of foliage with masses of orchids.

The found tea waiting for her—not the usual Siamese tea, but served in English fashion with plenty of cream and sugar!

THE EARTHQUAKE.

After crossing the Yellow Sea—five hundred miles of lonely water and eight hours of suspense—she safely reached Japan. But her troubles were by no means over. She was told at her hotel not to worry if she felt the building shake, as there had been over two hundred small earthquakes that year:

I had not been asleep more than three hours when suddenly I was awakened by my bed shaking violently. At first I thought "So this is Japan," and turned over and tried to go to sleep again. But the shocks became more violent, and I simply had to sit up and take notice. Then the whole room began to move. A horrible thought struck me. An earthquake and a bad one! . . . I tried to turn on the light, but it wouldn't work. Sparks were coming out of the electric radiator. The whole hotel was in darkness. Every second the building shook more violently. There was a crash just beside me; two china vases had fallen from the mantelpiece; it was almost impossible to keep my feet.

Needless to say, she had arrived just in time for one of the worst earthquakes of the year!

What most increases anger is the feeling that one is in the wrong.—Jean Paul Richter.

Behind the Scenes In Recording Studio

By Van Phillips, in Britannia and Eve (November, 1931)

The gramophone's faithful reproduction of music no longer seems a marvel. Records of infinite variety are so easily obtainable that we have come to accept them as commonplace—like bread or matches. Yet there is a most fascinating industry behind the recording of a singer, or of the music of a mighty orchestra.

In the recording rooms of the larger companies there are three or four separate studios, in all of which recording of different kinds may be going on simultaneously. Each company has the exclusive use of one or more concert halls, for the recording of large orchestral or choral works. The working day is usually made up of two sessions of three hours, one in the morning and the other in the afternoon. A privileged visitor may see in one day a half dozen of the most famous artists under the most informal and interesting working conditions.

The Columbia Studios in Westminster, London, are among the largest. They are situated in what appears to be an ordinary office building, but which is quite differ inside. There one hears strangely disordered and intermingled sounds of music. Over the door of the first studio a red light is glowing. Beneath is is a sign reading:

Silence. Recording in progress. Do not enter while light is on.

When the light goes oc, the visitor may enter through two sets of heavy swinging doors. The room is bare except for a grand piano, a microphone, and eight or ten chairs. There are long grey hangings, stretching from ceiling to floor against the walls. These are called "damping," and may be drawn to give more or less "room tone," as desired. In this first studio two well-known figures are recording, Layton and Johnstone, both famous American songsters and prime favorites among record buyers. There is a third figure present, a man holding open the door of the little recording room at the far side of the studio.

"I'm sorry," he says. "We'll have to have one more of that. Chipped wax." This means that a flaw has been found in the surface of the wax after recording, although it could not be seen before. It is useless to send it to the factory for production purposes, however good the performance of the artists may have been.

"Well, can you beat that," says Johnston. "The best one this morning, too!"

"Let's hear it anyway," says Layton. "The play-back might give us some ideas."

The recording room walls are crowded witha maze of electrical apparatus and wires. The recording operator has a large disc of what appears to be yellow candy. It is larger in circumstance than a record, and about an inch and a half in thickness.

"There's the chip—see?" and the operator points to an almost invisible pin-point on the wax. Irreverently the operator jabs two small holes in the grooved surface.

"Tha last note was a little too heavy, Mr. Johnstone," he says, "the high one, and the piano was a little too loud in your solo, Mr. Layton."

He can tell simply by looking at the grooves whether there are any dangerous places—that is, places that will "blast" in playing the finished record. A recording operator of long experience can even distinguish between various kinds of music—piano, orchestral, vocal, etc. —by the appearance of the grooves. As he plays the newly made record over a lock knocking is heard as the needle passes over the first of the small holes which he made. Layton and Johnstone look significantly at each other, realizing that this and the next hole represent the places whre the piano was too loud and the last note too high.

Upstairs in the next studio the visitor comes across a fine, solid fanfare of brass. No warning sign is up. Evidently this is a rehearsal. The room is large and high. A well-known and popular dance orchestra is preparing to record a number. They play different parts over and over again until the conductor considers the number sufficiently well done to record. A buzzer sounds—one long ("Ready!") two short ("Get set!"), and then a red flashes ("Go!")—and the band starts. When the number is finished perfect silence is maintained until a final buzz indicates that the recording operator has lifted the record from the wax.

The record may be slightly too long or a few bars too short. That means another recording.

Then, the visitor may go over to the Central Hall—a large auditorium —where the multimicrophone is in use. A recording of "Rio Grande" is in progress. There are three separate microphones—one in front of the orchestra, one at the piano, and one before the chorus. The studio manager very carefully adjusts each one so as to get the proper volume of sound required to mix the principal musical components on the record.

Records are made of successful shows at the theatres. Many of the London theatres have proved to be excellent studios. But in spite of the fact that theatre recording has become an accepted thing, it always seems strange to see famous theatrical stars singing away on the stage in an empty theatre—not to crowded stalls, but to a little black box on a pedestal.

Electricity has brought almost limitless possibilities into the field of recording outside the studio. Animals at the Zoo, New Year's Eve at St. Paul's, Beatrice Harrison and her famous nightingales, the King's speech at some opening, the Trooping of the Colors—all these would have been unattainable by the may be successfully recorded, even in the open air. But in spite of the expert knowledge gained in the last few years, it is still impossible to predict recording success in the case of a singer. The quality, or timbre, of the voice may sound quite different on the wax.

Today any music, speech or sound acoustic (or "horn") recording of six or seven years ago.

The science of recording, to whatever height of perfection it may be brought, will never be without its occasional humorous moments. In the final analysis the whole thing rests on the personal element involved, and the very human nature of the work brings about many very amusing incidents.

So many records have been spoiled by artists not waiting for the "All Clear" signal at the finish, that the recording operator is constantly on his guard against it. One famous operatic star had great difficulty with the last bars on one of his selections. They tried it several times, but never seemed able to make a success of those last few bars. Finally, when they were almost willing to give up, the opera singer decided he would try it just once more. He sang it marvelously. The studio manager was in ecstacies. Then, before the recording operator had time to lift the point from the wax, he heard, forever engraved on the last grooves, "Thank God, that's over. I couldn't make a better one if I tried for years."

There is a greatly mistaken idea that making a record or having a song recorded is the "open Sesame" to fame and fortune. But the truth of it is that a song is never recorded until it has been accepted by a publisher, and then one record would bring the composer or author only from ten to fifteen pounds ($50 to $75). The unknown singer or player is lucky to receive at the beginning five to ten on a basis (if he is lucky) of six records a year.

A man visiting a country town went to the local barber for a shave. The barber made several slips with his razor, and each time he would paste a small piece of paper over the cut to stop the bleeding. When the operation was over the victim handed the man half a crown. "Keep the change, barber," he said. "It's worth half a crown to be shaved by so versatile an artist. Why, you're a barber, butcher, and paperhanger all in one."

Cannes, France.—Cannes has introduced a novelty for motorists. New signs recently erected in the town are printed in Esperanto as well as in French. They often work out a good deal longer than the old French notices did. For example, the motorist is warned to dim his headlights both by "phares interdits" and "malpermesitaj lanternegoj."

Sunday School Lesson

January 17. Lesson III—Jesus and Nicodemus—John 3: 1-16. Golden Text—God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have everlasting life.—John 3: 16.

ANALYSIS

I. A SATISFIED SEEKER, 3: 1, 2.
II. AN UNHEARD-OF CONDITION, 3: 3-12.
III. GOD'S GIFT FOR ALL, 3: 13-17.
IV. HOW CHRIST JUDGES MEN, 3: 18-21.

INTRODUCTION—Jesus' first visit to Jerusalem created something of a sensation. Many "believed" on his name (2: 23), that is, believed that he was the Messiah, without any moral change. Jesus placed little confidence in them. 2: 24. In the case of one of them, however, he made an exception.

I. A SATISFIED SEEKER, 3: 1, 2.

Nicodemus, a member of the Sanhedrin, is taken as an example of that imperfect faith. He knew about Jesus. The tremendous influence and the personality of the young preacher had appealed to him. He may have had hopes of persuading him to give up his revolutionary theories and associate himself with the regularly organized channels of religion. He would be less dangerous there. So the Roman Catholics thought about Francis of Assisi. Nicodemus was not the "anxious enquirer." He came to discover whether he could come to some understanding with this popular young preacher which would keep the Pharisees still in their loved position of religious leadership.

He came to Jesus by night (v. 2) perhaps because he did not wish to compromise either himself or his brother Pharisees until he was sure of this new movement. He began with a diplomatic, if somewhat patronizing, speech. He has been accused of cowardice, but surely, unfairly. If it was by night that he came, at least he came—to learn for himself. It is true that he defended Jesus without expressing any personal interest in him, but he defended him. He was satisfied with his own religion, but he was open-minded enough to seek further knowledge.

II. AN UNHEARD-OF CONDITION, 3: 3-12.

Jesus never wasted his time on sham. With Nicodemus he went at once to the heart of things. Nicodemus and his associates were concerned about this new preacher's possible connection with the Messianic kingdom. Their own fitness for that kingdom was taken for granted. Were they not orthodox children of Abraham? They connected Jesus with the kingdom because they saw external "signs." But the truth of his utterances had not gripped them.

Jesus shattered this complacency with one sentence, "Except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God," v. 3. As mere physical birth does not make one a real Canadian, living up to the high ideals of Canadian citizenship, neither did his Jewish birth make Nicodemus a member of the new kingdom. A spiritual as well as a physical qualification was necessary. To be a member of the kingdom of love and brotherhood, one had to be loving and brotherly. The Pharisees' religion was not love, but law. Jesus, in speaking of a new birth, borrowed his figure from the religious and political language of his day. A pagan, upon embracing the Jewish religion, was said to be "reborn" in the new faith. The same term was used in the mystery religions which flourished in Ephesus where John was writing his Gospel. To be "born again" is not to experience some magical change; it is to commit ourselves so unreservedly to the Jesus way of living that the spirit that was in him will be in us also, changing our characters and our attitudes. We shall become so different from our old self-considering selves—actually living a new life—that we can be spoken of as having been "re-born," "born from above."

Verse 5 refers to the Pharisees' refusal to submit to John's baptism of repentance. Unrepentant, they are not fit for the Christian brotherhood. Just as the wind is known only by its effects, said Jesus (v. 8), so the presence of the Spirit is recognized by the changed character of a man. The persistent incredulity of Nicodemus (v. 12) convinced Jesus that nothing was to be gained by continuing the conversation. John has now finished with Nicodemus, and dismisses him. He goes on with his discourse on God's Gift.

Follower of the Turf

Miss Dorothy Paget, one of richest women in England and daughter of Lord Queenborough, is becoming prominent patron of the turf, having sunk about $100,000 in recent bloodstock sale.

III. GOD'S GIFT FOR ALL, 3: 13-17.

Verses 14-17 are probably reflections of the author rather than the words of Jesus. They discuss the very truths which Jesus suggested Nicodemus could not understand. Not for the select few—the Jews—but for all who accept it, is God's gift of salvation provided. The Son of Man, rejected by the Jews, will bring salvation through his sacrifice, vs. 4, 15. For this express purpose did God send his "only begotten"—literally one who is like no other son, v. 6. Eternal life is for "whosoever believeth." "Believeth" here is not an intellectual assent to a creed. It is a personal loyalty and devotion to a person. To be "saved," to "have eternal life," and "to be like Jesus" means the same thing.

IV. HOW CHRIST JUDGES MEN, 3: 18-21.

The Jews thought Messiah was coming to punish the unbelievers. But if judgment is not the motive of the Christ's coming, it is the inevitable consequence. His coming compels men to take sides. The stand they take shows them up in their true colors.

If our deeds are evil, we shun the light because it shows up our true character. The man who has nothing to hide welcomes the investigation. He who avoids the light thereby proclaims that his deeds are evil.

Buffalo Meat Feature of Many New Menus

Two delicacies have been added to the Canadian New Year menus, and the Mounted Police will benefit from the recent slaughter of 1,500 buffalo under government supervision in Wainwright National Park, where the Canadian Government maintains the largest herd of buffalo in the world, says a recent news item from the Canadian National Railways.

Buffalo tail soup and buffalo steaks graced many a table in Canada on New Year's Day. The Canadian National Railways have distributed thirty cars of buffalo meat to various markets throughout the Dominion. The hides will be used mostly to make coats and rugs for Canada's famous red-coated police force, which still performs yeoman service in the far stretches of the northland, in many cases within the Arctic Circle.

The heads, in many instances, will be sold by the government to clubs, hotels and individual citizens as wall trophies.

The slaughter of the animals was necessary because there is only sufficient pasturage within the park to feed about 6,000 head of buffalo and also in order to maintain the quality of the stock, says the bulletin.

Insist on yourself; never imitate. Your own gift you can present every moment with the accumulative force of a whole life's cultivation; but of the adopted character of another you have only an extemporaneous half-possession.—R. W. Emerson.

Appoint New Heads to C.P.R. Departments

Canadian Pacific Railway Telegraphs Department has with the New Year changed in name to the Department of Communications having supervision over the telegraph, telephone and radio broadcasting services of the railway. To the head of the new department Mr. W. D. Neil is appointed as general manager, vice Mr. John McMillan, retired, and Mr. H. H. Goodfellow takes the position of assistant general manager.

W. D. Neil

Mr. T. Fawcett is appointed General Storekeeper of the Canadian Pacific Railway with headquarters at Montreal and Mr. A. A. Goodchild retires as general storekeeper, Eastern Lines, of the railway.

Mr. Neil joined the service of the Canadian Pacific Railway as an operator at Calgary in 1905, thus rising from the ranks to the highest post in the gift of his department. His first ten years of service were spent in the West and in 1915 he came as superintendent of traffic to Montreal. In 1922 he became assistant manager eastern lines and in 1924 assistant manager western lines. Since 1930 he was assistant general manager of the department and now is promoted chief.

John McMillan

Mr. McMillan became a construction lineman with the Canadian Pacific in 1883 and passed through various grades of promotion in the West until March 1915 when he was promoted manager of Telegraphs at Montreal. He has been general manager, Canadian Pacific Telegraphs since 1921 from which position he now retires.

T. Fawcett

Mr. Goodfellow started with the Canadian Pacific as an operator in 1899 at Vancouver and has been in the West during all his service except for a year in Montreal as traffic superintendent. He had been in Vancouver as superintendent of Telegraphs since 1930 and is promoted from that position to his present post at Montreal.

Mr. Fawcett entered the company's service in 1905 as clerk in the vice-president's office at Winnipeg. Passing through various positions always in the West he became general storekeeper western lines with office at Winnipeg in 1917 from which he is now promoted general store-keeper of the whole Canadian Pacific system with headquarters at Montreal.

A. A. Goodchild

Mr. Goodchild had already a record of work with British commercial firms in London, England and with the Grand Trunk in Canada before he joined the Canadian Pacific Railway as a clerk in the Comptroller's office at Montreal in 1888. By October 1899 he had risen to the position of assistant auditor of disbursements. Similar auditor's appointments followed in 1901 and 1904 until in 1913 he became general storekeeper, eastern lines, from which post he now retires.

A Dollar goes a long way

A dollar goes a long long way, provided one knows how and where to spend it, and perhaps this is why so many Canadian dollars are going just as far as they can—right out to Victoria, B.C., this winter. This is so because many Canadians who formerly "went South" for the winter months have discovered that there are attractions right at home which compare favorably with anything that is offered south of the international frontier and at a value of one hundred cents in the dollar. People are watching their money and their own homelands these days. It is fashionable to spend the winter in one's own land. Over in England, "it's being done", for the cream of fashionable society, headed by H. R. H. the Duke of Connaught, has decided that money spent at home is a patriotic and practical gesture in these days when everyone is hoping that the turn in the depression has come and it behooves the nation to conserve its pennies in every possible manner. Here in Canada, the new domestic loan has just been successfully financed; the wheat situation and other things are heralded as harbingers of better things and Mr. and Mrs. Canadian are investigating the family prospects for the winter of 1931-32. The result is that they find that one perfectly good Canadian dollar remains so in Canada, whereas it gets clipped of some 15 perfectly good cents elsewhere. The answer is simple. The picture shows the beautiful inner harbor of Victoria, B.C., as viewed from the provincial Parliament Buildings, with the Canadian Pacific Railway's palatial Empress Hotel on the right; and, below, a golfer, playing the 14th at the Oak Bay course. Both scenes might have been taken "down South".

"HELLO, MOTHER, I'm O.K."

"Hello mother — yes, I'm feeling fine — yes, we won . . . I scored two goals."

It has come to be a habit with Fred to call his mother by Long Distance after every game. For mother is all alone . . . and she worries about him . . . ever since Fred's chum had his leg broken in a game early in the season.

The cost is a mere trifle, for the low night rates are always in effect after the game — they begin at 8.30 p.m. And it makes a pleasant break in mother's quiet life . . . and gives her some news to tell her friends. Long Distance is now quick and dependable. In most cases the connection is established while you hold the line. Evening and night rates are particularly inexpensive. In fact night rates are little more than half of the day rates.

Evening rates on "Anyone" (station-to-station) calls begin at 7 p.m. Night rates begin at 8.30 p.m.

TRINITY CHURCH

Services in connection with the World's Week of Prayer were held in Trinity Church on Monday, Tuesday and Thursday at 4 o'clock. On Wednesday, Epiphany Day, when we commemorate the visit of the wise men to Bethlehem, or the manifestation of Christ to the Gentiles, service was held at eight o'clock, with a good attendance.

On Friday evening, at 7 o'clock, a missionary banquet was held, when over a hundred sat down. Two wonderful inspiring, informing and intensely interesting addresses were given, the first by Dr. McElheran, principal of Wycliffe College, on "The Christ of the Canadian Road." Mr. Cuttle, Finance Commissioner of the Synod, spoke on the Social Call and Problems. Musical numbers were appreciated, given by a group of girls, and a quartette by the men. A committee of eight of the young people organized and completed all arrangements and were enthusiastically supported by the congregation.

The Rector desires to express his gratitude of the splendid response and splendid evening.

Services Next Sunday:
10.00 a.m.—Sunday School.
11 a.m.—Morning Prayer.
7.00 p.m.—Evening Prayer. All welcome.

BRAMPTON

The County of Peel Agricultural Society completed the year 1931 with a deficit of $130, which, added to the debit balance of $492 at the beginning of the year leaves the society $622 debit balance for the coming year. T. W. Thomson, secretary of the society explained the reason for the deficit was arising from the increase in prize monies paid, and the falling off by nearly $250 of the gate receipts, as compared to the preceding year.

No definite resolutions of retrenchment were entered at the annual meeting of the society on Tuesday, but the general tenor of the meeting was one of economy.

The society was highly active during the year, securing donations in money and goods to the value of $1,010 dollars. Grants of $600 by the Provincial Government, $400 by the County and additional grants from the Town of Brampton, Township of Toronto Gore, etc., helped to defray expenses. The largest item of expenditure was the prize money paid, $2,482.10.

The fair will be held on 20th and 21st of September next fall.

Officers elected at the meeting were the following: Pres. F. Fenwick, Cooksville; Vice Presidents, W. G. Shaw, Mono Road, W. L. Wilkinson, Brampton; Secretary, T. W. Thomson; Treas., Wm. Davison, Brampton; Directors, Brampton, A. H. Milner, R. Robson, L. J. C. Bull, C. M. McCollum, C. R. Fendley; Chinguacousy, H. A. Dolson, M. W. Carter, C. Strangway, W. Bovaird, Harry Laidlaw; Toronto Township, Hunter Arnott, D. L. Dunton; Streetsville, O. R. Church, Toronto Gore, Robert Gardhouse; Auditors, James Laidlaw, F. J. Thomson. Mr. Fenwick's election gives him the second year in office usually accorded presidents of the board.

John Blain Robinson, 9-year-old son of Dr. and Mrs. T. A. Robinson, Main St. north, Brampton, died at Sick Children's Hospital, Toronto, of infantile paralysis, the first case ever recorded in the town or the surrounding district.

The boy is survived by his father, a dentist, his mother, formerly Miriam Blain, daughter of the late Senator Blain, and a brother, Robbie. He was a member of the Grace United Church Sunday School.

He was being taken to the Sick Children's Hospital by Dr. W. H. Brydon, the family physician, and was struck with paralysis in the doctor's car. On his arrival at the hospital, he was placed in the artificial respirator, and was kept alive until the afternoon, but passed away in spite of the efforts of his physicians.

LET US SMILE

A backwoods mountaineer one day found a mirror which a tourist had lost.

"Well, if it ain't my old dad," he said as he looked in the mirror. "I never knowed he had his pitcher took."

He took the mirror home and stole into the attic to hide it. But his actions didn't escape his suspicious wife. That night while he slept she slipped up to the attic and found the mirror.

"Hum-um," she said, looking into it, "so, that's the old hag he's been chasin'."

"FIRST FOOTING"

Scotch New Year's Custom Was Formerly Popular in America.

ONCE highly popular New Year's custom in various parts of our own country, but one which is annually falling more and more into disuse, except in remote rural districts, is that of young men and women, often disguised by grotesque costumes and masks, going about from house to house on New Year's eve firing off guns, blowing horns, singing and partaking of any good cheer that may be offered them.

This is undoubtedly a modification of the old Scottish custom of "first footing," which was observed by large parties of men and women carrying a great bowl or flagon of drink as well as a plentiful supply of cakes, bread and cheese. Thus equipped, they went about from house to house at midnight on New Year's eve, and if in any of the dwellings visited they were the first to set foot after that hour they were called the "first footing" and were treated with the utmost consideration by the people of the house, who provided them with good cheer and partook in return of that which the "first footing" party brought with them.

THEY WENT ABOUT FROM HOUSE TO HOUSE.

Among many other old superstitions associated with New Year's is a belief that if a lamp or candle be taken out of a house on that day some member of the family will die within a twelvemonth, while to throw out dirty water, ashes or anything whatever, no matter how worthless, is regarded as certain to bring ill luck during the whole of that year.

A NEW YEAR GAME.

All of the Months Play Their Parts in This Timely Pastime.

This game is played as a sort of "dumb crambo." There are an audience and thirteen actors, or a few months can be suggested, taking months containing notable holidays.

First comes before the audience the little New Year. She announces that her children are coming and to him who guesses the most names correctly will be given a prize.

Then comes January, with her hand full of slips of papers on which are written "good resolutions;" these she scatters to the audience and goes off. Of course the months must not follow her in succession.

Next may come May, fanning himself and perhaps snapping a firecracker or in some other way not so plain suggesting Empire Day.

Then September, working hard for Labor day or bearing a September flower or fruit.

November, with a suggestion of Thanksgiving, and so on. Birthdays of noted men may mark the month, the actor saying or doing something to recall the man.

The audience must write down who No. 1 is, 2, and so on to the end. Then comes the year, who gives the prize.

Ringing the Old Year Out.

Of all sounds of all bells, most solemn and touching is the peal which rings out the old year. I never hear it without a gathering up of my mind to a concentration of all the images that have clustered over the past twelvemonth, all I have done or suffered, performed or neglected, in that regretful time. I begin to know its worth when a friend dies. It takes a personal colour, nor was it a poetical flight in a contemporary when he exclaimed, "I saw the skirts of the departing year."—Charles Lamb.

New Year's Day.

Full knee deep lies the winter snow,
And the winter winds are wearily sighing.
Toll ye the church bells, sad and slow,
And tread softly and speak low,
For the old year lies a-dying.

• • • And let him in
That standeth there alone
And waiteth at the door.
There's a new light on the floor, my friend,
And a new face at the door, my friend—
A hand (and a foot) on the door.

—Tennyson.

Annual Meeting Streetsville United

Unprecedented Year in Church's History

In spite of many impassable country lanes, a goodly number of the members and adherents of the United Church were present at the annual meeting, on Wednesday evening, January 13th, to hear the most encouraging reports in the history of the church, both spiritually and financially.

Rev. Mr. Purchase occupied the chair and opened the meeting with prayer, which was followed by congregational singing. Presidents, secretaries and treasurers of the various organizations were then called upon.

In all departments of the church increased activity has been very evident. The Sunday School, or as it is more fittingly called "The Church School," has shown a remarkable increase in numbers; although the objective for the year was set at 150, the register for 1931 showed an enrolment of 176. An earnest group of teachers is endeavouring to instil into these young minds, not only Biblical knowledge, but also those principles of Christian living that will assist them in their life work and prepare them for the larger responsibilities of the Church itself.

The Primary Department, under the capable direction of Mrs. J. D. Steen and Mrs. Spear has shown the greatest increase with a registration of over 50. In the Junior Department an additional teacher has been required owing to the large number in some of the classes. The Young People's Bible Class, organized this past year by Rev. Mr. Purchase, has met a very urgent need among the young men and women. It is an oasis in the desert to these young lives, who are thirsting for Christian sympathy, understanding and guidance as they face the difficult problems of these trying times. Mr. Hisey, as leader of the adult Bible Class is doing splendid word. While the classes are well attended he would welcome other Senior members to Bible study and discussion.

The Women's Missionary Society reported a very encouraging year. Helpful meetings were held throughout the year, when the work in Japan and Korea was studied. The special speakers, among whom was Dr. Margaret McKellar, that veteran missionary of India, were greatly appreciated. The Mission Band, directed by Mrs. Temple and Mrs. Andrews, is particularly praiseworthy. The interest and activity shown by these young members speaks well for the future missionary welfare of the Church.

The Young People's Society appears to have taken on a new lease of life. Opening the fall session with a banquet and an inpsiring address by Rev. Mr. Barker, of Toronto, the meetings have been decidedly above par with an average attendance of seventy-five.

The most elucidating report of the evening was that of the Women's Association presented by Mrs. Caslor, in her usual witty manner. As Treasurer, or as she has been recently termed "Chancellor of the Exchequer" she gives a faithful account of every penny raised and expended, crowning each detail with a happy little incident that is always a delight to her audience. At the close of the report, Mrs. Lindsay stepped forward and on behalf of the Association, read a very fine letter of appreciation for the services of Mrs. Caslor, who has been treasurer for over 25 years. Great credit is due Mrs. Falconer and the Executive for their untiring services in their important phase of the church work.

Mr. Len Pope, leader of the choir, gave a creditable account of the choir's activities, which was followed by a vote of appreciation by the congregation.

The election to fill the vacancies of the Session and Stewards retiring in 1932 was held after the reports were completed. The following members of session were returned en bloc: J. Workman, A. B. Bruce, O. Turney, and C. P. MacArthur. These will retire in 1935. Other members of the session are J. B. Ross, Chas. Falconer, Dr. Bowie, W. E. W. Steen, all of whom retire in 1934. A. Sibald, J. K. Featherstone, T. Gould and J. D. Steen, who retire in 1933.

The Stewards elected and who retire in 1935 are D. McCaugherty, K. McIwrich, J. Switzer, E. Redick, F. Reid. Stewards to retire 1934, Thos. Steen, P. Stevens, T. Rogerson, O. R. Church, N. MacCracken. Retiring in 1933 are Dr. Smith, J. Wagner, J. Dowling, Clifford May, F. Workman.

A vote of appreciation for the untiring services of Rev. Mr. Purchase in all phases of the Church work and his pastoral work in the congregation was most heartily extended. His courageous Christian fortitude and courage during many trying months of the year have been an inspiration to all.

Votes of appreciation to the Treasurer and to Messrs. King and Gerhart, the auditors, were also passed. Mr. Falconer was again re-elected Treasurer.

While the financial standing should never be the barometer of the church's achievement, yet it is worthy of note, that in spite of the depression which has been felt in rural districts particularly the amount of money raised was over $6100, a substantial increase over preceding years. Envelopes and loose collection, $2500; Women's Association $880; Sunday School $301. The Equity on the Parsonage was fully met, leaving all Property free of debt.

Amount raised for Missions, including the General Fund, W.M.S. and Mission Band, $1000

The meeting was closed by prayer and a social time was afterwards spent in the basement of the church.

COOKSVILLE

ONE STREETSVILLE

The treasurer's statement of the Cooksville Fall Fair, presented at the annual meeting in the Township Offices on Saturday, showed that the society finished the year with a credit balance of $393.62, a creditable performance for a year in which the depression cut gate receipts of every fair in the Province.

A credit balance was brought forward from 1930 of $302.98, and other receipts included a Provincial Grant of $457, Township grant of $60, and a County grant of $150. Donations for the year amounted to $816.50. Total gate receipts for the two days were $623.55.

The large item of expenditure for the year was $1,475.45 paid in prize money, $582 of which was devoted to the horse classes. Total disbursements were $2,747.09.

F. H. Pense, who was voted an honorarium of $35 for his work as secretary of the fair for the past year, was asked to take both the office of treasurer and that of secretary for the coming year. Gordon Harris, treasurer for 1931, who also received an honorarium for his part in the year's work, told the board of directors that he did not wish to continue the work in 1932, and asked that his resignation be accepted.

A motion of approval of the work of H. B. Stewart, president of the board for the past two years, was unanimously passed. Mr. Stewart, after the two years accorded each president of the fair, gives place this year to Martin Crofton, who steps up from the vice-president's chair.

Officers elected at the meeting were: President, Martin Crofton; Vice Presidents, R. J. Walker, J. J. Jamieson; Secretary - Treasurer, F. H. Pense; Directors, A. U. Cote, J. J. Hopkins, Paul Sayers, H. B. Stewart, Wm. Copeland, James Curran, W. G. Dulmage, Cornelius Wood, Wm. Shaver, J. W. Dale, W. R. P. Parker, P. J. Lamphier, Thos. Bryans, T. W. McCracken, George Duck, Wm. Cliff, Howard Walker, Harry Woodall, Wm. Hedge, J. H. Pinchin, Dr. W. H. Godfrey, L. H. Pallett, A. A. P. Wilson, Thos. McCarthy, G. F. Skinner, G. W. A. Morris, W. D. Monkman, C. Hare, Gordon Pattinson, W. T. McCord.

C. R. Terry requested that his name, and that of Mrs. Terry be left off the list of directors for the coming year, as he did not feel that he could devote sufficient time to the work. Lady directors of the board will be appointed at a later meeting.

Rector Inducted at Erindale Church

An occasion that was deeply interesting and inspiring was the induction Sunday of Rev. George Frederick Banks as rector of St. Peter's Anglican Church, Dixie. The church at Erindale, where the induction took place, was crowded, the people overflowing into the rear aisle. Fully half of those present were from Toronto, and West Toronto in particular, where Rev. Mr. Banks labored for three years in "a happy partnership" with Rev. Richard MacNamara, rector of St. John's, Humberside Avenue. Rev. Mr. MacNamara, the special preacher, spoke of Rev. Mr. Banks's work with deep appreciation and confidence for his success in his new sphere. The sermon was a call for mutual helpfulness in the two churches. The West Toronto rector spoke on "The Ministry of the Layman," and included the wife of the new Erindale and Dixie rector in his fine and deserving tribute. He was equally flattering in his tribute to the worth of Rev. H. V. Thompson, retiring rector, who had labored for twenty-five years, and who took part in the service.

Rev. R. W. Allen, Rural Dean of Peel, was commissioned by the Lord Bishop of Toronto to conduct the induction. The choirs from both Erindale and Dixie were present. Miss Edna Fennix of St. John's, West Toronto, was the guest soloist. At the close of the service, the rector and Mrs. Banks held a reception at the rectory for the Toronto visitors.

ERINDALE

The Women's Auxiliary of St. Peter's Church, Erindale, have elected the following officers for 1932: President, Mrs. W. G. Conover; First Vice-President, Mrs. R. Brundige; Secretary, Mrs. Edgar Adamson; Treasurer, Mrs. George Burke; Secretary of the Living Message, Mrs. W. Crozier; Secretary of Little Helpers, Mrs. F. Jones; Dorcas Secretary, Mrs. W. G. Horne.

A play "Who Told the Truth", under the direction of the noted authoress, L. M. Montgomery, will be put on in Erindale Community Hall, on Wednesday, January 27th, at 8 o'clock, under the auspices of Erindale United Church.

PORT CREDIT

Sequel to an accident on October 26, in which four people were seriously injured, A. J. Colbourne, Heddon avenue, Toronto, was convicted of criminal negligence in Port Credit Police Court. The minimum fine of $10 was imposed, with a 30-day alternative. Magistrate L. J. C. Bull stated that the leniency of the sentence was partly due to the heavy costs involved, amounting to $46.20.

Smart work on the part of the Port Credit Fire Brigade, under Chief W. Newman, arrested a fire which threatened to gut the entire lumber plant of Thompson Brothers, on Centre Rd. It is believed that the fire started when a pot of boiling liquid upset while workmen were repairing the roof of one of the buildings. The carpenter's shop was completely destroyed, but the sawmill, storehouse and office, which for some time appeared in danger, were saved.

A fraternal visit was paid Port Credit Masons by members of Oakville Lodge, A.F. & A.M., over 40 of the Oakville brothers making the trip. The speaker of the evening was Rev. Dr. James Wilson, Toronto, who gave an address on present world conditions.

'GOD BLESS YOU JUDGE' CALLS GRATEFUL HOBO

Magistrate L. J. C. Bull has become accustomed to hard looks from hoboes appearing before him, but not to having blessings asked. This experience he had yesterday, however.

Two knights of the road, having consumed six bottles of wine, toured Port Credit with a hard luck story. They were "run in" by Chief Constable Telfer Wilson. The magistrate advised them to depart, and tarry not, which they did, taking a loaf of bread and other rations, the spoil of the morning's begging.

"God bless you, judge," called back one as he set his feet on the open road once more.

MILTON

Boys and girls went about the streets today hatless and coatless and children were using their swings. Mrs. J. R. Mitchell picked a bouquet of pansies in her garden at the Milton Inn.

Mrs. Arthur Dinning is visiting her sister at Niagara Falls.

The Misses Isobel and Violet Underwood enter as nurses in training at the Cornwall General Hospital, on Feb. 1st.

Friends of Mr. John A. Cooke, are pleased to see him about again following his recent severe attack of acute sciatica.

On Monday morning Mr. David McCaugherty underwent an operation at Wellesley Hospital, Toronto, latest reports are very favourable.

The Village Council held a special meeting Monday evening. They will advertise for applications for the different village officers.

Mr. Fred G. Roberts, of Toronto, well-known in Streetsville, has been elected President of the North Toronto Lions Club. He will fill the office with great credit.

The Credit River rose to an unusual height one day last week, and flooded several homes in Meadowvale, but no damage was done. This was the earliest flood the residents can remember.

Yesterday Mrs. Diers, of Oak Lodge, Clarkson, found some forsythia, or golden bell, in full bloom on her front porch. Blooming of this plant is regarded as one of the first signs of spring.

Several representatives of the Presbyterian Church attended the Toronto Presbytery, on Tuesday, to present the case of their church in regard to the invitation which recently came to Rev. Mr. McCree, from Glebe Presbyterian Church, Toronto, to become their minister.

Hon. John M. Robb, M.D., Minister of Health, has issued a bulletin to medical men to the effect that placarding will no longer be required for chicken pox, German measles or mumps. These diseases must still be reported, however, and persons in the family who have not had any of them will be quarantined.

A meeting to consider the advisability of organizing a Benevolent Society to co-ordinate all relief work was held last week. After a lengthy and profitable discussion it was decided to recommend to the many organizations of the village that each appoint a representative to act as a member of such a society and that on Feb. 4th, a meeting be held to consider organization and make plans for relief work during 1932.

UNITED CHURCH NOTES

The Grand Lodge officers were entertained by H. G. Heatley, Noble Grand of the Brampton lodge. Seven lodges, from Milton, Acton, Georgetown, Bolton, Streetsville and Orangeville, were guests. Messrs. Brooks and Harrison were presented with bouquets.

Preventing Fires

Fire Marshal E. P. Heston recently issued a warning to farmers that they should exercise greater care in harvesting and storing their crops if they hope to avoid losses through spontaneous combustion. At the close of the inquiry into Wentworth County barn fires, he suggested that farmers revert to the old-time custom of using salt in curing crops. Salt, he pointed out, aided greatly in preventing fires. He also advocated that fire extinguishers be carried on all threshing machines. Static electricity in the blower of the thresher, which can be overcome by grounding wires, was the cause of at least one fire in Wentworth.

Daring Robbers Subdue Five Loot Safe of $5,000

Five Bandits Invade Toronto Bread Plant, Barricade Occupants in Storeroom

MAKE ESCAPE IN CAR

Break Way in and Out of Bakery, Hold Prisoners at Point of Guns

Toronto.—Equipped with two stolen acetylene torch outfits and operating with a speed and daring apparently born of a first-hand acquaintance with the plant, five armed robbers boldly drove a big sedan automobile early Sunday morning into the Canada Bread Company's factory at No. 2 Bloor Street West, at Dundas Street. While two of them rounded up and stood guard over the five occupants of the building, three bandits carried the heavy torches and tanks up to the main offices on the first floor, cut open the built-in safe, and escaped with about $5,000, locking their prisoners in a storeroom

Working with a minimum of conversation, and an absence of bluster or threats that amounted almost to ultra-politeness, the gang seemed to know that Saturday night and early Sunday morning is the one period when the plant is not on full operating schedule and staffed with at least 40 to 50 men. They also must have waited for the usual police patrol to pass by for the officer on the beat had tried all doors of the plant only 20 minutes before the robbers broke in without finding anything amiss.

Entering the place about 1.20 a.m., the confidently moving masked bandits did not take more than 40 or 50 minutes to hold up the four employees and a youth within the factory, cut into the safe, abstract the money within, and escape in the auto—also believed to be stolen—after locking up the men working in the plant and breaking open a rear door opening on to Vincent Street.

Money in Mahogany Box

The sum total in the dashing invasion of the bakery represented the entire receipts from sales of the plant's products on Saturday, and was in a stout mahogany box, containing bills of small or medium denominations and a quantity of silver.

The only occupants of the plant at the time of the robbery were two wagon washers, Harold Roberts of 41 Lyne Avenue and Robert Gardiner of 3 Red Hill Avenue, a harness cleaner, William Gilbert of 48 Jesmond Street, the night watchman, John Ainslee of 243 Crawford Street, and Sidney Winter of 2409 Dundas Street West. Winter is not an employee of the company, but was friendly with several of the night employees and had been in the habit for some time past of dropping in for a chat or to give occasional assistance to his friends.

One man believed to have been the leader, and a second man both armed, set out to round up the employees before beginning actual operations. Entering the wagon shed they warned the two washers to keep quiet and to stand together.

The apparent leader was a man of about 30 years of age the police were told about 5 feet 10 inches in height, and wore a dark overcoat, a grey fedora hat and a red handkerchief over his face He carried two guns. The second man was described as about 25 years of age, about 5 feet 7 inches tall, wearing a grey cap and coat and a white handkerchief over his face. He was slim and fair and carried one gun.

The prisoners were marched into the driving shed, under the direction of terse orders whereupon the tall leader displayed knowledge of the plant layout and operating terms by remarking: "Well, I'll go and get the rack man," referring to Gilbert up in the harness room. He returned shortly, marching Gilbert ahead of him at the point of his pistols, and carrying a number of straps from the harness room.

Police investigators were also told that when the two-gun man went upstairs he remarked to his companions: "Remember, now, no shooting, and"—to the prisoners — "don't start anything."

Abandoned Car Found

Hamilton, Jan. 17.—An auto which might have been used in the Canada Bread robbery in Toronto Saturday night was found abandoned on the Guelph Road near the Clapison Cut at 5 o'clock this afternoon but Toronto and local authorities are of the opinion that the machine was not involved in the crime.

The Hamilton officers were advised that a sedan had been used in the Toronto hold-up. Some time before 11 o'clock last night a machine of that type owned by Boyce Kelly of 207 Ottawa Street South, carrying license No. R7651, was taken from in front of the I.O.O.F. Temple. The stolen car which the bandits used was said to be fawn-colored, but the auto stolen here was deep blue—almost black. The Toronto police were immediately advised, and while they did not consider the discovery of importance local detectives removed the car to Central police station ,and it will be examined to-morrow by William Pinch, local fingerprint expert.

Gold Particles Found In Bulgarian City

Borisovgrad, Bulgaria—Hopes have been aroused by American engineers, who with the help of 50 laborers are digging in "Gold Valley," in this little city in Southern Bulgaria, carefully washing the sand and gravel they uncover and minutely testing the bright particles they find.

Their discoveries seem to be encouraging, inasmuch as they have ordered machinery to enable them to make more extensive excavations. In fact, the first assignment of pipes, drills and sluices has already arrived, and the sight of them has filled the people with expectation.

For more than half a century the inhabitants of this county have believed that there is gold here. It is related that once a village woman carried a bag of sand home and dumped it in her yard for her chickens to scratch in, and that following a heavy rain the ground was covered with small shining specks. After that adventurers came from far and near to discover the source of the golden sand, but none before ever found enough wealth to make digging worth while.

A man is by nothing so much himself as by his temper, and by the character of his passions and affections. If he loses what is manly and worthily in these, he is as much lost to himself as when he loses his memory and understanding.—Earl of Shaftesbury.

January's Charm

There's colour in the country, tho' it's January, not May,
And wan mists drape the hillsides, and short's the sullen day;
Tho' the streams run high, rain-swollen, and the wind wails in the eaves,
There's colour in beech hedgerows—in the bright dead leaves.

The gorse glows gold in patches; the holly's green and red;
The yellow jasmine's flowering by the barren brown rose-bed.
And hips and haws twine scarlet o'er the crinkled bracken's tan;
A grey-green lichened oak trunk bears an orange fungus fan

There's a wealth of colour-magic by the quiet winter way,
In bird breasts, iridescent, old red barns and close-stacked hay
The deep soft snow spreads silver 'neath a curled yellow moon,
And the rare blue sky seems bluer when it's January, not June!

Electric Light Speeds Growth

Wheat Crosses Produced Two Years Quicker by Australian Plan

Melbourne, Vic.—Successful experiments in the use of electric light in speeding up the growth of wheat plants are being continued at the Victorian state research farm at Werribee, near Melbourne. The results are proving of practical value in wheat raising and in the introduction of varieties from other countries, according to a news item in the Christian Science Monitor.

Ordinarily 10 years are required to produce new cross-bred wheats, from the time of cross fertilization until distribution to the farmer. By inclosing the plants in a cage suitably illuminated with electric light it is possible to grow the first three generations of plants in one year, and thus reduce the total time by two years.

Sometimes late varieties possess qualities, such as size of head or grain which it is desirable to introduce into early varieties. As these two types will not flower at the same time, it is often impossible, without artificial aid, to cross them. The use of electric light at a suitable time makes it possible to hasten the development of the late types sufficiently to allow the cross to be made.

The Australian experiments were begun by Professor Wadham in 1929 as a result of observations on the growth of Australian varieties of wheat in England, and of English varieties introduced to Australia. The Australian varieties in England, Professor Wadham noticed, produced very short, pale shoots, with early heads. On the other hand, English varieties in Australia remained immature and green until late in the season and were thus adversely affected by the hot winds in November and December.

Experiments showed that the period of light which the plant received daily had an important effect on its development. By increasing the daily "daylight" period with weak electric light, it was found, the maturity could be hastened. Similarly, by inclosure of the plants in a specially constructed box, limiting the period of daylight, the growth could be retarded.

Co-operation is Urged Between Doctors-Dentists

Toronto. — Dr. Boyd S. Gardener, head of the dental department at the Mayo Clinic, Rochester, New York, stressed the point that the origin of many diseases could be traced to faulty teeth in a recent address at the meeting of the Academy of Dentistry here, and therefore dentists should have some general knowledge of medical practice. He also stated that doctors should sometimes call dentists into consultation in making a diagnosis.

The use of X-ray as a routine procedure, both in diagnosing and extracting, was strongly upheld by the speaker. There were approximately 70,000 dentists in the United States, only half of whom are good diagnosticians, because only about 35,000 of them have access to X-ray machines or care to use them.

Taking as a specific example of the progress made in the use of dentistry in making a diagnosis, he told the gathering that in the past extraction of teeth was encouraged as a cure for arthritis, but that in recent years four different kinds of arthritis had been discovered, the cause of only one of which could be traced to the teeth.

Dr. Gardener illustrated with lantern slides modern methods of extracting teeth by surgery, which, he declared, was far superior ot "yanking until something comes." In speaking of a European tour he had made, he said that in Finland 90 per cent. of the dentists were women, and in Norway 40 per cent.

In opening the discussion which followed the address, Dr. Harris McPhedran, President of the Academy of Medicine in Toronto, was in agreement with Dr. Gardener in the closer co-operation of the two professions.

Economic Court Proposed To Settle World Disputes

Geneva.—A sort of Hague court for the settlement of economic disputes between nations is soon to be established by the League of Nations.

Under the terms of the project as now prepared the tribunal will have the right to grant merely advisory opinions when those are desired, to make arbitral awards or to serve as a body for conciliation.

The League's Permanent Economic Committee, which is completing the details for this new international tribunal, suggests that it be composed of some twelve to fifteen experts chosen from the most varied fields of industry, commerce, international law and virtually every branch of international economic relations.

Beams Spot Plane At 16,000-ft. Height

Patterns Altered in Latest Huge British Searchlight

London—A searchlight of challenging power has been invented by Maj. John Savage, whose name is well known in Britain as the leading exponent of "sky writing." In the beam of this light an airplane has been spotted and its height and course accurately plotted at a height of 16,000 feet.

The intensity of this great light is estimated at 3,000,000,000 candlepower. The difference between this and an ordinary searchlight is that it consists of 300 parallel beams, each of which is deflected by a mirror along the path it is to take in the whole beam. The pattern thrown on the sky can be varied at will so as to take the appearance of a grid, circle, oval or other pattern as desired.

In the first public demonstration the pattern was in the shape of a square grid divided into nine smaller squares, but Major Savage told an interviewer that a 16-square grid would generally be more useful.

A sound locator gives the direction of an approaching airplane which can then be picked up quickly by the light. The pilot might think that he had evaded the light as he entered the darkness of one of the grid dividing lines, only to find himself in the brilliant glare of the next square. When used as an airdrome ground light it gives the most brilliant illumination, and as the depth of the beam is comparatively shallow it does not dazzle a landing pilot.

The invention has been described by experts as the most striking development in searchlights in the last 20 years. The whole apparatus, which is divided into parts, can be mounted on a petrol-electric lorry. In one part is the mechanism for generating the light and in the other it is broken up into its 300 rays and transmitted. The light can be traversed round the arc of a circle and raised or lowered as necessary.

Fair Weather Ahead

The New Outlook (Toronto).—Canada has been fortunate in maintaining her production and general business activities at present levels when other countries are faced with conditions of the greatest difficulty. Unemployment and its accompanying hardships have been felt less in Canada than in most countries. Promising features in the present economic outlook include the healthy condition of savings deposits, the strong technical position of Canadian manufacturers and a prosperous gold mining industry. The most difficult situation in Canada is that of agriculture. A revival of world trade and a return of profits to agriculture must precede any general return to prosperity to this country, but Canada is weathering this period of difficulty in a favorable manner and will be in an admirable position to participate in the first material advance.

British Workers Aid Unemployed

Birmingham, Eng.—One hundred unemployed allotment holders of the Staffordshire town of Walsall, as an expression of their gratitude for government and private help given them during the last season, have decided to subscribe a penny a week each from now to next spring so that 100 other unemployed Walsall men may be able to have allotments.

The money thus subscribed will buy the seeds needed for the new allotments and it is expected that the Society of Friends' Allotments' Committee will pay the rent of the whole 200 for the coming season.

Motors in Use Could Carry Total Population of Nation

New York—Every man, woman and child in the United States could be placed in the automobiles now in operation and transported simultaneously, according to A. W. Childs, chief of the automobile division, Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce.

Today one automobile is registered for each 4.6 persons in this country, Mr. Childs sets forth. Although many motor cars are designed to carry only two passengers, he says, the number which will seat more than five offsets the limitations of the smaller vehicles.

Record Wheat Crop Seen in South Africa

Cape Town, S. Af.—Conditions all point to a bumper wheat crop this year for the South African farming community.

Many farmers who formerly devoted all their attention to sheep have, since the fall in the wool prices, sown their lands with wheat. Nothing is more likely to relieve the economic pressure in the rural areas than the bounteous harvest now being gathered in.

Larger Wheat Exports Forecast

Signs That Native Supplies in Europe Need Supplementing

Fort William. — Likelihood of stronger foreign demand for Canadian wheat before long is intimated in the report of the statistical branch of the Board of Grain Commissioners on the movement of Western Canadian grain for December, 1931. Russia has almost disappeared as an important factor for the present. The large wheat crop of Alberta is tending to throw a great deal of the present export movement to Vancouver. The report states:

It is reported that an arrangement has been negotiated between Germany and Russia by which Germany will accept shipments of wheat and rye from Russia in exchange for machinery. This will have the effect of providing a market for much of the balance of Russia's surplus and any future shipments will not have much influence upon the world's markets.

Whilst there is no indication at present of an immediate improvement in the export demand for Canadian wheat, particularly whilst shipments from the southern hemisphere are at their heaviest, it is encouraging to note that the export shipments to date indicate Canada is enjoying a good share of the world's demand for wheat. There are signs, too, that native supplies of wheat in Europe will have to be supplemented by larger imports before very long, and that Italy and France may be taking steps to allow of such in the near future.

Trappers Bag Large Number of Wolves

North Bay, Ont.—Applications for bounty on 13 wolves were received recently by G. M. Parks, district superintendent of the Department of Game and Fisheries here. An average of three applications a day are made to his office, Mr. Parks stated. Ten applications were made one day in December. The open winter experienced this year, Mr. Parks believed, was responsible for the trappers' success in this respect.

There is one redeeming feature about a chronic borrower of money: he never posters a man when he is town.

Burma Promised A Constitution

Premier MacDonald Gives a Pledge of Responsible Government

London.—Burma has received a pledge of responsible government by evolutionary process from Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald at the concluding session of the Burmese Round Table Conference.

If Burma decides at a national election to separate from India, Britain will grant her a constitution providing for a Legislature and for a Governor to be appointed by the British Crown who will exercise wide "reserved" powers in dealing with foreign affairs, defence and finance.

Potentialities of Autonomy

Mr. MacDonald's pledge was called neither home-rule nor Dominion status, but it carried with it what the Prime Minister termed the "potentialities" of self-government.

"The whole genius of British administration," he explained, "is to lead up peoples who come under its rule to a position where they can assume responsibility for their own government."

U Ba Pe, spokesman for the Burmese delegates, in responding to Mr. MacDonald said that any constitution for Burma must reflect the feeling of the Burmese rather than the feeling of the British.

"The history of Burma will show that Burma, until she came into contract with the British, held a prominent position in the east," he said, "and it is really a thing which I cannot understand that it should be said that a country which was independent just 46 years ago is not fit to enjoy larger freedom under British rule."

Takes 40,000 Photos

Thirty years of a colorful and much travelled career as official photographer of the Canadian Pacific Railway were completed January 1st with the retirement of J. C. S. Bennett on pension. In those thirty years and in the eighteen years that preceded them when he worked with the well-known photographic firm of Wm. Notman & Son, of Montreal, Mr. Bennett has made more than 40,000 photographs, covering every aspect of Canadian scenery and development right across the Dominion.

J. C. S. Bennett

"Jim," as he is known by many hundreds of his acquaintance had his first big assignment in 1891 when he handled the photography of the lying in state and funeral of Sir John A. Macdonald at Ottawa and Kingston. But his big work and that by which he will be mainly remembered is his photographic record of the manifold aspects of the Canadian Rockies gathered over a period of 25 years up to 1930 during which he spent three months of each year in that territory from "The Gap" in Alberta as far west as Kamloops, a distance of 400 miles.

He has accompanied as official photographer Prince Arthur of Connaught, the Duke of Connaught and the Prince of Wales in their travels across Canada.

The moth is not a Society favorite, even if he does frequently appear in a dress-suit.

— With Castoria's regulation

When your child tosses and cries out in his sleep, it means he is not comfortable. Very often the trouble is that poisonous waste matter is not being carried off as it should be. Bowels need help—mild, gentle help—but effective. Just the kind Castoria gives. Castoria is a pure vegetable preparation made specially for children's ailments. It contains no harsh, harmful drugs no narcotics. Don't let your child's rest—and your own—be interrupted. A prompt dose of Castoria will urge stubborn little bowels to act. What New York Is Wearing

BY ANNEBELLE WORTHINGTON

Illustrated Dressmaking Lesson Furnished With Every Pattern

3452

The unusual neckline and slimming flattering lace revers, makes this black canton-faille crepe silk dress distinctive. It can be worn for almost any occasion.

There are a series of points giving slenderness to the skirt.

It's a youthful style you'll always feel so happy to wear.

There are many other materials that will be charming for this dress, as crepe marocain that is well known to be a becoming silk for the heavier figure for it falls so well and is not too shiny. Transparent velvet and sheer woolens are also good, as they haven't too much sheen which exaggerates bulk.

Style No. 3452 is designed for sizes 36, 38, 40, 42, 44 and 46 inches bust.

Size 36 requires 4 yards 39-inch with ½ yard 39-inch contrasting.

HOW TO ORDER PATTERNS

Write your name and address plainly, giving number and size of such patterns as you want. Enclose 20c in stamps or coin (coin preferred; wrap it carefully) for each number, and address your order to Wilson Pattern Service, 73 West Adelaide St., Toronto.

Juggling Figures

Berlin—Dr. Finkelstein, a young Pole, who arrived in Germany recently, entertained and puzzled the Berliners no little at the Wintergarden vaudeville by adding up a column of figures more rapidly than anyone could read them, by learning billions and trillions by heart, in the flash of a second, and by doing many other things bewildering to the most learned mathematicians. Dr. Kinkelstein, writes a correspondent of the Christian Science Monitor, for instance, draws a chessboard of twenty-five squares and asks that someone may fill in the figures. He looks at it for less than a minute—his record time is fifteen seconds—and then repeats the twenty-five figures forward, backward and in spiral fashion. It is quite simple, he assures one.

The Pat of Butter

Once, at the Agricultural Show,
We tasted—all so yellow—
Those butter-pats, cool and mellow!
Each taste I still remember, though
It was so long ago.

This spoke of the grass of Netherhay,
And this of Kingcomb Hill,
And this of Coker Rill;
Which was the prime I could not say
Of all those tried that day. . .

How to play Bridge
AUCTION and CONTRACT
by Wynne Ferguson
Author of "PRACTICAL AUCTION BRIDGE"

ARTICLE No. 6

There is no Auction player in the world who always wins or who always loses, and yet some players, deservedly or otherwise, get that reputation. It is very useful to have a reputation for good luck. It not only gives your partner confidence in you, but also worries your opponents. Card players as a class are superstitious, even though they will not admit it and, when a player has the reputation of "always winning," he generally does.

On the other hand consider the player who "always" loses. He takes his place at the table with a sad and mournful expression as if Fate has already marked him out as the loser of the rubber. He generally starts out with a remark like this: "Well, partner, I haven't been able to hold a face card in weeks so watch your step." He takes a queer sort of pride in his bad luck and seems to enjoy talking about it. Needless to say, such a player has a bad influence on his partner and an encouraging one on his opponents.

The following hands are interesting and instructive

Hand No. 1

: Y :
: A B :
: Z :

Hearts—7
Clubs—9, 5
Diamonds—A, K, Q, 8
Spades—A, Q, 10, 6, 5, 2

Auction Bidding:

No score, rubber game. Z dealt and bid one spade, A two hearts, Y pass, B pass Z two spades, A pass, Y pass and B three hearts. What should Z now do with the foregoing hand? Z should bid three spades. The only other possible bid is four diamonds and that is a bad bid because partner may leave it in. At a void score, there is a much better chance for game in spades than in diamonds, so the three-spade bid is preferable.

Contract Bidding:

At Contract the bidding would be the same.

Hand No. 2

Hearts—Q, 8, 4, 2
Clubs—10, 7, 3
Diamonds—J, 7, 2
Spades—J, 8, 4

: Y :
: A B :
: Z :

No score, rubber game. Either at Auction or at Contract, if Y's partner had first bid spades and rebid them and on the third round of bidding, bid four diamonds, what should Y now bid if A passed four diamonds? Y should bid four spades. His partner has showed a good spade hand by his rebid and only a fair diamond hand. Y's hand has practically the same strength in both suits and therefore the same chance to make four in either suit. As four spades score game, it is the preferable bid Hand No. 2 was the one held by Z's partner in Hand No. 1. In the actual play, Z bid four diamonds and Y passed. The hand was submitted to the writer for criticism and from the analysis it is evident that both players made bad bids. Y's error, however, was inexcusable. When your partner has bid two suits and you have better support for one always take him back to that suit. If you have equal support as in Hand No. 2, take him back to the major suit. Play for game all the time.

Hand No. 3

: Y :
: A B :
: Z :

Hearts—A, K, Q, 10, 7, 6, 5, 2
Clubs—K, 7
Diamonds—K, 3
Spades—7

No score, first game At either Auction or Contract, what should Z, as dealer, bid with the foregoing hand? The only proper bid in this case is four hearts to shut out, if possible, a four-spade bid by opponents. It is a perfect example of a shut-out bid.

Owl Laffs

Customer—"Three of those apples you sent me were rotten. I am bringing them back."

Storekeeper — "That's all right, madam. You needn't bring them back. Your word is just as good as the apples."

Resinol—"What makes you think you are qualified for a post in the diplomatic corps?"

Cuticura—"Well I've been married for two years and my wife still thinks I have a sick friend I sit up with."

Buyer—"Let's play the game called "Building an Loan."

Seller—"How do you play it?"

Buyer—"Get out of this building and leave me alone."

So That's It!

He—"I never saw anything like this tide! Here I've been pulling steadily for ten minutes, and we don't seem to have moved a foot!"

She—"Oh Jack, I've just thought of something. The anchor fell overboard a little while ago, and I forgot to tell you. Do you supose it could have caught on something?"

The hole in the apple means you have or have not had proteins with your fruit juices. It has been demonstrated too, that when a woman can have her own way she doesn't want it. Most arguments would stop before they begin if each would base his opinion on fact and not prejudice. Don't spread unauthenticated rumors, if only to be kind to your Adam's apple. Perhaps "two can live as cheaply as one" means that father and mother can live as cheaply as daughter. By the time we've solved to-day's problems we'll have a new set. Getting the critter prosperity back into the corral is every man's job.

A proud young father wired the news of his happiness to his brother in these words:

"A handsome boy has come to my house and claims to be your nephew. We are doing our best to give him a proper welcome."

The brother however, failed to see the point and wired back:

"I have no nephew. The young man is an imposter."

Hubby—"Oh, pshaw! I left my watch upstairs."

Wifey—"Never mind, it'll run down."

Hubby—"No, it won't—there's a winding staircase."

Beauty Doctor—"Of course, madam, I remember lifting your face. And what can I do for you now?"

Client—"I wonder if you could do something to lift my husband's. It fell terribly when he received your bill."

Landlady—"Isn't this a real good chicken?"

Boarder—"It may have been morally, but physically it's a wreck."

Crowl—"Are you afraid of dogs?"

Howl—"Yes, every time I eat them I get indigestion."

Then It Happened

He found she'd used his razor
To open cans o' stuff,
And so for a shoe brush
He used her powder puff.

Father—"Are there half fares for children?"

Conductor—"Yes, under fourteen."

Fother—"That's all right. I've only five."

Mr. Keck—"Do you believe that there is a higher power?"

Mr. Peck—"My good man, I married her."

Floorwalker—"I notice that your last customer did not buy anything, but he seemed very pleased. What did he want to see?"

Salesgirl—"Me at eight o'clock."

Teacher—"If you subtract 16,000 from 700,000, what's the difference?"

Johnny—"Yeah, I think it's a lot of foolishness too."

Simpkins—"Does your mother let you read this modern stuff?"

Daughter—"Not if she gets her hands on it first."

INFLUENCE

It is one of the greatest of mysteries—the influence one human being has over another. Oftener than not because of extreme dissimilarity.

"Life a Misery" From Headaches

Thanks to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills (Tonic) and a mother's advice she is well again.

"Headaches nearly drove me frantic," writes Mrs. J. F. Anchincloss, Ingersoll. "The pain would be so severe that my eyes would swell shut. Life was a misery.

"Finally my mother saw where Dr. Williams' Pink Pills had helped someone. She bought a box and made me take them. I was so sick of doping. I had no faith, but thanks to mother's persistence and the pills I am here and well today."

PROVIDE IRON

If your blood condition is below par you probably need the iron which Dr. Williams' Pills provide. You are only as well as your blood is rich. Poor blood causes headaches.

Monday on the Common

(From The Countryman.)

Perilous trousers hung from pegs,
Wave agile unrestricted legs,
Whose flowing curves, replete and free,
Betoken a humanity
That rolls from bliss to super bliss
In some far rounder world than this.
An apron not to be effaced
Flaunts stout if unsubstantial waist.

The sheet forswear the sober bed
Whereon we nightly sleep like lead,
And in a strenuous delight
Would have us bounce and bounce at night;
While pillowcases almost burst,
To beg us gambol with them first.

Abandoned dusters wildly ask
When next at our appointed task,
We should not gravely dust the room,
But dance and sing and wave the broom,
And whirl about our decent heads
Their flapping blues and flying reds.

In swift accord the ballet flows,
For liberated matter knows
The spirit of a singing bird.
The dishcloth's unaccustomed wings
Beat to the tune the bedspread sings
In notes of red and green and white.

The clothesprops quiver with delight
That this is Monday morning, this
Delirious, distended bliss.

Now let the mangle to its worst;
Let bodies be austere and curst;
Let linen presses hold their sway—
Here's to another washing day!

—Joyce M. Westrup.

IS GOUT HEREDITARY?

"If Father Suffered, Must I?"

Kruschen as a Precaution

Many a man has misgivings about gout merely because his father suffered from it. Such men can take heart from the experiences of others. One son of a gouty father admits that he is not a total abstainer, yet he has already reached the age of 51 without a sign of gout. He thanks a regular daily dose of Kruschen for his freedom: "My father suffered years with gout, and to keep myself free from the terrible complaint I now always take Kruschen Salts every morning and never miss. In fact, it is a part of my breakfast. I am now 51 years of age, and I have never had a touch of rheumatics, or signs of same. I am not a teetotaler, taking a glass of ale and a drop of whisky."—C. E.

Here is a rather different case. This man was subject to constipation, and he saw signs that gout was in his system. But he used Kruschen with equal success:—

"For several years I suffered from constipation, with constantly recurring attacks of biliousness attended by diarrhoea and sickness. I was also liable to attacks of gouty rheumatism, this being a peculiar affliction from which practically every one of my forebears on the paternal side suffered. Two years ago I commenced taking Kruschen—not in great quantities, but the dose prescribed, each day. I have now had a perfect freedom from constipation for more than twelve months. Although there is a predilection towards gout, I have been able to ward it off so far. Judging by my finger-joints, I should have been having very severe attacks, but there is no sign of any so far as my personal health is concerned."—W. A. H.

Gout is typical of dozens of complaints which science has proved are caused by impure blood. And impurities in the blood-stream are caused by insufficient elimination of waste matter; in a word—constipation, whether slight or serious. Kruschen Salts, by preventing constipation, is the one sure remedy for its consequences.

Kruschen Salts is obtainable at all Drug Stores at 45c. and 75c. per bottle.

WHAT a relief and satisfaction it is for mothers to know that there is always Castoria to depend on when babies get fretful and uncomfortable! Whether it's teething, colic or other little upset, Castoria always brings quick comfort; and, with relief from pain, restful sleep.

And when older, fast-growing children get out of sorts and out of condition, you have only to give a more liberal dose of this pure vegetable preparation to right the disturbed condition quickly.

Because Castoria is made expressly for children, it has just the needed mildness of action. Yet you can always depend on it to be effective. It is almost certain to clear up any minor ailment and cannot possibly do the youngest child the slightest harm. So it's the first thing to think of when a child has a coated tongue, is fretful and out of sorts. Be sure to get the genuine; with Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the package.

SHORT COURSE AT CALEDON

Increasing interest is being taken in the Short Course at Caledon in Agriculture and Home Economics. The second week of the Course brought out a large number of the older farmers. The following subjects were discussed during the past week: Weed Control, Poultry, Sheep, Veterinary Science, Plant Diseases, Fruits and Vegetables and Field Crops. Of particular interest were the sheep lectures and demonstrations by Wm. Howard and J. Ireton of the Dominion Live Stock Branch, and the lectures in Veterinary Science by Dr. Page of St. Mary's.

250 at Literary Meeting

Approximately 250 people attended the literary meeting on Friday afternoon, when the debate "Resolved that the country offers more advantages to the young person than the City" was debated upon by the Peel and Dufferin Short Courses. The affirmative was upheld by Lillian Clowes and Ernest Wood, of Orangeville, and the negative by Marian Brown and Bert Kerr of Caledon. Mr. Robert. Segsworth of Brampton, Miss Pearle Church, Brampton, and Miss Ellen Wagg, of Orangeville, acted as judges. The decision was given in favour of the affirmative.

Address by R. Segsworth

Robt. Segsworth gave a very interesting address on Rural Education. Moving pictures showing student life at the O.A.C. were shown. Quite a number of those who attended the short course at Ebenezer last year were present.

Afternoon tea was served at the conculsion of the programme by the girls of the Home Economics Course.

NEW YEAR, new year, now you are here,
We look at you without a fear.
We look at you with eager eyes,
But give you neither tears nor sighs.
Though strange is the new face you wear,
'Tis kindness we see written there.
But what is kindness? Buried deep
The answer, O new year, you keep.

You're here with secrets all untold.
Oh, what for us your heart must hold!
We dare not dream, we dare not guess,
How much of gladness or distress,
How much of joy, how much of pain,
How much of loss, how much of gain,
How much of bloom, how much of blast,
What skies of blue, what skies o'ercast,
How much will vanish, how much last,
How much of work, how much of rest,
But, O new year, you know what's best!

—Rosalie Vanderwater

ON NEW YEAR'S DAY.

Thoughts on Time and What Its Passing Means.

All years are not alike in value to the race or the individual; neither are all days. There are black days and white days, weeks that are burdensome and weeks that are like a merry chime of bells, months that rumble with the thunder of defeat and months that resound with the shouts of victory.

There is no monotony in time. It varies as does the landscape. In one period it is as level as a western prairie, with no special experiences to mark its passage; in another changes come and events occur which make the weeks resemble the Himalayas, mountain heights gathered together like a great company of giants whose shining helmets are visible, though you have traveled far away and stand on your horizon line; in still another some day or week with its wondrous happenings rises from the plain of memory like a veritable Mont Blanc, and, though seventy years be counted in your calendar, you still see its summit and say, "That was the hour when my new life began." It may mark a great catastrophe or an unspeakable happiness, but there it stands in gloom or grandeur, and when you are about to close your eyes in the last sleep they will rest on that event which made you other than you were.

New Year Philosophy.

We never complain about misfortune, but we'd like to see the chap that stole our shoes when we got so happy we danced 'em off our feet.

Nothin' at all ag'in the old year. When we get into a corner with our conscience the verdict is that he done the best he could with the material he had to work on.

If we meet the devil in the road this New Year we'll change our plan entirely. Instead of fightin' him with fire we'll turn the hose on the warm old sinner.

On the last day of the year we moved ten miles from Tribulation Town and pitched our tents so close to Hallelujah hill that we're keepin' the angels busy hiding their crowns and harp strings.

Papal Bull Against New Year's Day.

A papal edict against the celebration of New Year's day is said to have been issued by an ancient pope in the following words: "If any one should be so audacious as to celebrate the kalends of January after the manner of the pagans or to do anything strange on account of the New Year, or to lay out in their houses tables with lights, or to have banquets, or to go singing about the streets and squares, or to join in dancing parties, then all such persons should stand excommunicated and accursed." Probably, however, this strong denunciation was leaned more directly against the Italians, who imitated the fashions of the ancient Romans by introducing dancing, singing, sports and comedies etc. [illegible]

St. Joseph's Had Successful Dance

St. Joseph's Church held a very successful Euchre and Dance in the Oddfellows Hall on Friday evening Jan. 15. A large crowd was in attendance and evidently a good time was enjoyed by all as the dancers stayed until about 2 a.m. when they went home very footsore but happy.

The prizes were won by the following—

Door Prize, Mr. Frank Donnelly

Prizes for Euchre, Ladies. first—Mrs. Thos. Farrell: second, Mrs Ramsay ; third, Mrs. Wm. Lovatt

Gents: first, Mr. Hugh OConnor; second, Mr. Wm. Simmons; third Leo Sanford.

The lucky Spot Dance was won by Miss Dadd and Mr. F. O'Connor

Mr. Thos. Farrell was in charge of the door. Mr. Gordon Rundle and Mr Jim McPhee of Long Branch had charge of the Euchre. The women of the parish served a lovely lunch to a large crowd. Mr.Gordon Rundle and Mr. Sylvester Sanford very graciously gave their time in sorting and announcing the prizes with the kind assistance of Mr. Wm Couse who handed the prizes to the winners as they came forth

The music was supplied by the StreetsvilleOrchestra and it certainly made both young and old feel like dancing.

Last, but not least by any means, was the much appreciated assistance which Ray Nerdon gave in calling off for several square dances. He certainly does it well. The committee also wish to thank Mr. Fred Houses of Dixie who called off also.
